In common with most men raised even so little above the condition of rustic boors and pot-house brawlers we were under the impression that the time had for ever passed away for appeals to physical force. It seems, however, that we deceived ourselves, and that stray individuals may still here and there be found, even in respectable circles of society, quite incapable of appreciating the improved tone of social manners. To a member of the Civil Service of India as at present constituted—in short, to a "competition-wallah"—is due the unenviable distinction of having disabused our mind of the fond delusion it so complacently cherished. No further back than last Saturday morning it was our painful lot to witness a most unseemly fracas on the platform of the Sealdah station. As Mr. Walter Brett, editor of the Englishman, alighted from the Barrackpore train, a young man, disguised as a gentleman, and who afterwards proved to be Mr. Clay, of the Bengal Civil Service, went up and accosted him as if he wished to have some private conversation with him. And what do our readers suppose was the nature of his communication? The Englishman, it is needless to remark, has on more than one occasion ridiculed the pretentious bearing and general want of manliness exhibited by many young civilians of the new school, and some time ago that paper contained an article on the subject more than usually pungent. Constituting himself the champion of his order, this same Mr. Clay proceeded to the office of the journal, and demanded from the editor "the satisfaction due to a gentleman." Mr. Brett very naturally treated the ridiculous proposition with contempt, and the young man took very little by his motion. Unfortunately, Sein Luca got hold of this silly escapade, and alluded to it in his peculiar style, which we certainly never professed to admire.

For some reason or other best known to himself, Mr. Clay did not at once seek redress for this personal affront, for which, indeed, Mr. Brett himself was not at all answerable, but bottled up his wrath until he could indulge in an explosion after the manner of a Thames bargee. On Saturday morning he found his opportunity. Failing to induce Mr. Brett to make himself the laughing-stock of Calcutta by fighting a duel with such a fledgling, he addressed him in coarse language, and then, without the slightest warning, struck him a sharp blow on the mouth. At the moment Mr. Brett was expecting nothing so little as a brutal assault from a person dressed like a gentleman, and his hands were also occupied. However, he instantly dropped the things he was carrying, and advanced upon his assailant, who as rapidly fell back. Luckily for the latter, several persons ran up and saved him from the punishment he so richly deserved. But is this the sort of thing that passes for chivalrous and gentlemanly conduct among the new school of civilians? If so, it is not surprising that the natives should ask if their present magistrates are chosen from a different jat to that which supplied the old company's Civil Service. Mr. Clay, we believe, has distinguished himself as a student, which only shows how little mere book-learning has to do with the making of a thorough gentleman. We wonder if he is equally well-read in the enactments of the Penal Code, or if he thinks the best training for a magistrate is to begin by violating the laws of the land and the usages of society. We trust, however, that such a lesson now will be taught to this foolish and ill-mannered youth as will deter others from conducting themselves like rude barbarians or tavern roysterers. And we would also hope that the opinions and feelings of his friends and associates are in this matter entirely opposed to Mr. Clay's violent proceedings and behaviour, and that they will withhold all sympathy from their unworthy and self-constituted champion.—Bengal Hurkaru, Sept. 14.

ADDRESS TO SIR MORDAUNT WELLS.

A deputation of the Calcutta Trades' Association waited on Sir Mordaunt Wells on Wednesday, to give expression to their regret at his leaving Calcutta, and their high appreciation of the services he had rendered during his official career in India.

The Master, J. B. Knight, Esq., in addressing Sir Mordaunt, said that the members of the Trades' Association had looked forward with a great deal of pleasure to the honour of receiving him at their anniversary dinner, held last month, and greatly regretted the cause which had deprived them of that pleasure. On that occasion they wished to have given public expression to their feelings of high respect and admiration for his character and abilities. That opportunity having passed away, it was thought that the simplest and most acceptable form in which their sentiments could be couched would be a minute, to be recorded on the proceedings of the Association, which, with Sir Mordaunt's permission, he would now read:—

"The Committee of the Trades' Association desire to join in the universal expression of regret at the close of Sir Mordaunt Wells' official career in India.

"Independence is, in the eyes of Englishmen, the crowning virtue of a public life—and it is his fearless independence, his energetic and consistent perseverance in the path which he marked out for himself which will place the name of Sir Mordaunt Wells in the first rank of India's benefactors.

"Whether on the bench he strove manfully to repress crimes, which by their nature interfered with the due administration of justice, or, as Commissioner of the Insolvent Court, he used all his influence to check extravagance, to relieve the unfortunate but honest man, to punish the fraudulent debtor, and to establish a more wholesome relation between debtor and creditor; or whether in the Council Chamber he fearlessly upheld the rights of his countrymen, Sir Mordaunt Wells is equally entitled to our admiration and respect.

"India can ill afford to lose such men.

"But we cherish the assurance, that, with recruited health and strength, Sir Mordaunt Wells will take that prominent position among the friends of India in England which his great knowledge and experience will open out to him, and may thus be able to render services to this land, perhaps not less important than he would have done had he remained amongst us."

Sir Mordaunt Wells replied as follows:—"Gentlemen,—I return you my best thanks for this expression of your approbation. It was a matter of very great regret that I was unable to do myself the pleasure of being present at your Anniversary Dinner, but I am sure you will understand the reasons which prevented me from attending. In addition to my failing health I was engaged, as you are all aware, in preparing a most important judgment, involving the interests and characters of many individuals; and on the eve of judgment it was necessary that I mind should be perfectly calm and collected. My judicial career is closed, and I have now the satisfaction of knowing that my efforts to check commercial fraud and reckless trading have met with the approval of all classes, and when thus concluding my duties on the bench, after many of my judicial acts have been the subject of unjust criticism, the spontaneous expressions of approval that have been given are very gratifying. My desire has ever been to elevate the moral character of the people by a firm and impartial administration of the law. Little, indeed, have I been able to accomplish, but I do believe that some of my judicial acts will fructify in the hands of others. My heart was in my work, and I quit my post with unfeigned regret and sorrow; but I derive a deep consolation in the sympathy and esteem publicly expressed towards me by all classes of the community, without distinction of race or religion. I value this recognition of my services from your body, representing as it does that powerful middle class whose influence is so fully acknowledged in England, and I do rejoice most sincerely that this Government has also acknowledged it by the appointment of one of your body to the Council of Bengal. I accept this address as a mark of respect and esteem, and thank you most sincerely." The deputation then withdrew.

THE MEDICAL SERVICE.

The last mail has brought out the verification of a prophecy which we made in these columns but a short time ago, although every means have been taken to conceal its fulfilment. The contumely and injustice which the military medical service has received, and the consequent distrust and aversion with which that service is regarded in the surgical schools and amongst the profession at large, have brought matters, as regards a supply of surgeons for the British and Indian armies, to such a pass as may well alarm the Duke of Cambridge and Sir Charles Wood, and even the British nation. At the last military medical examination in England, seventy-five vacancies for assistant surgeons, for the British and Indian armies were declared, and to compete for these seventy-five vacancies the large number of eight candidates came forward. This startling fact requires little comment; it speaks for itself. The supply of medical officers for the British army is virtually stopped; with the stock in hand rapidly decreasing, and the possibility of a great European war staring England in the face. The staff of medical officers now wearing the British uniform is stretched to its utmost powers of performance; in India it has been long over-stretched and has snapped, the gap being filled up by uncovenanted men—apothecaries and natives. Even in a time of profound peace the difficulty that has been brought about is very serious indeed; in the event of a continental war it will become alarming, and will rouse the British nation to demand both explanation and reform. Should such a war break out, the British military administrators have three expedients open to them—one an honest and just course, and two "dodges." The first is to grant to the Army Medical Service, by Act of Parliament, under the Royal sign manual, and inalienably, all the rights and privileges to which it is justly entitled, and the privation of which has brought the Army Medical Service to its present depression and unpopularity; this done, well-educated medical gentlemen will again enter her Majesty's service in sufficient numbers, and all will be right for the future. The "dodges" are, first to make large promises and temporary concessions to the military medical officers, and to break and revoke them when the difficulty is over, as was done during and after the Crimean war, and, second, to do as was also done in the Crimean war—hire civil practitioners at large salaries, and send them out to the field and depot hospitals. But the first of these manoeuvres would, in all probability, be a miserable failure, after the lesson of the past; and though the second might have a partial success, it would be enormously expensive. When the costs of the war came to be discussed in the British Parliament and an item of hundreds of thousands of pounds should appear for civil medical practitioners, the question would soon be asked—How is it that the British Crown and nation cannot get medical officers to follow their soldiers to the field and serve under the banners of their country? The truth must then come out, and the nation would make known its will that it is better by a small expenditure to do justice to the army medical officers, and keep the service popular, than, by the ill-treatment of its members, to so lower it in the estimation of the profession that no one will enter it, whilst vast sums of the public money are being paid for hired medical aid.—Englishman, Sept. 8.

PRIZE MONEY.

The papers which have come out by the mail just arrived bring us the petition to the Lower House of Parliament of Major-general Sir G. Whitlock and others, requesting the Commons to debar Sir Hugh Rose and his force operating in Central India from sharing in the booty captured by Sir G. Whitlock's column at Banda and Kirwee during the war of the mutiny, commonly known as the Kirwee prize money. It is not, we believe, generally known that the enormously valuable booty in question was captured by Sir G. Whitlock's force without a single shot being fired for its actual acquisition; that, in fact, it was made over to Sir George in as peaceful a manner as is the transfer of so much merchandise from one house of business to another, but such is, however, the actual fact. This is, however, beside the matter, as regards the question of Sir Hugh Rose's claim, which we are now informed, for the first time, has never been formally made. If Sir Hugh Rose has actually never claimed for himself and those who served under him a share of the prize in question, we do not see what is the occasion for so much clamour; as, with the opinion of the Crown lawyers against him, and without any claim on his part, the case seems clear, and the booty ought to be divided amongst the actual captors. But, on the other hand, the petitioners are unwary in referring to general practice, and the Ava prize money. The general practice has been reversed; and as the other prize money which was realised in the wars of the mutiny was by no means divided amongst the "actual captors," it turns out that the "general practice," whatever it may have been formerly, is now against Sir G. Whitlock's monopoly, and in favour of Sir Hugh Rose's claim. But the real fact, as regards these prize money disputes, is, that the "general practice" having been arbitrarily broken through, and the share on prize money being no longer confined to the "actual captors," all rule on these matters is lost, and it is now impossible to tell who will or who will not partake of booty captured during military operations on the field. When none but the actual captors shared, all was clear, and fair, and easily arranged; but the moment that rule or law was infringed, a door was opened for the admission into prize questions of all kinds of difficulties, questionable claims, and injustice. There are very plausible reasons indeed why Sir Hugh Rose's force should participate in the Kirwee prize money; there are also very well-grounded reasons why it should not share in it; so now the authorities may settle the matter as they like, there being no unbroken law to decide emphatically in favour of either Sir George or Sir Hugh. Precedent, as before the mutiny, would have decided promptly against Sir Hugh; general practice as regards prize captured during the mutiny—the case of the Delhi prize-money, for instance, would give it as decidedly in his favour. Practice is better than precedent; and we believe that the authorities in England, with whom lies the settlement of the Kirwee prize question, are of the same way of thinking.—Englishman, Sept. 8.

JUSTICE BETWEEN BLACK AND WHITE.

An indignant engine fitter, who fancies himself one of the conquerors of Hindostan, has requested us to call upon the Legislature to make laws in favour of the "indomitable Anglo-Saxon," and endow that remarkable individual with peculiar privileges. So far as we can make anything of his clamorous appeal, our correspondent claims permission to thrash with impunity any one of "the conquered race" whom he may suspect of laughing at him. In the present state of the law, a "nigger" may laugh at a white man in the public streets, without having his head broken or any other personal indignity offered to him. An affront of this kind was actually offered to Mr. Engine Fitter, Imperator. It happened in this wise. Returning home one day, about a month ago, he observed a native smiling, as he fancied, at him. This was too much for the blood of the Indomitables. The next moment the scoffer was in the grasp of the Anglo-Saxon, who intimated some intention of pitching him head foremost into a ditch that was temptingly close at hand. The other, however, disclaimed all idea of affronting the huzzoor, and explained that he was laughing at some boys at play. Partially mollified by the poor wretch's submission, Imperator let him go without fulfilling his threat. About a week afterwards, however, he was accosted by a Chupprassie, who presented him with a piece of paper covered with Bengalee characters. Unable to decipher the meaning of the hieroglyphical document, he desired the Chupprassie to bring him an English translation, and then he would know how to act. His request was not complied with, but a month afterwards he discovered that the paper in the unknown tongue was a summons to appear before a native moonsiff, to answer to an action for the recovery of Rs. 150 as damages for loss of character. The individual who claimed that his honour had been damaged to the extent of £15 was the "nigger" whom he had threatened to throw into the ditch. The moonsiff, however, took a less exalted view of the outrage done to his compatriot's dignity, and awarded him only Rs. 50, with costs amounting to nearly half as much more. But all this was done behind the back and without the knowledge of the unfortunate engine-fitter, who received the first intimation of what was going on by the enforcement of an execution. For a whole night he was confined in the lock-up, and on his asking permission to go for the money, in the custody of the police, he was told by the moonsiff that none of the chupprassies would undertake to accompany him. In a certain sense, this was, of course, a compliment to his prowess, but one which he does not appear to have duly appreciated. It does seem rather hard, however, that an Englishman should be served with a summons which he cannot read or understand. There can be no valid reason why a translation should not be appended, if the original document must necessarily be written in the vernacular. It cannot be needful, and it certainly is not just, that an Englishman, "or any other man," should be condemned unheard, on an ex parte statement, and then locked up all night, because the police are cowards. We suspect, however, that it was not so much cowardice as vindictiveness that led to this harsh treatment of the bold Briton. Unfortunately, the latter has to thank himself, in the first instance, for any inconvenience he may have suffered. Had it not been for his overbearing arrogance and unmanly violence, no summons would ever have been taken out against him. He took advantage of his superior physical strength to ill-use and frighten a native who was doing him no harm, and must not complain if his victim has turned the tables upon him by employing superior craft.—Bengal Hurkaru, Sept. 8.

TEA PLANTATIONS, N.W.P.

Dr. Jameson's report on the Government Tea Factories and Plantations for the year 1862-63 is decidedly encouraging to speculators "prospect-ing" in the North-West Provinces. The total output, including the produce of the Kangra Valley plantation, is stated at rather over 52,000 lbs., valued at Rs. 1.8 per lb. In addition to this fair supply of tea, the yield of seed exceeds 4,000 maunds, or 148 tons, valued at Rs. 20 per maund. No fewer than 700,000 young plants were, besides, gratuitously distributed to private planters, which if sold at the ordinary rate of three rupees per hundred, would have realised 21,000 rupees. A sample consisting of 300 forty-pound chests, was about to be transmitted to London, in order that factors and dealers might form a tolerably correct notion of the tea-growing capabilities of the Upper Provinces. This is the more necessary as Dr. Jameson is of opinion that the time has arrived for the withdrawal of the Government from any further experiments. He therefore proposes that the end of the present season the tea plantations in Kumaon and the Dehra Dhoon be sold in fee-simple to the highest bidder, and that in March 1864 the highest tender above the upset price be accepted. He further recommends that the plantations be sold in three lots. The gardens and factories at Hamul Bagh, at or near Almorah, and at Ayar Toli in Kuttipoor to be offered for £20,000; those at Bheem Tal in Kumaon for £2,000; and those at Kowlaghir in the Dhoon at £20,000. It appears that there are already 37 plantations in the Dehra Doon, East Gurhwal, and Kumaon, embracing in all 38,556 acres, of which only 4,590 have yet been brought under cultivation, yielding 33,060 lbs. of tea and employing 3,080 labourers. Dr. Jameson's eye, however, in poetic phrenzy rolling, catches a glimpse of the golden age when 9,300,000 acres of land shall be clothed with tea shrubs, producing, at the rate of 100 lbs. per acre, 930 million pounds of the fragrant leaf. But this bright vision does not blind his judgment as to the inexpediency of very small capitalists embarking their little all upon an adventure that demands both time and the outlay of money before it will yield any profits. "To form a plantation," writes the worthy doctor, "is an easy affair; but to work that plantation, prepare and pack teas fitted for the market, and to forward such teas to distant and available markets, is not to be done without money; and tea cultivation to be highly remunerative must be conducted on a large scale." To that last dogma, however, we are disposed to demur. A plantation of moderate size, if worked by sufficient capital, is quite as likely to be successful as one of large extent, and even more so, as a closer supervision can be given to it. Plantations of large extent can only be cultivated by a company, and it is admitted on all hands that individuals who look after their own interests have a far better chance of success than a company that must always be dependent on hired labour and superintendence. A garden of from three to five hundred acres is far preferable in our eyes to a grant of perhaps ten times that extent, which can only be worked by the obstructive machinery of a board of directors, secretary, and managing proprietors. The Upper Provinces, according to Dr. Jameson, possess one great advantage over Eastern Bengal, in that labour is abundant, and consequently cheap; but this is partly counter-balanced by the long and expensive transit to the sea coast.—Bengal Hurkaru, Sept. 7.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE AND THE HON. SUMBONATH PUNDIT ON THE RENT QUESTION.

On the 2nd September Sir Barnes Peacock, along with Justices Kemp and Sumbonath Pundit, delivered a very elaborate judgment upon the appeal of Mr. Hills of Kishnaghar from the decision of Mr. Elphinstone Jackson, now himself a Judge of the High Court. It will be remembered that in the first suit Mr. Jackson reversed a decision of the lower Court, and decreed a smaller sum than the native judge. On the first appeal the chief justice condemned the principle of Mr. Jackson's judgment, declared that under Act X. of 1859 the rent of an occupancy tenant should be increased, on cause shown, to a fair and equitable amount absolutely, and not proportionally to the increase of the value of produce, expressed the opinion that one rupee a beegah was a fair rent, and remanded the case for re-settlement on the absolutely fair and equitable principle. Mr. E. Jackson thereupon decreed less than on the first occasion, and disfigured his judgment by unjudicial remarks and an assumption of extra-judicial power, on which we felt called to comment with some severity. Again the case was appealed by Mr. Hills, but, utterly worn out by litigation such as is impossible out of Russia, he asked for such a decision, however unjust to himself, as would not necessitate a remand to courts where political economy seems to be as little respected as law or judicial dignity. For a long time the decision of the High Court on this second appeal has been delayed, owing, we believe, to a difference of opinion between the Chief Justice and Justice Sumbonath Pundit, who heard the appeal. Now, with the entire concurrence of the Pundit, and with the counsels of so experienced a civilian judge as Mr. Kemp, Sir Barnes Peacock has decreed that the rent of one rupee per beegah all round, instead of nine and ten annas allowed by Mr. E. Jackson, is not only absolutely fair and equitable to the tenant, but at least three annas below what the Court would have given Mr. Hills had he asked for it.

The High Court has done more. It has decided that the twelve years' occupancy tenant has no interest in the land under Act X. His right of occupancy depends on his willingness to pay the market rate, or as much as others would pay. Sir Barnes Peacock has rebuked the remarks of the lower Court, which travelled out of the proper sphere of justice. Mr. E. Jackson was told he had no right to say that the rent was fixed for ten years, and his ideas about the usurious interest paid by the ryot, and other details, are enlightened a little. The Chief Justice commented with especial severity on the gratuitous imputation of motives to Mr. Hills by the lower Court. We congratulate all parties on this able decision. No one can make use of it for party purposes. Mr. Kemp's action in the case of the Burrisaul Christians will be remembered, and the Pundit will not be suspected of forgetting the rights of the tenant; nor will any one question the legal ability of the Chief Justice, who was one of the Legislature that passed Act X., though he protested against it on technical grounds. This decision throws a new light on Act X., and is calculated to have most important practical results. We reserve further remarks till the judgment is before our readers.—Friend of India.

SEEING OURSELVES AS OTHERS SEE US.

The "Autobiography of a Sepoy," to which, on a former occasion, we alluded in favourable terms, is continued in the August number of "Chesson and Woodhall's Miscellany." The fine old soldier tells in a very pleasing manner how he saved a young Thakoorin of Bundelkund from an Arab who was about to put her to death. Her beauty, combined with her agreeable manners, won the heart of her preserver, and at last he married her by the ceremony called gurdub, but not before he had experienced the truth of the warning given to him by the instructor of his youth. "More men," said that wise Pundit, "are entangled in the wiles of a woman, than fish in the net of the most skillful fisherman. The arrows from their eyes wound more than the poisoned arrows of the Bheel." At the storm of Hissar he was blown up by the explosion of a mine, and, though severely injured, was one of four who alone escaped out of a company fifty-one strong. The mistaken lenity of the English Government to its conquered enemies sorely puzzles the simple-hearted soldier. "The justice of the Sirkar," he exclaims, "is wonderful, and its ways inexplicable; but what is the use of fighting if you do not destroy your enemy? It proves what I have before said, that the sahib log and gora log like fighting for the sake of fighting; and the latter, if they have but enough of their beloved spirit, are content—it is an amusement, a kind of khel (game) to them." But what seemed to him still more unaccountable was the practice of duelling. The major and a captain of his regiment went out one morning to fight a duel, and the major was shot through the head, whereupon he soliloquises in the following strain:—

"What curious customs the Feringhees have! Here, in this case, revenge was not taken at the time, when the anger was hot, nor was the fight with swords. No words were spoken, no abuse given, but the sahebs were as cool and collected as if on a parade. What I did not understand was, the officer attending on the major was a great friend of the captain's, and both the attendant officers spoke to one another, and were friends, as they lived in the same house. The English have rules about izzat (honour) very strict, and if they are insulted they must fight, or they are never again spoken to by their brother-officers. In those days sahebs often fought with one another, and after the fight they frequently became greater friends than ever. Of late years I have not heard of sahebs fighting with one another: if they do, it is done secretly, and as if now they were ashamed to be seen. But I believe it is, they fear the new rules about their fighting, which are very strict. The saheb who fights is now tried by a court-martial, and dismissed the service. No excuse is ever taken. I have heard that the Belaites Badshah was obliged to put a stop to this habit, as he lost so many good officers through it, and the family of the saheb who was killed had to be supported by the State. I cannot imagine how they can fight when their anger is cooled; but this, like all they do, is managed by their wonderful bundobust (arrangement). The gora log do not fight among themselves with swords or pistols: they use their fists, which are dangerous, for I have known several men to have been killed. However, after their fights they soon become friends again; but even among them they lose caste if they refuse to fight."

The remaining articles in this number are scarcely "up to the mark"—or, to speak candidly, they are exceedingly commonplace. But Apollo cannot be expected, and least of all in India, to keep his bow constantly on the stretch.—Bengal Hurkaru.

THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT.

The removal of the seat of Government from Calcutta to a more healthy and central spot is one of those stock subjects which may be taken up at any time to suit the convenience of any journalist who has nothing else to write about. As to the unhealthiness of Calcutta at the present season of the year, there cannot be two opinions. Should even the drainage scheme be ever completed, the climate of this city can never be otherwise than detestable during at least three months out of the twelve. The Friend of India, indeed, who is naturally enough opposed to the idea of the departure of the ruling Powers from the neighbourhood of Serampore, suggests that it only needs a railway to the foot of the Darjeeling hills, and the difficulty will at once be solved. During the insalubrious period of the year the Viceroy and his Council will pleasantly pass their time at that beautiful sanitarium, "nor think of care or woe," departing from the City of Death with the return of the ungainly scavenger birds who frequent the roof of Government House through the rains, and coming back towards the middle or end of October. But assuming that death and disease might thus be averted or deferred, it still remains to be considered how far the position of Calcutta renders it peculiarly eligible, or otherwise, as the seat of Government. It must not be forgotten that when Job Charnock selected this site for a factory, he was actuated solely by its obvious capabilities as a great commercial emporium. At this point the company he represented could always rely on intercepting the rich and varied produce of the Gangetic Delta, and beyond that he had no occasion to cast his eyes. The result has borne abundant testimony to the correctness of his judgment and forethought. As a trading mart, Calcutta, in spite of the threatened rivalry of Port Canning, will maintain a deservedly high position among the maritime cities of the earth, so long as the Hooghly remains navigable by ships of large burden. The transfer of the seat of Government to a more favoured spot cannot in any way prevent Calcutta from being the chief entrepôt on the eastern side of India for the produce of the lands watered by the Ganges and the Brahmapootra, and for the manufactures of Europe. Some few tradesmen, especially those who deal in objets de luxe, may, perhaps, suffer some inconvenience from the flight of their best customers, and there may, perchance, be some diminution even in the infinitesimal amount of social gaiety that at present is said to exist; but beyond this it little matters, from the mercantile point of view, whether the Viceregal Court reside in this or in any other town in India.

It is urged by those who are opposed to any change, that in the event of the ultimate annexation of Burmah, and in the view of protracted troubles in China and Japan, Calcutta is really the most central point from which the orders of Government could be issued. But would it not be more reasonable to suggest that a separate and distinct Government should be created, comprising all territories subject to the British Crown that lie eastward of the Bay of Bengal? The extent of India Proper is sufficiently great to engage the sole attention of any man, however able and industrious he may be. If the kingdom of Ava is destined to be absorbed—as is probably the case—if portions of China and Japan are to be added to our Eastern empire, it will become absolutely necessary to create an entirely new Government, responsible only to the Secretary of State for Eastern Affairs. But without going beyond the existing state of things, it cannot be said that Calcutta is conveniently or centrally situated for the general administration of the peoples of Hindostan. The Government of India, as at present constituted, is rather administrative than gubernatorial. Its function is rather to carry out the orders of the Secretary of State for India in Council, than to inaugurate or attempt to work out any original policy of its own. This being the case, it must be a matter of some moment to be so situated as to command the quickest possible communication with the home Government. The capital of the western presidency, with the pleasant stations of Poona and Malabarshwar close at hand, certainly appears at first sight to possess and combine all the qualifications requisite for the seat of Government. For financial operations it affords at least equal facilities with Calcutta, and, by means of railways and telegraphic wires, instructions could be despatched without delay to every district in the empire. At the same time, it is even less entitled than Calcutta to be regarded as a central spot. From that point of view, indeed, there is no place that will bear comparison with Nagpore. One great advantage, too, of fixing the governmental head quarters at that rising city would be the escape from the disturbing influences of our European commercial community. However unpopular we may render ourselves to certain classes, we do not hesitate to avow our belief that the immediate interests of the European commercial community are not identical with the true interests of the empire. Men engaged in business care for nothing but good investments. The natives of the country are nothing more in their eyes than somewhat troublesome customers. It concerns them not at all whether suttee, infanticide, early marriages, polygamy, female education, and dacoitee are on the decline or in the ascendant. Perjury, fraud, and the fabrication of false documents are the only objectionable practices that directly affect them, and for the suppression of which alone can they be moved to exert themselves. The pressure they have at different times brought to bear upon the Government has been always of a purely selfish character, though disguised under the specious pretext of “developing the resources of the country,” and without a thought being given to the customs, usages, and feelings of the immense native population. We cannot, therefore, regard it as any inconvenience to withdraw an administrative Government from such narrow and one-sided influences, and for that reason we should be disposed to recommend Allahabad or Nagpore in preference to either Bombay or Calcutta.—Hurkaru.

OUR GOVERNMENT MEN.

There is no characteristic which marks the difference between the governing men of England and those of India so much as the positive hate or terror of the latter at the most courteous criticism of their public acts, and most honest opinion of their official ability. The English Minister and Member of Parliament estimate their importance by the frequency or earnestness with which public opinion passes judgment on their conduct. Not to be criticised by the press, and generally with some degree of passion, though with no trace of personality, is in England to be as obscure as the most respectable county member who never opens his lips in the House, as despised as the metropolitan member whose greatest enemy is the letter H, or as much overlooked as the permanent head clerk of an office who cannot be responsible because he is a machine. The true English statesman accepts criticism, even if it be far from eulogistic, not only as a compliment to his position but as an index by which to guide his policy. When he comes to India he does the same, and is astonished, like Mr. Laing, to find “official fogies” shuddering at the mildest remarks. Almost every Governor-general—and notably Lord Dalhousie, as well as Lord Canning in his later years—except perhaps Lord Elgin, whose experience has been as little English as many a civilian's, has shown some anxiety to learn public opinion, and to give it due weight. Every English member of the Indian Cabinet since its reconstruction has done the same, at once as a duty and a necessity. But they, as well as the few of the Anglo-Indian governing class who have imitated their example, have been sneered at as popularity-hunters, by men who were so blind as not to see that they themselves possessed almost every qualification for successful administration and a solid reputation, except that of respect for publicity.

Never have the position and character of our governing men been so worthy of attention as at the present time, and yet this timid shrinking from criticism makes it difficult to do justice to the really able or promising among them. With the exception of Sir W. Denison, there is not a Governor, Lieutenant-Governor or Chief Commissioner who is not either an able or respectable ruler. Exception has been taken to Mr. Beadon, because in the crooked paths of diplomacy and patronage he seems to have contracted an unfortunate preference for the least direct mode of doing his duty. But we by no means despair of yet seeing him rise to that level just beneath which he is kept by an absence of administrative breadth of view. On the whole, India has reason to be moderately satisfied with those of the governing classes who are in power, and it is when we look to the second stratum of men who will soon be called to fill their places, that we feel some uneasiness. Mr. Harington will be compelled by ill health to leave India in a few weeks, and it is probable that his Bengal colleague in Council, Mr. Grey, will be forced to take leave to England a second time, which will lead him to vacate office altogether. Never before has it been so difficult to say who ought to succeed the former. It is easy in the case of Mr. Grey, for Mr. Yule is at once a civilian of Bengal proper, has the highest and the most deserved reputation, was averse to humiliate himself as Colonel Davidson's successor at Hyderabad, and must be so disgusted every time he squats bootless before the Nizam, that he would prefer a life he has hitherto disliked so much—in cities and along the even course of paper routine. Moreover, Mr. Yule's promotion to council would redeem the evils of one of the worst acts of Lord Canning's patronage. Colonel Elliott, Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, will return to his duty in a few months. The Viceroy cannot allow him to turn back the tide of progress in Central India, and restore the régime of busy trifling and military cliquism. For his own sake Colonel Elliott cannot desire to hold a position in which he would have to mar the labours of subordinates like Mr. Strachey and Captain H. Mackenzie, and arrest the energetic career of an officiating Chief Commissioner who seems to have been created for the office. All Colonel Elliott's tastes would be gratified, even if haunch-squatting at a Mussulman feudatory's durbar be not abolished, by his appointment to the Hyderabad Residency.

The re-appointment of Sir Robert Montgomery for another year, while decidedly for the good of the empire and of the frontier at this critical period, causes Colonel Durand to rest for some time longer under a wrong for which only the Lieutenant-governorship of a province he knows so well can adequately atone. He is as valuable for his great political experience as Foreign Secretary, as Mr. E. C. Bayley is well suited for the Home-office from his legal turn of mind and business habits. That the former will go into council in Mr. Harington's place is improbable, so long as Sir Robert Napier is there, and it would be a pity to disturb the latter in a position which he fills so well. The combined folly and weakness which placed the present Financial Secretary in his office because he is a Lushington—why is it the Lushingtons keep all their good men in England?—is quite capable of afflicting the empire with him in a higher office, though he is of Bengal proper; and the dearth of men of mark in the higher ranks of the civil service of all India is so great, that more culpable appointments are possible. Search the local boards, secretariats, and commissioners, and the very few who are capable are too young. In Bengal, Mr. Schach was well spoken of, but he has disenchanted his admirers lately. In the Board Mr. E. T. Trevor is most promising, however, and Mr. Chapman's time has not yet come. Were we allowed to look to the High Court Bench we would find men like Justices Seton Karr and George Campbell who ought to have passed through Council to a governorship. And Mr. Harington's successor must be sought out of Bengal. Mr. Muir will not leave the North-West Board; and we fear bureaucratic prejudice, if not that envy which underrates him, may prevent the advancement of Mr. Cust. The Punjab men have too bitterly opposed the Council to expect its good things, though their day is coming. In Bombay and Madras the journals afford no clue to the merits of the prominent men of the service. The chat of the Bombay Council gives its readers the idea of a legislature some degrees below that of Bengal in ability, and that is low enough. In the former Mr. Pycroft is an industrious routinist, and Mr. Maltby much inferior to his brother, who so ably directed affairs at Cochin and Travancore. Mr. Arbutnot has at once the Madras narrowness of intellect and the Madras conscientiousness. In both Presidencies the coming men bear the name of Ellis; he of Madras is known as a member of the Imperial Legislature, and he of Bombay as a Jew.

This inability of the most careful observer to name half a dozen governing men in India who have proved their fitness for the highest offices, by no means argues inferiority on the part of the service. It is probably due to the fact that, while the men who distinguished themselves in the mutiny have passed away, those who were merely spectators of it have remained uninfluenced by its lessons. The India of to-day is not their India. To them the times are out of joint. They are worthy enough representatives of the old school of the East India Company, who have attained their present position by the sheer force of living. Like all old men, they are laudatores temporis acti. But behind them we could name many who, quietly because they are not beyond the modest position of a magistrate, wait and prepare for the day when India will be governed on principles somewhat more advanced than those which even in Queen Elizabeth's time would have been considered too Conservative.—Friend of India.

FRENCH FEATS IN JAPAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF “THE JAPAN HERALD.”

DEAR SIR,—I am authorised by Admiral Jaures, Commander-in-Chief of the French Forces in China and Japan, to communicate to you the following account of the proceedings of H.I.M.'s Semiramis and Tancrède, and my own experiences in the recent retaliatory visit of those ships to the Straits of Simonoseki.

We left Yokohama on the morning of the 16th, and arrived in the Bungo entrance to the inland sea on the morning of Sunday, the 19th. We anchored in the channel and prepared for action. Early on the morning of Monday we ran under slow steam into the entrance of the Simonoseki Channel, looking out for the batteries. When about two miles from the Nangato side of the channel we saw the flashes and smoke of two guns fired from the midst of the trees, and soon after made out Cho-fhoo, the Castle of Saki-noski, a member of Matz-daira Daizen no Daiboo's family, and proceeding a little further on, on the same, i.e., northern or Nangate side, a battery of five 25-pounder guns. The admiral decided upon the destruction of this battery, and not of the castle. We then came to anchor about three-quarters of a mile from the battery, near the village of Tanoura, in the province of Bouzen. When anchored, it was found that the current put us stem on to the battery. About half an hour was spent in putting springs on our cable, and a hawser to a Japanese junk moored at some distance from us. During all this time the Japanese gunners remained at their guns, not even pointing them at us; had they done so, they might have raked us fore and aft; we therefore thought that the guns were fixed in the one position, viz., pointed up the narrowest part of the channel, but when we took the battery, we found this not to be the case, the guns being perfectly mounted on good European-fashioned carriages. When broadside on the frigate fired a 60-pounder rifle-ball, which went right over the battery; the second carried right into the middle of the parapet, and sent earthwork and stones, turf and sand-bags, flying around in every direction. Still no answer was returned by the Japanese. We continued the bombardment till nearly eleven o'clock, sending in the shells every five minutes, and making beautiful practice. I was then sent on shore in company with Monsieur l'Abbe Girard to the town of Tanoura, to distribute the proclamation of Admiral Jaures, to the effect that the country people had nothing to fear on that side, that he had come only to punish the Prince of Nangato for having fired into a vessel under the French flag, and inviting them to send provisions on board against payment.

We found our way to the house of the Mayor without difficulty, not being molested in any way by the people who crowded round us in great numbers, and we were received by this official with all honours and politeness; he thanked us for the proclamation, and in our presence sent it by a messenger to the Prince of Bouzen. During this trip on shore I had heard both the frigate and the Tancrede recommence their fire, and on going on board I learned that the admiral had ordered the Tancrede to run in towards Simonoseki, and that when she came into the narrowest part of the passage the battery opened fire upon her; our guns, however, soon silenced the battery. I saw one gun toppled over by a shell, and two or three Japanese gunners fly into the air. The Tancrede was hit in three places—one shot went into her hull, one into the main topmast, and one cut away the fore topmast, which only stood then by the stays. At noon after the men's dinner the admiral ordered a landing, and I had the good luck to be ordered to accompany Captain Duquilliot, the commander of the troops. We landed in all 250 men—180 sailors and 70 Chasseurs of the 3rd battalion d'Afrique.

On nearing the shore to the right of the battery, protected from her by a projecting bluff, the boat's rifled gun sent a few shells into the bushes as a precaution, but nobody stirred; we landed in good order, and made in three divisions for the battery; after we had well entered into the bushes we were attacked by the Japanese in several isolated troops of three or four, some with rifles, some with swords, but most with old Brown Bess, of Dutch manufacture; these lay concealed, aiming at us as we approached; they were immediately charged and bayoneted, some few made a stand, but generally took to immediate flight. I think there must have been about twenty killed this way. Passing through this brushwood we came upon the battery. It was quite deserted; the parapet was all ploughed up by our shells; one gun lay upset; another had its truncheons knocked off and pools of blood in all directions. The dead had all been carried away. In a hollow road behind the battery we found some clothes soaked with blood and some accoutrements. The guns having been spiked, the commandant ordered brushwood, mats, and all other inflammable materials to be placed under the gun-carriages, which was then fired. The powder magazine was found outside the battery, in a very safe position in a hollow road; the powder and all the ammunition was thrown into the sea. While this was going on in the battery, Mr. Layrie, Chef d'Etat Major of Admiral Jaures, advanced by the right of the battery (keeping up a continual fire with Japanese hid in the bushes) to a village called Aidaga-mome, which was abandoned by the peasants, and evidently used as dwelling-places for the troops belonging to the batteries. In the middle of this town there was a large building a little way up the hill, half temple, half palace like, in which there was found a great deal of powder and ammunition, which, having been fired by us, blew up with a tremendous noise just as we were re-embarking.

On entering the battery I went at once to the principal building, where I found a good quantity of Japanese armour and arms, but no one in the house. In looking about I found several Japanese translations of Dutch books on fortification and gunnery, one of which (which I have now in my possession) was marked at the page where it treats of attacking ships that are carried away by the current.

Having thus accomplished our object, destroyed the battery and guns, and also burned the village, (the quarters of the soldiers) we re-embarked. I must not forget to mention that during the re-embarkation the frigate, the Tancrede and the boats' guns opened a heavy fire on some spot to the right of us, but hidden by the bushes. On going on board I learned that they had seen about 2,000 men, regular infantry, some men on horseback, and even field artillery, coming down upon us from Simonoseki by the road along the shore; they fired a few shells amongst them, which exploding in their midst did them considerable damage and they speedily retreated. We had in all three men wounded belonging to the Chasseurs, two by musket balls, and one by a stab of a dagger of a Japanese, who was lying wounded on the ground, and stabbed him as he passed by.

It is difficult to arrive at any estimate of the casualties of the Japanese, but there was abundant testimony in the batteries that their loss there must have been very considerable, besides that which the shell practice, at a range of 3,000 yards did upon their advancing column. I remain, dear sir, &c., &c.

F. BLEKMAN,

Interpreter attached to French Admiral.

T. R. GRANT.

The usual resolution, that the report of the directors for the past half-year be approved of and confirmed, and that the accounts be received and passed as correct, was then put to the meeting.

The Chairman put to the meeting the following resolution:—"That a dividend of Rs. 30 per share be declared, payable on the 1st of October." In doing so he said he had one or two remarks to make. The meeting would see, from the account marked "A," that the capital stock of 2,028 shares amounted to Rs. 20,28,000, and the credit taken on the opposite side in the shape of assets amounted to a similar sum, to which would be added the Rs. 18,000, leaving a balance of Rs. 41,000 as a reserve fund. It would be a question at the next meeting whether that sum might not be fairly added to the vessel now being built. He therefore thought that they would be justified in declaring a dividend of Rs. 30 per share. It would be absorbed in the Rs. 50,400 only. They had a very small amount, say of Rs. 250, to pay upon the new shares. Then, the commission of the directors amounted to a very miserable sum. On the whole, the state of the finances of the company, he was glad to say, was sound and healthy. Their boats had worked very satisfactorily, and he hoped by the next half-year the very low offer made by them to shippers would operate very favourably, and that their profits would be doubled.

The motion was then put and carried unanimously.—Englishman, Sept. 18.

THE ASSAM COMPANY.

Proceedings of the half-yearly general meeting of the local shareholders of the Assam Company, held at their office, No. 4, Chowringhee-road, Calcutta, on the 15th Sept., 1863. W. Maitland, Esq., in the chair.

The secretary read the following report of the directors, 15th Sept., 1863:—

"Gentlemen,—Your directors have the pleasure to submit to you the half-yearly report and papers for the half-year ending 31st March, 1863.

"In their last report your directors informed you that an area of 500 acres had been cleared and planted last cold season, and that it was expected a further area, to about the same extent, would also be put under cultivation before the close of that season. It is with pleasure that your directors have now to inform you that that expectation has been realized. When this large increase to the cultivated area is productive, the increase it will make in the out-turn in tea from the old gardens will be considerable.

"If practicable, another 1,000 acres will be brought under cultivation next cold season.

"The sale of the Cachar gardens has been completed, and the sum realised for them has been remitted to the London board.

"Additions to the supply of labour to the plantations have been steadily made almost by every steamer since the date of the last report.

"The present season's operations bid fair to close with a large increase of tea over last year; and your directors trust to be in a position at its termination to confirm this agreeable anticipation.

"The crop of tea-seed of the past season realised the sum of Rs. 141,000, and your directors anticipate a larger return on the crop of the current season.

"The weather has been unusually hot and dry during the months of June and July, and your directors regret to report a considerable amount of sickness among the establishment in Assam, both European and native.

"At a general meeting of shareholders held in London on the 12th of June last, a dividend of 12 per cent. per annum was declared, being an addition of 2 per cent. to the last dividend. It will be understood that the present dividend is declared on the profits of the season ending September, 1861.

"Your directors have the pleasure to inform you of the return of Mr. Judge from Assam. During his residence in that province, Mr. Judge obtained possession, for the company, of several thousand acres of land which had been taken up under instructions from the London Board by the late managing director, or under his orders, during his visit to the province in the early part of 1862, in his own name or in the name of another person, but for the benefit of the company, of which, however, he omitted to furnish particulars. These lands are held under the old rules, and as such, and also from their position, are very valuable.

"In accordance with the wish expressed by the London board in 1861, applications were, during Mr. Judge's stay in Assam, made for large tracts of land in the neighbourhood of the company's existing plantations.

"Mr. Judge has presented several reports to the board, and is engaged in the completion and preparation of others.

"Messrs. C. B. Stewart, W. Spink, and A. T. T. Peterson have gone to England. The two first-named gentlemen have since sold their shares, and thereby disqualified themselves for re-election to a seat on the direction.

"Captain W. Smith has been elected to a seat on the board, subject to your confirmation. The accounts now presented are the balance-sheet, abstract of the receipts and disbursements in India from October 1, 1862, to March 31, 1863, and abstract of receipts and disbursements in India from October 1, 1845, to March 31, 1863.

(Signed) "W. J. JUDGE, Chairman."

The following resolutions were then proposed and carried unanimously:—

1. That the report now read be received and adopted.
2. That the accounts now submitted, having been duly audited, be passed as correct.
3. That the appointment of Captain W. Smith as a director be confirmed.
4. That this meeting request the directors to call the attention of the London Board to a letter from certain shareholders, dated 15th August, 1862, and presented at the general meeting held that day, and to request the London Board to communicate their views on the subjects referred to in said letter.—Englishman, Sept. 17.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MORE SCANDALS.—A very mysterious communication from Benares informs us, with strict injunctions not to disclose particulars, of a fresh military scandal, as the writer calls it, though we do not see what there is military about it, which will shortly come out in the shape of a law suit before the local courts. It will be chiefly interesting to sporting men, and the Rajah of Benares and a gallant officer well-known on the turf are parties concerned.—Delhi Gazette, Sept. 10.

SIR HERBERT BENJAMIN EDWARDS.—It will be seen that Sir Herbert Benjamin Edwards, K.C.B., is to succeed Sir Robert Montgomery as Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. The Delhi Gazette has conferred the appointment on the old Brahmin Bull, and utterly ignores the pretensions of Mr. C. J. Wingfield. Whether Lord Elgin will confirm this appointment or not remains to be seen; for we believe the Governor-General has the power of approving or disapproving of these press appointments. Sir Herbert is a man of very great ability, but he has not the power of intellect, nor the indomitable will of Charles James Wingfield, who, we are perfectly satisfied, does not covet the appointment, and who has never applied for it. Nature never changes. Mr. Wingfield would ask no man living for any exercise of patronage in his favour.—Mofussilite, Sept. 15.

ZOUAVE UNIFORM.—The authorities at army head-quarters are very anxious to introduce the new clothing, Zouave fashion, into the native regiments in Bengal; but on account of clothing having been prepared, of the old pattern, for all except five or six corps, only these latter can don the improved uniform this year. The new pattern coat is a short tunic, somewhat like that worn by the Highland regiments, with Zouave continuations, and knicker-bockerish shoes or buskins; the whole being an immense improvement upon the present dress of the sepoys.

THE 2ND BENGAL CAVALRY, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel G. Jackson, is ordered to form par tnf his Excellency the Governor-General's escort in the cold weather, and will march with the Viceregal camp to Peshawur, thence back to Lahore, and thence to its new station, Cawnpore.

TROOPS TO NEW ZEALAND.—A telegraphic message from the Governor-General has solved the difficulty occasioned by the ambiguous despatch of the Horse Guards, and ordered that H. M.'s 43rd L.I. be despatched to the scene of hostilities in New Zealand with as little delay as possible. The steamers Arctoon Apar and Armenian have been taken up by the Government for their conveyance, and it is probable that one of them, with the head-quarters of the regiment, will get away by the end of the month. The computed length of voyage from Calcutta to New Zealand is, for steam-vessels, fifty, and for sailing vessels, eighty days. These steamers taking down H. M.'s 43rd L.I., ought, however, to make their port of destination easily in six weeks from the Sandheads; although they will be provisioned for over the full period assigned for the voyage. As regards baggage, &c., the 43rd will go to New Zealand as little encumbered as possible; and their appliances for the field will be condensed in the same proportion. A telegraphic message has been sent to the officer in charge of the Allahabad Arsenal to send down tents for the regiment by railway with the least possible delay, there not being a sufficiency at the Presidency. These tents are to be sepoy's "palls," the officer commanding the regiment alone having one for himself, and one being assigned to every two officers of subordinate rank. This equipment is absolutely unavoidable, as carriage in New Zealand is very scarce; and we believe that coolie carriage, as it would be called in India, is the only description available, or capable of being used in the difficult and thickly wooded country in which our troops will have to fight. The 43rd will take down from this arsenal 300,000 rounds of ball ammunition for the benefit of the Maories, with the other requisite military stores, all, of course, to be charged to the account of the British Government. There remains but the painful difficulty as to the disposal of the women and children, the greater proportion of whom would, unfortunately, be as unhappy, and as much out of place in New Zealand as in England. For the present they will, we believe, be sent to the Chinsurah depot, to await events.—Englishman, Sept. 18.

HINDOO SWINDLERS.—Mr. Kerr, whose services as assistant to the Commissary-General were dispensed with by the Government on his return from leave to Europe, some months ago, in consequence of some very violent strictures upon the Commissariat Department which were published last year in the newspapers, has received a pension of Rs. 250 a month, in recognition and reward of his long and really able service to the State. Mr. Kerr has been sufficiently punished for his indiscretion; and we are glad to see the government relent in its anger towards him, and give him a comfortable provision for the remainder of his days.

CAMP OF EXERCISE AT LAHORE.—A curious precedent, in connection with the assemblage of the Camp of Exercise at Lahore, is, we hear, about to be constituted; and one which, hereafter, may open a possibility for all kinds of jobbery and injustice. It is said that Lord George Paget, now commanding the Sirhind division, will assume the command of all the cavalry in the Camp of Exercise, and exercise it till the termination of the manœuvres and the breaking up of the force; retaining, at the same time, the command of his own division, whilst serving out of it, and on that of another general officer. There may be a precedent, or precedents, for such an arrangement; but if so, they are beyond the reach of our recollection and experience.

SITTANA FANATICS.—We announced a few weeks ago that H. M.'s 101st regiment had marched to Sealkote to act against the Sittana fanatics. We now learn from the Oudh Gazette that "a complete blockade has been established on the Huzarah frontier, and that H. M.'s 101st Bengal Fusiliers have been ordered to Abbottabad, in the Huzarah district, and placed under the orders of General Chamberlain. We believe this to be a demonstration to produce a wholesome moral effect, rather than for any other purpose; for we cannot imagine the Government will wage war with such an insignificant rabble as the Sittana fanatics. They will, in all probability, be starved out of their fastnesses in a few months, without rendering it necessary to resort to arms. The utmost vigilance is observed, strict surveillance is kept over all Fakeers, and Hindustanees are sent off to their homes whenever caught lurking about in this or the Huzarah and Peshawur districts. Topee is occupied by our people; and Sujkote, whither the 101st regiment were at first ordered to proceed, commands a perfect observation of all that is going on on the other side.—Bengal Hurkaru.

CLIVE FUND.—The Government Gazette of the 9th Sept. contained the most honest, straightforward, and intelligible communication which we have seen from the hands of Sir Charles Wood, and one which bodes well for the manner and spirit in which, when the time comes for Government to take over the different Army Funds, the transfer will be effected, and the beneficial working of those institutions be maintained until they perish by effluxion of time and the gradual death of the incumbents. Sir Charles simply states that the House of Lords having decreed that, in consequence of the termination of the East India Company's government, and the annihilation of their armies and fleets, the money left by Lord Clive, and known as the Clive Fund, reverts to the living descendant of that nobleman. Henceforth the Government of India will accept the obligations of that Fund, without any further mention of the name of the primary donor, and will pay the regulated rates of pensions to those who, had the institution continued to exist, would have benefited by its provisions. This is the only fair course to pursue in dealing with the deceased charity; and if the same open and clear manner shall be adopted in annexing the other military funds, one of the most serious difficulties consequent upon the amalgamation of the Queen's and company's armies will be easily and satisfactorily disposed of, leaving no just cause for a breath of murmur or a word of complaint. To meet the obligations of Lord Clive's Fund will, of course, be a dead drain upon the Government, but not a heavy one; whilst we believe that, in annexing the other funds of the late company's armies, and taking over both their property and their responsibilities, the Government will find itself a very considerable gainer in the end, as must have been already demonstrated by rough, but sufficiently accurate, calculations.—Englishman, Sept. 18.

MILITARY DISCIPLINE IN A CRAWLEY-WILLIS FASHION.—If all reports be true, H. M.'s 38th can scarcely be a comfortable regiment to serve in. Colonel Willis has forbidden the subject of the late trial to be mentioned at all; a subaltern has really been placed under arrest for speaking disparagingly of Captain Eyre, and things have come to such a pitch that if either of the Colonels happen to approach a group of the "youngsters" while talking on this subject, a cry of "Liver-pool!" supposed to mean "cave," is immediately raised, and the subject dropped. We should only be too glad to hear such a statement contradicted, for it must have come to a sad pass with the army when officers and gentlemen are debarred from the privileges common to the latter in general society. This spirit of "You be quiet, or I'll tell the Colonel—I will," is becoming too common, and should, as it easily can, be checked at once, without, however, interfering with the due observance of discipline.

ANNUITIES.—Of the three £200 annuities offered by Sir Charles Wood to the Bengal portion of the Royal Engineers, only two had been accepted on the 1st ultimo, the final date assigned; consequently, the third has lapsed, and many promotions are lost in the regiment. This has not arisen from any want of energy or liberality amongst the engineer officers, who had made arrangements for a much larger exodus, but Colonel Young's delay in retiring and his availing himself of one of the annuities marred their well-laid plans. One annuity unaccepted and one step of promotion to Colonel uneffected, make a very serious difference indeed to the corps of Engineers.

MOFUSSIL NATIVE COURTS.—The correspondence that has taken place between Mr. William Tayler and Mr. E. F. Loutour, officiating civil sessions judge of Patna, the first instalment of which appeared in yesterday's Englishman, lays open the whole question of the inefficiency, mismanagement, and corruption of courts of law presided over by native judges. On the 20th May, Mr. Tayler brought to Mr. Loutour's knowledge that the Principal Sudder Ameen, Abdool Azeez, was in the daily practice of acting in direct violation of the new Code of Civil Procedure, which enjoins that the evidence of witnesses shall be taken "under the personal direction and superintendence of the judge." Or, if the judge does not deem it necessary to take down the entire evidence with his own hand, he is, nevertheless bound to make a memorandum of each witness's deposition as the examination proceeds, and to sign the same with his usual signature before appending it to the record. Previous to the introduction of the new code it was the custom for a deposition-writer to record the evidence in one case, while another was being tried by the judge, and thus a wide door was opened for bribery and corruption. Abdool Azeez, it seems, is an admirer of old usages, and no advocate for the removal of ancient land marks. In his Court, says Mr. Tayler, "several cases are frequently under trial at a time, (and) while arguments are being heard in one case, the depositions of witnesses are being taken in others by the mohurrirs." Mr. Loutour accordingly took steps to ascertain the truth of Mr. Tayler's statement; and having satisfied himself of its exactness, it is clear that he ought to have visited such culpable irregularities with the severest punishment in his power. He confined himself, however, to requesting the principal Sudder Ameen to "put a stop to such proceedings," and for the future to "take down the evidence of the witnesses with his own hand." But it was not only to Abdool Azeez's persistent disobedience to the injunctions of the new code that Mr. Tayler directed the attention of the sessions judge. He also dwelt upon the pernicious custom that prevails of feeing the Amlah, to the prejudice of the course of justice and the serious inconvenience of suitors. Of the existence of this practice no sane man can entertain a doubt, though it is not easy to bring home any particular case to any particular offender. Mr. Loutour, however, affects to treat Mr. Tayler's assertion as "bazaar gossip" and "vague generalities," upon which he cannot possibly take action. He was not asked to do so. He was simply reminded of a fact, of which he could scarcely be ignorant, and might well have gone a little out of his way to assure Mr. Tayler of his sympathy and support in his honourable attempt to purify the personnel of the Patna law courts. Mr. Tayler has undertaken an heroic task, and we trust he will find the strength of Hercules to bring it to a successful and glorious completion.—Hurkaru, Sept. 7.

MESSRS. SCONE AND WATSON.—Messrs. Scone and Watson had determined to commence their exploration of the Upper Salween river, by proceeding up the Irrawaddy to Mandalay, from which city they will travel along one of the caravan routes until the Salween is reached, from which point they will ascend that river as far as it may be desirable to go. The expedition will afterwards descend the Salween to Maulmain. Mr. Barker is about to publish the particulars of his journey from Amarapura to Moukmay. This journey was undertaken in the year 1856, and is expected to throw very considerable light upon our limited knowledge of the Burmese Shan States.

BREAKING ARREST.—Our Saugor correspondent informs us that a captain of H.M.'s 97th, who has been for some time waiting his trial, broke arrest and replying to the quarters of a subaltern of the cavalry regiment at that station, they both have been so defiant of the authorities as to compel a reference by telegraph to the Commander-in-chief. In the meantime, a guard of European sentries confines them to the house they occupied. The case is disgraceful.—Central India Times, Sept. 5.

THE BUDGET COMMITTEE.—The days of the Budget Committee are now numbered. We hear that the Financial Member of the Council has recommended that the Budget-office be at once abolished, and that all the papers connected with the said proposition are now before the Governor-General at Simla. On the abolition of the above-mentioned committee, the business of that office will be transferred to the Financial Department. As the aforesaid office was hitherto maintained at an enormous expenditure, it might be supposed that when it is done away a great saving would result to Government, but the idea is chimerical. If our information be correct, on the abolition of the Budget Committee another office will shortly be created, to be designated the "Controller of Government Muniments." This officer will receive a salary of Rs. 3,000, with an assistant on Rs. 1,000 or Rs. 1,500 per mensem, together with a large office establishment. Under such circumstances there will clearly be no actual saving on the abolition of the Budget-office—no real economy in all these changes.—Bengal Hurkaru, Sept. 18.

THE LATE BURNEY AND EYRE TRIAL.—Twenty days having elapsed since judgment was delivered in the memorable case of "Burney v. Eyre," and no notice of appeal having as yet been lodged, it is no longer in the power of the defendant or his friends, to move any further in the matter. According to the Articles of War, Captain Eyre's commission is forfeited without further trial, and himself driven from the pale of respectable society. As to the fate of the other actors in this miserable drama, nothing is yet known, but no one supposes that Sir Hugh Rose will be any longer permitted to abuse the high position he has of late so frequently discredited. The immediate removal of Colonel Macpherson from the command of the Dinapore Brigade, of Colonel Gordon from that of H.M.'s 10th Regiment, and of Lieut. Colonel Turner from the post of Deputy Judge Advocate-General, are also confidently looked for, and, indeed, demanded in the true interests of military discipline and subordination.—Bengal Hurkaru, Sept. 18.

COURTS-MARTIAL.—The Oude Gazette states that Ensign Hutchinson, who it may be remembered, has been under arrest for some months upon a charge of having committed a rape upon a native woman, has been released, and permitted to return to his duty. Our contemporary regrets to hear, however, that Ensign Kenny, who was accused of the same offence as Ensign Hutchinson, though acquitted of the charge, continues under arrest to take his trial on other and fresh charges that have been preferred against him.—Hurkaru, Sept. 16.

HEALTH AT UMRITSUR.—It affords us much satisfaction to learn that the mortality and sickness amongst the men of her Majesty's 19th at Umrtsur have at length ceased. The hospital is emptying rapidly, and on Thursday last there were only thirty-six men against sixty on the previous Monday. The General Commanding the Division, who had previously been informed that the leave he had applied for could not be granted in view of his report regarding this sickness, will now be permitted to avail himself thereof.—Delhi Gazette, Sept. 8.

SHAHABAD.—We fear the indigo season in Shahabad, Ghazepore, and Jounpore may be counted as a bad one for the "blue" interest, as the violent storms and floods of July and August did damage to a fearful extent. Few factories will, we believe, even cover their outlay. Cotton is beginning to be grown more widely, but not the exotic. We think much might be done by careful cultivation of the country varieties. A gentleman, who has just purchased an estate in the Rohtuck Hills, is trying the experiment, and we hope he will succeed. Tea is now being grown in the Shahabad Kymore Range, overlooking the valley of the Soane, and, we believe, is a success. In that case, what with tea, coffee, and lime, the Soane Canals, and the talked of branch railway from Arrah to Sasseram, Shahabad will soon have a large European population, who will care but little for any future Koor Sing, or any other Sing who raises his hand against us.

MURDER BY A SOLDIER.—In one of our local contemporaries we notice the following extract from a letter addressed to the Mofussilite:—"A Punkah coolie was killed in the fort by a private of the 77th. The old story—a diseased spleen and a kick in the side. I hope the man will not be tried for murder. A man of the same regiment was hanged here, just after their arrival last cold season." "I hope the man will not be tried for murder." No? and pray why not? why not as much for the murder of a Punkah coolie as for that of a contributor to the Mofussilite? If the remark is ironical, the irony should have been unmistakable. But there is nothing to mark it as being of that character. Our hope is, that if the second offence resembles the first, the man may be tried for murder and, if found guilty, hanged, and that the same course of treatment may be steadily persevered in till the members of the gallant 77th get tired of experimenting on the state of Punkah coolies' spleens.—Madras Times.

SANITARY MEASURES IN BENGAL.—As yet the epidemic does not seem to have broken out again in the swamps of Lower Bengal. Dr. McClelland reports that the sanitary arrangements recently made appear to have been the means of greatly reducing the amount of sickness and mortality in many of the villages. Dr. Elliot anticipates that still more favourable results will ensue as soon as the orders of Government are fully carried out. Comparing the present with the two previous seasons the sickness in many of the villages is said to have decreased considerably; but as the approaching months are those during which the epidemic has generally been most virulent, it yet remains to be seen whether any abatement of the disease has actually taken place. The people now suffering are, in most instances, those in whom the fever has become chronic, complicated with enlargement of the spleen and liver; and while many such cases are gradually dying off there are comparatively few cases of new fever. Great credit is given to the deputy magistrate of Santipore and his subordinates for the zeal and activity they have shown in carrying out the orders of Government.—Friend of India.

PACKET SERVICE IN THE INDIAN ARCHITELAGO.—From Java we learn that Mr. Robinson, shipowner, of London, had been the successful tenderer for the steam packet service in the Indian Archipelago for the ten years commencing 1865 and ending 1875. The amount of the tender was 292,827 francs per annum. The Netherlands steamer Amsterdam had grounded on an unknown reef on the east coast of the Celebes. After remaining on the rocks for eight days she floated off, having thrown overboard her guns and cargo. She was to be towed to Singapore, and is supposed to have sustained material damage. The convict-labour question was engaging public attention. It has hitherto been usual to systematically ignore the value of the labour of the convicts employed on the public works, but the fallacy of this is beginning now to be seen, and the question arises how far the Government is justified in undertaking such gigantic public works, simply because the greater portion of the labour employed on them has not to be directly paid for in hard cash.—Bengal Hurkaru.

RANEENGUNGE COAL MINE.—The East India Coal Company's mine at Raneengunge has now finished its suicide, though still smouldering, six seams or shafts, as far as we can understand, having been destroyed by the combustion, and the remainder having been only saved by deluging it with the waters of the diverted river. We have reason to believe that this destructive and costly conflagration was the result of gross negligence, as the fire had been seething in the mine since the month of April last; and what was at first but a lurking danger, which could have been subdued with comparative ease, being neglected and permitted to slumber undisturbed, at length burst forth into a roaring conflagration, lighting up the country for miles around, and destroying an incalculable amount of valuable property.

BEYPORE.—A telegraph office was opened here on the 1st September.

INDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.—We learn that the British India Steam Navigation Company intend commencing the regular monthly service between Calcutta and Bombay, and vice versa, about the middle of the present month. The first steamers on the line will be the Persia from Calcutta, and Sydney from Bombay, the contract ports of call are to be Bimlipatam, Coconada, Madras, Tuticorin, Cochin or Narrakal, Beypore or Cannanore, Mangalore, to Bombay, but the company have the privilege of calling at False Point, Pooree, Ganjam or Munsoorcottah, Masulipatam, Pondicherry, Negapatam, Colombo, Vindygoda, Goa, and Rutnagerry, should sufficient inducement offer, or the Government require the steamers to touch at these ports. The stay of the steamers at coast ports will not be less than three hours of daylight, or exceed twenty-four hours of night and day, except at Madras and coaling ports. During the S.W. monsoon the company are only bound to send their steamers into such ports on the Malabar Coast as may be considered safely accessible. — Madras Times, Sept. 17.

CALCUTTA UNIVERSITY.—The Senate of the Calcutta University have unanimously confirmed the resolution of the Faculty of Arts, to examine candidates for the "little go" and the B.A. and M.A. degrees in one of the ancient or oriental classical languages besides English. We regret, however, that Persian has not been considered a classical language. Strictly it may not be so described, for it is a spoken tongue. But its antiquity even in its present form is considerable, and its literature and utility are far before those of Arabic, which so good an authority as Dr. Sprenger has declared it to be a waste of time to learn, so far as literature is concerned. The Senate, with a reasonable fear of cramming, retain the minimum age of undergraduate candidates at sixteen years. We are glad that a movement has been made by the professional men who are fellows to remove that contradiction in terms and disgrace to the University, the licentiate's degree, from the Faculties of Law, Medicine, and Civil Engineering. The state of education in Bengal does not require a lower degree than the bachelor's. — Friend of India.

THE COUNCIL OF INDIA.—Rumour has it that Mr. M. Ter Arratoon, of Lahore and the Upper Ravee Districts, and Mr. Clark, of the firm of Clark and Co., at Murree, are to be the European non-official members of the Council of India, on its assembling at Lahore, in January next. Mr. Arratoon's nomination will, it is considered, be very gratifying to the Armenian community, and generally to the East Indian community, as also a proof that Lord Elgin's Government are conscious of the value and importance of the Himalayan timber trade. The nomination of Mr. Clark, it is held, will be a still more popular move. It will practically amount to a recognition by the Government of India of the right of tradesmen to sit in the Council of the Empire—a right which, as regards the Council of Bengal, was so gracefully acknowledged by the Bengal Government some time back. Of the abilities of the members-designate we personally know nothing; but Mr. Arratoon has long been spoken of as a most enterprising man; and according to report, which we believe, in this instance, does not lie, Mr. Clark, of Murree, is a gentleman of first-class abilities. It was at first contemplated to have three European non-official members from the Punjab, the third to be the Chevalier Cortanze; but it was ultimately resolved the third unofficial member should be drawn from the North-West, and not from the Punjab. We have not heard who in the North-Western Provinces is likely to be selected for the honour, though we incline to the belief the selection has been made by this. — Phoenix, Sept. 5.

CAPTAIN H. HOWE.—His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal has conferred upon Captain H. Howe, Superintendent of the Government Dockyard, Kidderpore, the appointment of Judge of the Marine Court, for the trial of pilots, and investigation of matters connected with shipping casualties, in addition to his other duties.

GOVERNMENT CURRENCY NOTES.—We understand that a great demand has lately been made for the Government currency notes in the Mofussil, and that the collectors and other officers in charge of the several provincial treasuries have sent in their requisitions for a large number of those notes for small amounts, particularly the Fifty, Twenty, and the Ten Rupee Notes for circulation within their respective jurisdictions.

BAIZAH BAIE.—Another State pensioner, in the person of Baizah Baie, receiving a pension of one lakh of rupees per annum, died a few days ago. As the deceased is reported to have left no heirs, her property will probably be escheated to the Crown, and her pension lapse to Government. The deceased lady is said to have left personal property amounting to about twenty-five lakhs of rupees, besides lands and jagheers.

FEMALE NATIVE SCHOOL.—The natives of Berhampore lately requested Mrs. Beadon to become patroness of a female school which they had established. The Hindoo Patriot mentions the formation by the educated natives of Rajshaye of a central committee for the establishment of schools in the Mofussil with special reference to female education, and they have given a proof of their earnestness by setting on foot a girls' school.

CHOLERA.—Letters received yesterday from Cawnpore announce the re appearance of cholera in her Majesty's 46th regiment at that station, and that, in consequence, the corps was again ordered out of barracks and under canvas during the prevalence of the disease. — Englishman, Sept. 18.

THE COSSYAS.—Assam seems for the hour to be quiet. Nothing is to be feared from the Cossyas if the Welsh Mission schools are well supported by Government, and corrupt native underlings are not employed by us. The only tribes who are likely to give us trouble are the Bhooteas north of the Tezpur district, the Singphoes about Suddya in Upper Assam, and the Nagas who so dearly love raids on the Dunseri river near Golaghat. Notwithstanding our late treaty the Singphoes are cultivating opium. We have supplied them with muskets, and they insolently declare that rather than give up the cultivation they will fight. Besides its other deadly effects, opium-eating is a cause of barrenness. Hence the small supply of labour. The price of opium in Assam is far too low and ought to be gradually increased. Were the navigation of the Berhampooter opened up, and a small expedition sent beyond Suddya towards the Yangtsee river, the planters would with great ease be able to import Chinese labourers. The troops in Assam are the 33rd, 42nd, and 43rd Native Infantry, a detachment of her Majesty's East Indian Regiment, and a battery of Assam Local Artillery. With the new police under so efficient an officer as Major Raban, this seems to be at present sufficient for the peace of this important province. — Friend of India.

THE DUFF MEMORIAL.—The Friend of India says—"All the Presidencies and every part of India have an opportunity of subscribing to the Duff Memorial. The arrangements are at present in the hands of the Bishop of Calcutta and a small committee." The Englishman, referring to the meeting of the Bethune Society at Calcutta, for the purpose of doing honour to Dr. Duff, says—"The natives of India owe a great debt of gratitude to a man whose single-hearted energy and benevolence is beyond all praise, and we are glad to see that there are not wanting men to come forward and acknowledge the debt. Dr. Duff has certainly left his mark behind him, and a good mark too." We hear that it is proposed to alter the system by which the native regiments are at present commanded and officered. It is said that in future there will be no officers called "second in command." Each regiment will be divided into wings, each wing being commanded by a major, with officers attached. There will be additional pay for the commanding officer of each wing. There can be no doubt that the above, if true, will give considerable satisfaction to the officers of the local army. — Mofussilite, Sept. 1.

BENGAL SALT COMPANY.—We are given to understand that the Bengal Salt Company have applied to Government for the purchase of the store of Bengal Salt in the hands of Government. They have offered to pay a uniform rate of 8 annas per maund, which will amount to 25 lacs for the whole stock, and also an equal sum for the store-houses, furnitures, &c. As they will clear the stock, they propose to pay the duty for the quantity removed. The application we have been informed is now before Sir Charles Trevelyan. — Hindu Patriot, Sept. 14.

MYSORE.—Applications have been made to Government for the introduction of the Uncovenanted Pension Rules into Mysore, but it has been decided that the petition cannot be granted, as there exists in that province a system of appointing the son or other near relative to succeed to the vacant post.

TROOPS TO SINGAPORE.—The second and fourth battalions of the 17th brigade of Royal Horse Artillery embarked at Madras on the 2nd Sept. in the transport Chatham for Singapore.

ACCIDENTAL DEATH.—We regret very much that it is our painful duty to report a fatal accident that occurred yesterday morning at Serampore College. As two brothers, by name Cecil and Edward Rogers, aged seventeen and fifteen years respectively, were bathing in the college tank, they unfortunately got beyond their depth, and almost instantly sank to the bottom. No time was lost in bringing their unconscious bodies to the shore, when every means was adopted to restore circulation, but only in one instance with success. Cecil Rogers never breathed again. — Bengal Hurkaru.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DEATH OF THE REV. MR. HYSLOP.—Nagpore, 5th September.—Most distressing intelligence has arrived here of the death of the Rev. Mr. Hyslop. The Chief Commissioner, Mr. Temple, was at a traveller's bungalow about twenty miles from Nagpore westward, and being interested in certain geological questions, invited the rev. gentleman, a well-known and much respected missionary, to meet him and join in his explorations. It appears that Mr. Temple and Mr. Hyslop were three or four miles away from their camp, or traveller's bungalow, across a river, and were busy, as ardent geologists can be, among the stones, when Mr. Temple proposed to return, but Mr. Hyslop wished to remain longer. Probably an hour after Mr. Temple had left, Mr.

Hyslop mounted his horse to follow, when crossing the river either a flood came on suddenly, or he did not keep the ford, for his horse was soon out of his depth, and poor Mr. Hyslop was drowned. His horse making its appearance at midnight, alarmed the residents of the camp, and an active search was made, which resulted in finding the body of the reverend gentleman, who had clutched the "loosar" grass, and, retaining it in his death grasp, was thus kept from being swept away by the stream, which must have been some feet over his head before subsidence. The rivers hereabouts rise and fall very rapidly, and many native travellers are lost in crossing them at this season. All who knew the deceased loved him too much not to be deeply affected by this sad catastrophe. I hope to send you some account of the valuable assistance and Christian help and sympathy given by this worthy missionary during his many years' residence near this city.

NEULCHERRY TEA promises in time to rival that of Assam. The cultivation of the plant has been steadily advancing for some time past with very encouraging results, and has now assumed a considerable degree of importance. If we may judge from the following extract taken from the Madras Athenaeum, the quality will bear favourable comparison with tea grown in the presidency of Bengal:—"We were lately favoured with a small canister containing tea from the estate of Mr. H. D. Rae, near Ootacamund, and having both tried it ourselves and submitted it to the judgment of critical friends, we are enabled to give exceedingly good report of its qualities, as regards flavour, strength, and fragrance. A better cup of tea than it supplied to us we have not for a long while tasted, and we trust that Mr. Rae will soon be able to fulfil his advertised intention of bringing his teas into the market."

AN INDIAN PUBLICATION.—However Madras may be maligned on considerations of revenue and material progress, it certainly stands before all the other presidencies in a literary point of view. The "Institutes of Menu," just published by Mr. Higginbotham, is a work which stamps Madras booksellers as the most enterprising, and its public the most liberal and intelligent in India. The book forms an era in the literary history of this country, and will long be referred to as one of the most important undertakings ever perfected by a private firm. Though the basis of Hindu Law, Menu has long been unobtainable, and our judicial authorities have been compelled to depend upon pundits often ignorant, and always prejudiced; much to the detriment of our courts and the injury of the people. Dubois, Herklots, Ward, and Menu, will form an Indian library not easily surpassed, and will give the student, at a moderate expense, a thorough insight into the condition and laws of the Hindu and Mahomedan nations.—Madras Times, Sept. 7.

COTTON FROM MADRAS.—We learn from a Madras contemporary that the export of western cotton from Madras for the second quarter of the year ending 31st of July last, shows an increase of 100,000 cwt., as compared with that of the corresponding quarter of last year. There is a decrease in the export of Tinnevely cotton, amounting to 25,000 cwt. during the same period. Cotton continues to reach the Presidency in such large quantities that the screws are found insufficient to do the work required of them. Four and five rupees per bale are now demanded, and paid, for screwing; whereas, two or three years ago, the charge was only six annas.—Hurkaru.

BOMBAY.

RAJPOOTANA, September 5.

I am sorry to have to record a brutal outrage perpetrated by an English official of high position upon a young and intelligent Hindoo of good family and position in this neighbourhood. This interesting young person is Ajeet Singh, son of Mehta Shere Singh, a fine old Hindoo gentleman of the city of Oodeypoor. Ajeet Singh has been brought up with sentiments of the deepest piety and religion, so much so that he never could allow any crime against them to go unpunished. In particular he was brought up to feel a sincere compassion and fondness for animal life. Well, breathing these pious sentiments, you will sympathise with this good young man's feelings when he heard that two fiends in human form had actually killed a cow and eaten beef! You can fancy the anguish of his finely-poised and sensitive mind when he found that the sacred and divine cow had been devoured by cruel, impious men!—he who would not himself injure a worm!

Providence sometimes interferes on the spot to inflict divine vengeance on evil-doers. Ajeet Singh fortunately had the power to inflict, and was the agent of punishment. One of these cruel murderers was fastened by chains to the leg of Ajeet Singh's elephant, and the stately creature (representing so nobly the animal creation) cantered to and fro until the wretched man died.

The other criminal was equally satisfactorily disposed of, though not in the picturesque way which the refined and artistic mind of Ajeet Singh had devised for his brother felon. A farrier's pinchers relieved him of his sacrilegious teeth, and after well-deserved stripes, he was buried up to the chin in the earth, and so exposed to the indignant sun, which completed the work.

But what was the horrible sequel to this act of justice? You will hardly conceive it possible, but it is true, that Colonel Eden, the political agent, at Oodeypoor, stigmatized Ajeet Singh's conduct by the harsh term of murder, and urged the Council of Regency, of which he was a president, to try the poor young fellow as a murderer! Virtue and piety had not deserted their votary, and his father (a member of the Council of Regency) gave him timely notice to avoid capture. So when the myrmidons of so called justice went to execute their ruthless errand at Ajeet Singh's house, that kind, affectionate, gentle-hearted prince was a wanderer, in enforced outlawry, expending his finer sensibilities on the desert air of the hills and jungles. You will indignantly ask, did the Supreme Government not remove this person Eden, who interfered to punish this mild Hindoo? I blush to say that the world is coming to an end; injustice holds the scales of her blinded sister. Lord Elgin has been so infatuated as not only to pardon the offender Eden, but has been unkind enough to say that the Council of Regency is unfit to retain its powers, has actually dismissed them, and, oh climax of horrors, has vested the cruel, cruel Eden with their powers!

BOMBAY BOARDING SCHOOL COMPANY.

We are by no means sure that we can congratulate the public of Bombay on the mania that has set in for the establishment of joint-stock companies. The majority of these new companies are sound commercial enterprises, but some seem to be of a doubtful nature. We hail, however, with pleasure the formation of a company which will, we think, be welcomed by the whole European community, but more especially by its middle class, rapidly increasing in every part of India. We allude to the Panchgunny Proprietary Boarding School Company. There is no question that nothing causes so much anxiety to European parents in India, whose means are limited, as the education of their children. The wealthier classes solve the difficulty, by sending them to Europe. Painful as is the sacrifice, they make it in their children's interest. But there is a large class, who, however willing to make this sacrifice, are not able to encounter the expense. Provision is made for the education of native children, and for the children of the poorer class, while European schools exist in which the education is perhaps as good as is given to the poor at home. But the middle class look about them in vain for decent schools, and see no means of securing what they so earnestly desire. There is, perhaps, no school in the Presidency, where a boy from the middle rank of Europeans, can get an education at all worth the name. Some parents, even of this class, contrive to send their children home; but at the cost of involving themselves in difficulties for years. Some provision has already been made for girls of the class we refer to; the Young Ladies' Institution, in spite of its being held during part of the year in the Hills, and at another in the Deccan, having met with a considerable amount of success. In the other Presidencies, there are flourishing schools at the hill stations, where a sound education can be procured at a moderate cost, and in a healthy climate.

The projectors of the new company are about to establish a school of the same kind, and conducted on the same principles as a good proprietary school in England. They have selected what seems to be the only place in the Presidency, where such a school can be held throughout the year without detriment to health. At Panchgunny the children will be within reach, so that parents can occasionally see them; and can bring them home at any season. Should such a school be established, many a home will be gladdened on Christmas day, by the sight of childish faces, rosy with health, and the sound of merry voices, which those homes would otherwise have wanted; homes saddened with the thought of the long miles of ocean rolling between parent and child, and the certainty of separation ending in estrangement. Many a parent who is now distressed by his inability to get his sons respectably educated, will hail the formation of this school with joy. We trust that the share list of a company formed for so excellent a purpose will be at once filled up, and that we shall see in a few days the names of a good working board of directors. The Rev. J. J. Farnham is, we understand, to be its principal; and the high character borne by this gentleman, and his long experience as a teacher, are substantial guarantees for the success of the enterprise.

THE NEW CHURCH AT POONA.

His Excellency the Governor of Bombay, according to programme, laid the foundation stone of St. Paul's Church, on Saturday afternoon, 29th August. It had been an object to attract to this ceremony as many spectators as possible, and a notice was circulated the same morning with that object; but no one was quite prepared for the very large concourse of the Christian community of Poona which assembled. In spite of the counter attraction of a rifle match elsewhere, it really seemed as if everybody was there. Tents were pitched under the peepul trees at the east of the site of the church, fronting the west and close to the stone. To the west a guard of honour, consisting of a company of the 33rd Regiment, with the colours and band, was drawn up. The choir, which included a number of artillery men, present by the kind permission of Colonel Forster, their commanding officer, was in a tent to the left. Mr. Martinnant accompanied on the harmonium. Among those present were, besides the Governor, his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, the Hon. W. E. Frere, and the Hon. J. D. Inverarity—constituting the full strength of the Government of Bombay. The Bishop of Bombay (who wore his robes) was accompanied by the Ven. Archdeacon Boys, and the Rev. Messrs. G. L. Fenton and Francis Gell—in gowns and hoods. The Rev. W. K. Fletcher, of Bombay, was also present. The High Court was worthily represented by the Hon. Mr. Justice Westropp. Altogether, we should conjecture that the Christian community assembled a thousand strong. There were also some hundreds of natives on the ground looking on.

The Governor and members of Government arrived punctually at five o'clock, and the proceedings began at ten minutes past, by chanting part of the 132nd Psalm, and afterwards Psalm 84, by the choir; Mr. Fenton then read the lesson, Haggai 1, and some prayers were read by the Archdeacon. The choir then sung the beautiful hymn, "Jerusalem the Golden." After this the Rev. Mr. Gell read the following statement:—

HONOURABLE SIR,—The Church which we are now assembled to commence may be said to have been first suggested by the late Bishop Carr, who, fifteen years ago, felt the want of a second church at Poona, and urged its erection in this immediate neighbourhood. Ever since then Poona has been steadily increasing in size and importance, and the necessity for more church accommodation has become more and more pressing.

This has been chiefly felt by the large and increasingly important non-official and Eurasian community for whom very insufficient accommodation can be afforded in St. Mary's, in consequence of its being primarily devoted to the military.

We now hope to remove this long-standing reproach. By your Excellency's desire, and with the valuable aid and sanction of Captains Wilkins and Close, plans have been designed for a church which will, we trust, supply our present wants, and be capable of enlargement to meet the exigencies to which we must look forward.

The plans now adopted have been the result of mature deliberation, in which your Excellency, as well as the Lord Bishop, and his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, have, with kind interest, personally taken part; and we feel every hope that the church now to be commenced will prove the superior adaptability of Christian architecture to the necessities of an Indian climate. . . .

This church is intended to accommodate 300 worshippers, including a choir of 25; and is complete in itself, as suited to the ministry of the world and sacraments according to the Ritual of the Church of England. But if Poona continues to increase in the ratio of the last few years, additions will eventually have to be made to the present design, which is, in fact, only the choir (or what is commonly called the chancel) of a much larger church.

By the addition of a transept and double-aisled nave, with a tower rising over the north transept, this church would be the largest in India, and worthy to be the principal religious edifice of one of her greatest cities. It only remains for me, in accordance with the feelings of our whole community, now to request your Excellency to lay the first stone.

After this some gold, frankincense, and myrrh (three emblematical substances) were placed in a glass-stoppered bottle, with new and uncirculated coins of the latest coinage from the treasury, a copy of the "Order" used on the occasion, and a copy of the "Poona Observer" of the day. This ceremony had considerable solemnity to those who watched it. Who shall say whose hands are destined to take these articles out of their repository, and how many generations of men will have passed into the other world, and their bodies mouldered into dust before that day? The Governor put the bottle into the cavity prepared for it; and the stone, which was suspended in a gin, was then lowered into its place; his Excellency, after striking at the stone with the trowel and mallet, pronouncing with much solemnity the following words:—

"In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, we lay the foundation of the church, to be for ever consecrated to the service of Almighty God, and named in memory of Saint Paul the Apostle; that here truth, faith, and brotherly love may ever flourish and abound; and that this may be a House of Prayer for ever, to the glory and praise of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who with the Father and the Holy Ghost liveth and reigneth ever one God, world without end, Amen."

After the psalm was ended, the bishop observed that they owed a debt of gratitude to the Governor, both for his presence there, and for all he had done in this matter. This church had been projected, as His Excellency had observed, by the last bishop; but this, and in many such cases, there was always found to be great financial difficulty in carrying out the design. In the present case, when circumstances were changed, His Excellency had himself suggested building this church, and taken great interest in the design. They were grateful to him even more for the words he had spoken that evening.

His Lordship then closed the proceedings by pronouncing the Benediction, and the assembly gradually dispersed.

We should observe that the Rev. Mr. Gell, with characteristic delicacy, omitted in his statement to say that the design of the church was his own, and was prepared by him at the request of the Government of Bombay.

This ceremony was remarkable as being the first occasion on which a religious service of the kind has been performed with choral music in India. The only exception was the ceremony of consecrating the Memorial Well at Cawnpore, which was done with a great deal of proper ceremonial in February last; but on that occasion even, a metrical hymn only was sung in the open air.

As a proof of the interest taken by the non-official community in the new church, we are glad to learn that immediately after the ceremony a donation of Rs. 1,000 was made by one of them (the name not to be disclosed) towards the proposed new windows—an excellent beginning. There is no doubt that the subscription for these windows, as proposed by Mr. Gell, will be easily raised.

The stone is laid, and it remains to proceed with the building. Perhaps it might be thought unnecessary to make this remark; but the foundation-stone of a church at Belgaum was laid five years ago, and remains as it was, alone in its glory. The same thing, we believe, has happened at Aden.

The Governor presented six young trees, which were planted in two sets of three, near the north-east corner of the church, by some mistake, before the arrival of his Excellency.

The stone bears this inscription:—

First Stone laid by His Excellency
Sir Bartle Frere, K.C.B.,
A.D. 1863.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BANK OF BOMBAY.—At a special general meeting of the proprietors of the Bank of Bombay it was resolved to increase the capital of the Bank by the issue of 5,225 new shares of Rs. 1,000 each. The course of action determined on by the directors was approved by the meeting.

MORE LIBERALITY.—We are glad to learn that Mr. Bhugwandass Purshotumdass has made a very liberal donation of Rs. 10,000 to the University of Bombay, for the exclusive purpose of encouraging the study of Sanskrit. Mr. Bhugwandass has also subscribed a sum of Rs. 1,000 to the "Alexandra Native English school," which is shortly to be opened by Mr. Maneckjee Cursetjee; and Mrs. Bhugwandass has bestowed on the proposed school a five-per-cent. Government Promissory Note for Rs. 2,000, for the purpose of awarding annually out of the interest a medal in the name of Mrs. Bhugwandass to the meritorious and deserving girls.

H.M.'s 72ND REGIMENT.—We understand that this regiment, which was recently in orders to be moved to Bombay, is now to remain at Mhow till further orders, and the head-quarters of the 28th are to leave Nussurabad on the 1st of November for Bombay, possibly en route to New Zealand, should any urgent demand for troops come from that quarter.

PERSIAN SPIES.—Our Hyderabad correspondent throws some light upon the arrest, which we mentioned in our last Wednesday's issue, of suspicious characters at that station. He has ascertained that the prisoners, instead of being old mutineers, are two men evidently on a secret mission from Persia to collect information which may be of value to the ruler of that country in the event of a rupture with our Government. This confirms the announcement we made some time ago, that the nature of our political relations in that quarter is anything but satisfactory.—Sindian, Sept. 9.

PUBLISHING, BOOKSELLING, AND CIRCULATING LIBRARY COMPANY (LIMITED).—In this era of joint-stock companies, which has flooded Bombay in the course of a few months with new banks and various other projects of a more or less feasible nature, we are glad to hear of a fresh scheme of a very different character from the others, and one which is likely to commend itself all the more readily to public favour, in that it is not a new or untried scheme, but merely the extension, on a larger scale, of an already well-established business. The well-known firm of Messrs. Thacker, Vining, and Co., propose adding to their present business a new feature of an important character, viz., a circulating library on a very liberal and extended scale; converting the entire business at the same time into a joint-stock company with limited liability. The project, we think, is a very promising one; there is hardly a greater desideratum on this side of India than a good circulating library, and a company combining so popular an element with a profitable business already established, can hardly fail to be a success in the form now proposed.

EAST INDIA BANKING AND TRADING COMPANY LIMITED.—We are informed that a new company called the "East India Banking and Trading Company, Limited," has been started under the auspices of Mr. Bhugwandass Purshotumdass, Mr. Pranjevandass Hurjeevandass and two or three other merchants. It is proposed to raise a capital of Rupees twenty lacs, divided into 10,000 shares of Rs. 200 each.

THE ORIENTAL SHIPPING COMPANY have commenced business already, we understand, by the purchase of a ship in Bombay, and may shortly be expected to distinguish themselves in a similar way at home, as one of the promoters has gone to England for the purpose of making contracts for new ships and purchases of a few first-class vessels at once, so that no time may be lost in getting the company to work.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.—His Highness the Maharaja of Edur has commenced a native female school at that city. This example, it is believed, will be very influential in the Mahakantha, where his Highness takes the first rank among the native chiefs.

GOVERNMENT PROFESSOR OF LAW.—We hear that Mr. J. F. Hore has sent in his resignation of the office of professor of law in the Government Law Classes; and it is rumoured that Mr. J. P. Green, Barrister-at-Law, will succeed him.

THE BOMBAY CONTRACT AND BUILDING COMPANY.—We are glad to hear that this company, started so lately, has already got under weigh, and that in a manner that promises well for their future prosperity and success. They have secured the contract for building the Government works at Carwar (not Sedasheghur any longer), consisting of warehouses, wharves, &c., &c., and have very fair prospects of securing the contract for the projected Government works at Poonah.

NATIVE CHRISTIANS.—The Poonah Observer publishes serious charges brought by a native convert against his own kind as well as against the missionaries. Of the first he says he only knew two who sincerely tried to practice the religion they professed, and that all the others had embraced Christianity with the view of material advancement. Of the missionaries, he says they are too partial to their own converts and screen them from all their crimes, while at the same time they are excessively severe on culprits of other denominations. The worst of it is that these charges will be read throughout India, and no missionary will care to set the public mind right.

UNION BANK OF BOMBAY.—A new Bank, called the "Union Bank of Bombay," was started on the 10th inst., the promoters being Messrs. A. Brice and Co., Mr. Dhunjeebhoy Framjee, Mr. Nesserwanjee Manackjee Petit, Sorabjee Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, Esq., and Mr. Byramjee Jejeebhoy. It is proposed to raise a capital of Rs. 2,00,00,000 (two crores, or £2,000,000), to be divided into forty thousand shares of Rs. 500 each.

THE P. AND O. STEAMER "CARNATIC."—To the recent rapid passage made by the P. and O. Co.'s steamers on this side of India, must be added that of the Carnatic round the Cape. This magnificent vessel, we learn, reached Point de Galle from Southampton, a distance of 10,760 miles, in forty-eight days twenty hours; the quickest passage, we believe, ever made. Her consumption of coal averaged seventeen tons per day, which is about one-third of the quantity consumed by other ships in the company's service. She is commanded by Capt. Purchase, a gentleman well-known in Bombay, and is intended to take the place of the Simla on the Calcutta line.—Times of India.

NEW WEEKLY JOURNAL.—We observe that a new weekly journal, with the somewhat ambitious title of The Central India Times, has struggled into light and life at Nagpore. It undertakes to "constitute itself the Palladium of the just liberties of all who live under British rule, of what nation, creed, or order soever," and is about twice the size of a cambric pocket-handkerchief.

SANITARY EXPERIMENT.—The following general order has been issued:—"Government having intimated their wish that the use of carbonic acid as a deodorant and disinfectant shall be fully tried at Poona, his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief desires that Major-General Smith C.B., commanding the division, will afford every facility for testing its efficacy in the Hospital of the Royal Artillery, 4th King's Own Regiment, and 33rd Foot, under detailed instruction that will be given to the medical officers of those corps by the Deputy Inspector-General of Hospitals, her Majesty's British Forces." We hail this experiment as a judicious step in the right direction.—Madras Times.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.—The appointment of Mr. Tucker to a full seat on the bench of the High Court immediately vacates the acting appointment of Mr. Warden as one of the judges. Indeed, under the charter there can only be seven judges in all, and Sir Matthew Saussee, Sir Joseph Arnould, Mr. Couch, Mr. Kinloch Forbes, Mr. Erskine, Mr. Newton, and Mr. Westropp make up the legal complement of the bench, so that to enable Mr. Westropp and Mr. Tucker both to take their seats, the patent of one or other of them must contain a clause to the effect that it is the Queen's pleasure to have an extra judge of the High Court. There is some reason for having an extra judge for the present, owing to the great arrears of work both in the original jurisdiction and appellate sides of the Court. The barrister element is now strong in the Court. It is required by law "that not less than one-third of the judges shall be barristers." Before the nomination of Mr. Westropp and of Mr. Tucker, the barrister judges formed one half of those fully appointed or doing duty, while now—as Mr. Tucker is a member of the bar as well as of the civil service—they will form five-eighths. On the other hand, the civil service element, giving it the benefit of Mr. Tucker, to which it is entitled, will rank as one-half of the numerical strength of the bench. The civil service is also required by law to furnish not less than one-third of the numerical strength of the bench.—Bombay Gazette.

FRAUDULENT CONDUCT.—Mr. William Henry Stanley, who formerly held a commission in the Bombay army, was charged, before the Deputy-Commissioner of Lucknow, by Aga Mahomed Tahir, under section 417 of the Penal Code, for having, "on or about the 15th of April last, deceived the prosecutor by fraudulently inducing him to accept, in full of his hotel bill, a cheque for Rs. 272-12-0 on the Allahabad agent of the Agra Savings Bank, and to forego taking steps for the realisation of the said bill, well knowing that he had no account with the said bank agent, and that the cheque would be dishonoured." The cheque was dishonoured, and the trial has resulted in the accused being sentenced to simple imprisonment for three calendar months; the Court ordering, under section 44 of the Criminal Procedure Code, that the amount of the dishonoured cheque, Rs. 272-12-0, be realised by distraint; or, in default, the prisoner undergo a further period of imprisonment of one month. Mr. Stanley is accused of other grave delinquencies, which it is not necessary to mention. We trust the example of Mr. Stanley will prove a wholesome warning to certain chevaliers d'industrie not to pursue their craft in this station.—Oudh Gazette, July 25.

FORGERY BY A EUROPEAN "GENTLEMAN."—ONE OF "MASTER'S CASTE."

SOME of the cases in the High Court of Calcutta are amongst the richest sources of amusement, if not of instruction, to the European residents of that city, and occasionally afford to the educated portion of the native community the means of a momentary triumph over those Europeans who assert, and assert truly, in a general way, that the morality of Christians is vastly superior to the morality of Hindoos. The natives who are not particularly liberal and large-minded in their judgments are very easily induced to pass a sweeping censure on an entire nation on account of a single case of wrong-doing in any one individual of that nation; and when they read in the home newspapers of the trials of men as swindlers, forgers, adulterers, and burglars, and murderers, they rapidly come to the conclusion that those wicked people are fair representatives of the whole nation, forgetting that our virtues are for the most part unrecorded and unrewarded, while scarcely a single crime escapes publicity and punishment—that, in fact, the criminals are as a few hundreds to the million—that, as a general rule, English traders and mechanics are more honest than the same classes in other countries, and English gentlemen are remarkably truthful, honourable, and trustworthy.

The Calcutta natives have now a fresh opportunity to dilate on English social scandals, and sneer at English military justice, in the case of Brigadier Burney, and to comment on a case of audacious roguery on the part of an Englishman of the name of Taylor, who has mixed in the best society of Calcutta.

The case is a very curious one. Dr. John Oliver Taylor, hearing that a pilot named John Taylor had an account at the Bank of Bengal, boldly goes to the bank and asks for a cheque-book. When asked if he had funds in the bank the Doctor replied in the affirmative, and was at once supplied with the cheque-book. It is odd enough that though the pilot really had an account with the bank, no one in the institution seems to have known him personally or by sight, so that his representative had no great difficulty in personating him there. John Oliver Taylor told the people of the bank that he was formerly in the pilot service, but that he was now a doctor. At different times he sent in cheques for different amounts, and they were duly honoured. A Mr. Halsey, who is employed to pass cheques after examination, was partly thrown off his guard by having seen Dr. Taylor at Spence's Hotel, where he himself resided, and though he was a little perplexed at observing that the cheques were signed J. O. Taylor, instead of J. Taylor, when the Doctor explained that he had only lately added the "O." to his signature, he was abundantly satisfied. The roguery was at last discovered, and the criminal arrested. He was tried before Mr. Justice Norman, of the High Court of Calcutta, and pronounced guilty. The judge seemed determined to warn other Englishmen from lowering the character of their nation in the eyes of the natives. It was explained that a man's signature of his own name may be considered a forgery if intended to pass for that of another party, and to defraud him of his funds. Dr. Taylor was condemned to six years' penal servitude, which, as a contemporary rightly observes, is to a European in India nearly tantamount to a capital punishment.

SANITARY MEASURES IN INDIA.

WE gave an account some numbers back of the measures taken by Government to check the progress of fever from malaria in the Hooghly district. We are glad to learn that, though these measures were on a comparatively limited and inefficient scale, many of the afflicted villages have been saved from the further advance of what we may call the jungle plague, by the cutting down of great quantities of weeds and underwood and filling up small pits of stagnant and fetid water. It is very difficult to persuade the natives of India that the state of their health is as directly dependent upon the quality of the air they breathe as that of the food they eat. They have no fancy for neatness and cleanliness and order, either in the inside or outside of their dwellings; and even wealthy baboos, living in large pukka (brick-built) houses, seem to have no objection whatever to an open drain or pool immediately under their own windows, however unspeakably offensive it may be to the senses of the European passer-by. The Hindu traders and mechanics who live in the Chitpore-road—the greatest thoroughfare in the strictly native portion of the City of Palaces—were accustomed, till very lately, to a stagnant ditch of horrible filth in what was called a drain, on the very edge of which they sat and dined, and worked and slept, and over which they passed to and fro on a loose narrow board. They never complained of this as an inconvenience, and never dreamed that it could be prejudicial to their health. Those Europeans who know India entertain an idea that people who bathe several times a day with "Oriental scrupulosity" must be remarkably cleanly in their persons, and have a horror of all sorts of physical filth. They have, indeed, a horror of all contact with what their religion calls uncleanness, and which includes some of the most delicate luxuries, and the most immaculate articles of the toilet in the possession of the Christian heretic. But their cleanliness is rather theoretical than practical, for, speaking generally, both their persons and their dwellings are peculiarly dirty. The whitewashed walls of the apartments of natives of respectability are disgustingly soiled and disfigured with finger-marks and saliva, especially about the edges of the doors and windows. The native servants can never touch a white wall without leaving their finger-marks on it. The Hindu bathes, it is true, ten times more frequently than the European, but then he is by no means ten times cleaner for it all, for he is not, in any degree, particular as to the quality of the water he uses; nor as to what he handles immediately after the bath, so long as it involves no loss of caste. Then, again, his body is continually covered with oil, and, as he uses no soap, the old oil adheres to his skin, and infixes the dirt in every pore. The members of fashionable clubs at the West-end of London would be sorry to change their English or French cuisinier for any of the black coolies who prepare the food for the hospitable table of the Queen's representative in India. No Englishman in India could enjoy his dinner if he first saw it cooked in the outhouse, called the bawachee khannah (or kitchen). The sight of the presiding genius in that dingy and horrible apartment, and all his filthy instruments and utensils and surroundings, would effectually check the strongest appetite. How the articles come out of that hideous den at last with such an aspect of apparent cleanliness, with so much elegance and attractiveness, is, indeed, a marvel.

We are very sorry, but not at all surprised, to find that the wealthy Hindoos from whom Government had invited subscriptions for the purpose of carrying out sanitary measures in the lower part of Bengal, after putting down their names on the subscription lists, have failed to keep to their engagements. But it is with peculiar regret that we find a man like Baboo Prussono Comar Tagore setting so bad an example to his countrymen. He is a near relative of the late famous Dwarkanath Tagore, who was so English in his ideas and manners and so princely in his charities. Dwarkanath used to be regarded as our best specimen of an Anglicised Hindu. He had more manliness and decision of character, and more knowledge of life, though far less learning and philosophy than the more celebrated Rammohun Roy, who was comparatively a child in worldly matters, and was so pliable and over courteous—so much all things to all men—that when he came to England every sect of religionists, after one of their members had had a personal interview and talk with him, was satisfied that he was decidedly of their particular denomination. Lord Macaulay, who knew both these eminent men, considered Dwarkanath the most sensible man of the two. Perhaps Prussono Comar Tagore is really a much shrewder man than either. He is a peculiarly practical, ready-witted, sharp, clear-sighted man of the world, but with so little moral courage, and independence, and force of character that, with all his love of English society, and his earnest ambition to maintain an important position in it, rather than offend the religious prejudices of his own countrymen (he can hardly be supposed himself to believe in Hindoo gods and goddesses), he has renounced and disinherited his only son for having embraced the Christian creed.

The Bengal Hurkaru, of the 1st of September, states that Baboo Prussono Comar Tagore, "preferring filthiness to cleanliness, and making promises only to break them," has allowed his own tenants to perish by a miserable death rather than permit his jungles to be cleared and his foul tanks to be filled up; and that other rich, educated, and prosperous natives also have shown themselves guilty of the same heartless and stupid indifference to the welfare of their dependents. These men ought to have set a better example to others; as to the ignorant villagers, what can be expected from them when their superiors act so meanly or so insanely? The poor inhabitants of Oollah, it is stated, are so unmindful of common decency, and so deplorably ignorant of the probable effects of such conduct upon the health of the living, as to have thrown upwards of 2,000 corpses into a large marsh-pool close to their village.

BOOKS.

Tara: a Mahratta Tale. By Captain Meadows Taylor, author of the "Confessions of a Thug," &c. Three Volumes. Blackwood.

This is not an ordinary novel by any means, for ordinary novels once read are done with, but "Tara: a Mahratta Tale," may be regarded not merely as a fiction but as a collection of truths illustrative of national character, or even as something like a book of reference on matters connected with the creed, and customs, and social habits of the people of India. Captain Meadows exhibits a rare facility in making himself thoroughly at home in foreign lands, and has shown that, whether located in China or in India, he can rapidly make himself pretty intimately acquainted with matters which quite escape the notice of common observers. We do not expect that this book will have a rapid sale and very extensive circulation, but many who are pleased to study human nature in its various phases, or who take a peculiar interest in the people of India, will be glad to possess themselves of the information and instruction so pleasantly embodied in this faithful picture of Hindoo social life.

LORD CLYDE AND GENERAL VINOY.

The French journals, which refer in terms of satisfaction to the proof of affection given by Lord Clyde to his friend General Vinoy, may not be aware that, notwithstanding the jealousies produced by rivalry in war during the Crimea, many solid friendships were founded between the officers of both armies which continue to this day. The feeling which existed between Sir Colin Campbell and General Vinoy was of the strongest character. Sir Colin, when in command of the troops posted on the right flank and front of Balaklava during the winter of 1854-5, was acutely sensible of the importance and danger of his command, and for a long time after the attack of October 25 lived in constant apprehension of a sudden movement against his lines, more especially on the low ground between his left and the French corps posted in front of Kadikoi and Karani. He literally slept in his cloths, booted and spurred for weeks together, and many an alerte and alarm can be remembered by the men of the division on the long cold winter nights; but after a time he found that, quick as he might be, his allies were quite as lively; that the Zouaves of Cler and the men of the Brigade Vinoy, with their hard, energetic vieux moustache d'Afrique, were ever to be depended on, and so he ceased to be solicitous for his left. "As long as Vinoy is there, I am all right." It was on the occasion of the memorable reconnaissance in the snow-storm early in 1855, however, that his feeling towards his brother-in-arms warmed into friendship. It may be remembered it was arranged by the allied generals that a joint reconnaissance should be made at dawn on the 24th March of the Russian position along the line of the Tchernaya, and orders were sent accordingly to Sir Colin to move from his lines and undertake the task, assisted by a powerful French corps from the plateau. At night came on a fall of snow, and the French general sent over to Lord Raglan to say that, in consequence of the state of the weather, he had resolved to postpone the attempt, and had sent instructions to General Vinoy and the other brigadier not to leave camp. Aides were sent from the English head-quarters to inform Sir Colin the design was abandoned, but they did not reach his tent till long after the column had been marched off into the storm by its impatient commander, and in their search after it they only fell in with one of his staff, who was galloping wildly through the snow, and greatly excited by the spectra of Cossacks seen through the drift. It was evident that Sir Colin, depending on the assistance of the French, whom he supposed to be marching on his left, might be very seriously compromised if he fell in with the Russians in force; but the last thing he would have dreamed of doing was to send to any French general on earth for help. A staff officer at last made out Sir Colin, just as it had become evident the expedition must fail, for they had tumbled on some Russian pickets who had roused up the whole force, and advance on an invisible but entrenched enemy was impossible. The hot blood of the old soldier was aroused, and he used no measured terms to indicate his sense of the conduct by which his command had been exposed to such risk of disaster. "But, sir," continued the officer, "when General Vinoy heard you had started, he at once put his brigade in motion, and he is now pressing forward as hard as he can to your assistance. He said he would take on himself all responsibility." Sir Colin slapped his thigh exultingly. "There!" said he; "I knew it; General Vinoy is a soldier—General Vinoy is a gentleman! I knew I could trust him, no matter what happened." The fact was, however, we believe, that an officer, without Lord Clyde's knowledge, had represented to the French general that the English column might be in danger, and that the former at once, though ordered not, determined to move to his aid. The force returned re infecta, but Sir Colin cultivated the intimacy of his brother-in-arms. There were points of resemblance in the true, soldierlike, simple natures of the men. Among various little tokens of goodwill which passed between them was a pistol given by Sir Colin to Vinoy. At the crisis of the Malakhof, as Vinoy related to his friend, that pistol saved his life; it did more perhaps than that, for Vinoy, fresh from the breach, had scrambled up a mound inside the work, and was directing his men, when a Russian officer dashed at him from a casemate, and was about to cut him down, just as a bullet from the English pistol passed through his brain. "Afterwards," said Vinoy, "your pistol spoke again, and did good service. We came upon the wires of a magazine. I told the Russian engineer officer that if he did not show me at once where it was, I would shoot him."—"Mais, mon cher Vinoy, est-ce que vous parlez Russe?"—"Non, cher général, mais votre pistolet, c'est un maître des langues parfait! Oh! I assure you, he speaks every language in the world. The Russian understood him, and we found the mine." When Lord Clyde went to France, he went with Vinoy to Vichy, and the latter got up a charming banquet of Crimean officers in his honour as he was passing through Paris. "Vinoy reminds me of the old soldiers of the Empire whom I used to know in my young days; and better there were none." That was Colin Campbell's creed as to his friend; and he did not hold his heart lightly in his hand, or let it run away with his judgment.—Army and Navy Gazette.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY—Oct. 15.

(Before Mr. Commissioner Goulburn.)

RE COLONEL COOPER.

The bankrupt came up on the question of examination and discharge. He is described as on the retired list of her Majesty's military forces, of Woodfield-villas, Hurst-pierpoint, Sussex. Claims of unsecured creditors, £1,019; ditto holding security, £1,080; good debts, £650; property given up to assignees, £11; ditto in the hands of creditors, £80. The amount of his expenditure during the year next preceding his bankruptcy was £400, and during the previous year the same amount. The creditors are butchers, grocers, chemists, dairymen, wine merchants, brewers. Amongst the security creditors are Parsee merchants of Bombay, who hold as security two cashmere shawls value £80; the Law, Property, and Life Company, £60, holding a mortgage of an annuity. A debt of £1,000 is set down as due to one Russell, the balance of purchase-money of shares in the North West Bank, Meerut, which shares are worthless. The Indian Government are set down as debtors to the bankrupt for £650, for losses sustained by the colonel during the Indian mutiny. He had a pension of £505 net.

Mr. Bagley supported; there was no opposition whatever.

It appeared from the statement made that the colonel had been in the 23rd Native Infantry. His bungalow was burnt, and his family shut up in a fort for twelve months. He applied to Sir C. Wood, who referred him to the Governor-General of India. The bankrupt wrote twice, but no answer had been returned. An amount of £1,000,000 had been set aside to meet such claims as Colonel Cooper's.

The Commissioner: How long since you first applied to the Governor-General of India?—Eighteen months ago.

Mr. Sykes Goodday offered no opposition to the colonel's discharge.

The Commissioner: Let him take his order of discharge at once.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE SUEZ CANAL.—In consequence of the continued denials made through the organs of M. de Lesseps, of the right of the Suez Canal Government to interfere with that gentleman's arrangements in connection with the Suez Canal, the Porte has addressed a Vizierial letter of an important character to the Viceroy of Egypt. This communication points out that M. de Lesseps continues to ignore the indispensable conditions laid down in the official note of the Imperial Government—(1) with respect to the immediate surrender to the Government of all the bank-land on the canal; and (2) as to the limitation of the number of labourers employed to 12,000, with fixed wages at the rate of two francs a day, preparatory to the abolition of the corvée. The letter further apprises the Viceroy that, in the event of M. de Lesseps persisting in the course which he seems disposed to pursue, the Porte, in the exercise of its sovereign rights, may find itself under the necessity of carrying out the substance of Aali Pasha's note, the first step towards which may result in the suspension of the entire works of the company. Instructions have also been sent to the Turkish Ambassadors in London and Paris, for their guidance on this subject.—Levant Herald.

THE BRITISH INDIA TEA COMPANY has been announced, with a capital of £250,000, in £20 shares. Its object is to conduct tea planting in India on a large scale, and with this view a provisional purchase has been made of eight estates in the districts of Assam, Cachar, Sylhet, and Darjeeling. The estates are now in plant, and the crop for the current year is guaranteed to be fully 100,000 lbs., and 500 maunds of 82 lbs. each, of tea seed. The number of acres in plant is 2,000, and of uncleared lands, 40,000.

THE CENTRAL DARJEELING TEA COMPANY has been announced, with a capital of £75,000, in shares of £10 each. The directors propose to cultivate the tea plant and manufacture tea on three estates in the district of Darjeeling, North Bengal, lying on the slope of the Himalaya Mountains. The purchase-money is to amount to £28,000, of which one-third is to be paid in shares, and the remainder by cash instalments.

TONNAGE OF VESSELS TRADING TO INDIA, &c. —From a comparative statement just published by the East India and China Association, it appears that the number and tonnage of vessels, both British and foreign, that have entered inwards and cleared outwards with cargo, from and to places within the limits of the late East India Company's charter, from the 1st January to the 30th September, in the year 1862 and 1863, were as subjoined. The entries inwards in the former year were 891 vessels, with a tonnage of 673,739, while in the latter they were 994 vessels, of 750,021 tons—showing a balance in favour of the latter of 103 vessels and 76,282 tons. The clearances outwards were for 1862 1,195 vessels, of 817,566 tons, while for 1863 they consisted of 1,209 vessels, with a tonnage of 917,999 tons—being an increase of fourteen vessels and 100,443 tons.

PERSIAN GULF TELEGRAPH.—On Monday her Majesty's ship Tweed, laden with the last consignment of the telegraphic cable about to be laid down over a length of 1,200 miles, from the mouth of the Persian Gulf along the sea coast to Mekra, left the works of Messrs. Henley and Co., the contractors and manufacturers, at North Woolwich. The cable, which has been constructed for the India-office, under the superintendence of Lieut.-col. Stewart, of the Royal Engineers and India-office, Public Works Department, in conjunction with Sir C. Bright and Mr. Latimer Clark, the engineers and electricians, has been twelve months in process of manufacture, and is understood to be the most complete cable as yet produced in this country. The core consists of 225 lbs. of copper wire and 275 lbs. of gutta percha per nautical mile, covered with tape, and has been prepared by the contractors, in lengths of about three nautical miles, at the works of the Gutta Percha Company, in the City-road. Everything has been prepared in the way of insulation, jointing, covering, and serving by the most experienced workmen. The core is covered with Russian hemp and Stockholm tar. The iron covering for the main cable consists of twelve (No. 7 gauge) galvanised iron wires, and the iron covering for the shore end of the cable consists of twelve (No. 2 gauge) galvanised iron wires. As regards the external coating of the cable, it has been covered, after the iron wires were laid on, with two coatings of mineral pitch and Stockholm tar, and then alternately with tarred hemp and yarn, and all covered with Chatterton's compound. The entire cable, which has been manufactured at the rate of fifty nautical miles per week, has been thoroughly tested by the engineer, who, with Colonel Stewart, are to follow overland at the end of the month to commence the laying down and submersion of the line. The cargo of cable by the Tweed makes the fifth shipment within the last three months.

EXPORT OF SPECIE.—The Peninsular and Oriental steamer Ripon, which left yesterday (Tuesday), took out to India, China, and Hobson's Bay, £202,034; of this total £134,355 is silver, and £67,699 gold. The amount is thus distributed:—£4,869 to India; £133,599 China and the Straits; £20,400 for Alexandria; £40,165 for Mauritius and Ceylon; and £3,000 for Hobson's Bay.

MR. EPHRAIM MOSELY'S IMPROVEMENT in the CONSTRUCTION of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES, on an INDIA-RUBBER BASE, are secured by Letters Patent, dated December, 1862, whereby the continual outlay of new teeth is avoided, alterations from the absorption of the gums, or any other cause, being easily remedied, and the first outlay no greater than for ordinary kinds. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted as under:—It consists of one continuous piece of Prepared India-rubber. The Artificial Teeth present an uniformly even surface to the action of the tongue, preventing lodgment of food and all accretions, so much complained of in the present system. No gold or any other metal being required, all springs, wires, and fastenings are wholly unnecessary; sharp edges are avoided, a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity hitherto wholly unsatisfactory, and a fit perfected with the most unerring accuracy, are secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums. The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the prepared india-rubber; and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may be retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being at the same time provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

MR. HOWARD, Surgeon-Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs, wires, or ligatures. They so perfectly resemble the natural teeth as not to be distinguished from the originals by the closest observer. They will never change colour or decay, and will be found superior to any teeth ever before used. This method does not require the extraction of roots, or any painful operation, will support and preserve teeth that are loose, and is guaranteed to restore articulation and mastication. Decayed teeth stopped, and rendered sound and useful in mastication. 52, Fleet-street. At home from Ten till Five.

TENDER & DECAYED TEETH STOPPED

with ANODYNE CEMENT, which instantly allays the most violent pain, and fills up cavities, however large, and answers where every other kind of stopping has failed. Prepared only by Mr. ALFRED JONES, Surgeon-Dentist to their late R.H. the Princess Augusta and Duchess of Gloucester, the late Louis Philippe, and the ex-Royal Family of France, 64, Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square. At home from 11 till 4. No connection with any person practising in the same profession.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The Manufacturing

Dentist, being the actual maker throughout, can with certainty insure comfort and satisfaction even where others have failed, and at a much lower charge. Mr. B. BRADSHAW, for several years Manufacturing Dentist to the Profession, 20, Great Portland-street, Oxford-street (Circus).

N.B.—Mr. BRADSHAW begs to say that no charge whatever is made by him unless satisfaction is given.

RUPTURES.—BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER TRUSS is allowed by upwards of two hundred medical gentlemen to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of HERNIA. The use of a steel spring, so hurtful in its effects, is here avoided, a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected, and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit), forwarded by post, on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the manufacturer.

Mr. JOHN WHITE, 228, Piccadilly, London.

Price of a Single Truss—16s., 21s., 26s. 6d., and 31s. 6d.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Morlan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.

23, Cannon-street West, St. Paul's, London; and opposite the Angel, Islington.

SARSAPARILLA.

WILKINSON'S (late BRIDGE'S) ESSENCE OF FLUID EXTRACT OF RED JAMAICA SARSAPARILLA is appreciated for its Purity, and marked superiority, daily prescribed by the Faculty for Impurities of the Blood, Affections of the Liver, Constitutional Debility, Attenuation of Body, as an Alternative Medicine at the Changes of the Seasons, and for freeing the system from the effects of Mercury.

In India and the Colonies it is extensively used to prevent taking complaints incidental to Tropical Climates, and as a renovator of the system after Sickness invaluable.

"A superior preparation, that may always be relied on."—Sir Astley Cooper.

"We are in every respect satisfied with it."—Lancet.

"We recommend your Sarsaparilla as the best."—Medical Review.

"Latterly, in consequence of much debility, &c., subsequent to Cholera, I have freely used 'Bridge's' Sarsaparilla myself, with complete benefit and success."—J. Poett, F.R.C.S.

Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter pints. One pint is equal to eight pints of the ordinary preparations.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The public are cautioned against cheap preparations of Sarsaparilla, which, instead of being what they profess, are nothing but a decoction of common herbs, sweetened with molasses, and flavoured with American Winter Green. The genuine has "Thos. Wilkinson (late Bridge and Co.), 270, Regent-street, London," engraved on each bottle.

AGREEABLE SEIDLITZ POWDER in one bottle, protected by a case with measure and spoon included. This preparation is highly recommended, not only as a Mild Aperient, but to allay Fever, Thirst, &c.

AROMATIC TINCTURE of QUINODINE for the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria. No person exposed to the influence of or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for if taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria. Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by Thos. Wilkinson (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Regent-street, London, W.

COUGHS, ASTHMA, AND INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION ARE EFFECTUALLY CURED BY

KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES.

JUDGED BY THE IMMENSE DEMAND,

this UNIVERSAL REMEDY now stands the first in public favour and confidence; this result has been acquired by the test of fifty years' experience. These Lozenges may be found on sale in every British Colony, and throughout India and China they have been highly esteemed wherever introduced. For COUGHS, ASTHMA, and all affections of the Throat and Chest, they are the most agreeable and efficacious remedy.

Prepared and sold in Boxes, Tins, and Bottles of various sizes by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, &c., 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London. Sold retail by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the World.

N.B.—To prevent spurious imitations, please to observe that the words "KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES" are engraved on the Government Stamp of each Box, without which none are genuine.

BLAIR'S GOUT and RHEUMATIC PILLS.

This preparation is one of the benefits which the science of modern chemistry has conferred upon mankind; for during the first twenty years of the present century to speak of a cure for the Gout was considered a romance; but now the efficacy and safety of this medicine is so fully demonstrated, by un-elicited testimonials from persons in every rank of life, that public opinion proclaims this as one of the most important discoveries of the present age. These Pills require no restraint of diet or confinement during their use, and are certain to prevent the disease attacking any vital part. Sold at 1s. 1d. and 2s. 9d. per Box, by all Medicine Vendors.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS and OINTMENT.

INDIGESTION.—DISORDER OF THE LIVER.—No fact in medical knowledge is better established than that the chief source of all morbid states, whether of body or mind, is a deranged state of digestion, usually originating in the liver. Holloway's Pills speedily regulate this function. In cases where delicacy of constitution render it undesirable to take many pills, the same healthful effects may be carried out, without debilitating, by rubbing Holloway's Ointment thoroughly over the pit of the stomach and right side at least twice a day; no pain or inconvenience attends this treatment. Its merits in vanquishing pain at the stomach, flatulency, and imperfect digestion, have been fully appreciated by the public in all parts of the globe for the last twenty-six years.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

AMONGST his other "fantastic tricks before high Heaven," Sir Hugh Rose has contrived to excite the disgust and indignation of Brigadier-General Sir Neville Chamberlain, K.C.B., to such an unbearable degree that that high-spirited, gallant, and honourable officer has resigned his command of the Punjab Irregular Force. Sir Neville Chamberlain's chief cause of complaint against the Commander-in-Chief is his having made use of a strictly private communication for official purposes. There is literally no limit to Sir Hugh Rose's squabbles and embarrassments, all owing to his utter unfitness to regulate the social economy of an army, which he can manage so nobly in the field. The high authorities at home are, no doubt, reluctant to disgrace so gallant and successful a soldier for his gross want of temper, judgment, and discretion, as an administrator of military law, in "the piping times of peace," which he contrives to turn into a period of domestic war.

The Onde Gazette has the following little paragraph:—"Another interesting case for the lovers of scandal is likely to furnish work for the gentlemen of the long robe, and the Divorce Court. Rumour whispers that the wife of a field officer, daughter of a distinguished admiral, well known for his services during the Crimean war, has leaved with a gay and gallant Colonel of Hussars." A contemporary gives the names of the parties as Mrs. Thompson, wife of Major Thompson, of H.M.'s 54th, and Colonel Bush, of H.M.'s 7th Hussars. The lady is said to be ten years older than her seducer.

Mr. Frere has introduced into the Legislative Council, now at Poona, a Bill for the relief of insolvent debtors, intended chiefly for the benefit of Natives. It will give to district judges the power of Insolvency Commissioners. In one respect it makes a most beneficial change in Hindoo law. By that law, as sometimes interpreted, a man is liable for the debts of his deceased father, with interest, however little he may have received by way of inheritance from him; and for the debts of his grandfather without interest. Mr. Frere is, however, disposed to consider this a religious or moral obligation merely, and not a legal one, and sets it aside, making the son responsible for the father's debts only to the extent of the assets received by inheritance. He also proposes to set aside a curious provision by which, under the Hindoo law, a man who marries a widow is liable to the debts of her former husband. The Bill was read a first time, and referred to a select committee, to report next year. It will have a most beneficial effect in rescuing many unfortunate people from the greedy grasp of native money lenders; one of whom, Mr. Frere said, had charged interest at the rate of 1,500 per cent. per annum.

We gave in our last number a brief and imperfect statement of the murderous attack on Mrs. Macquoid, at Ellichpoor, the wife of Captain Macquoid, who was absent on leave at Bombay. The several reports of the affair vary very considerably, but from a letter from Ellichpoor, dated Sept. 8th, we now learn that the Mahomedan servant who attacked the lady so brutally was maddened by a spirit of revenge, he having been ordered to be slipped for having smoked ganja in the lady's bungalow. The man took advantage of his master's absence to gratify his vengeance. He entered the lady's bedroom and cut and hacked her with a sword in so frightful a manner that it is wonderful how she escaped with her life. Her ayah's screams brought a syce to the poor lady's assistance, but not before her body was covered with wounds, her thigh almost cut through, and the bone broken. She is said, however, to be likely to recover. The syce who came to her aid showed no slight pluck. He plunged a spear into the body of the Mahomedan. The thrust was fatal, and the dead body of the man was dragged to some distance from the house, and burnt by sweepers.

The Overland Bengal Hurkaru thinks the Sittana fanatics are likely to prove more troublesome than was at first anticipated, and gives the following paragraph from an up-country paper; there is no date to the extract:—

"An urgent requisition was received by the Major-general commanding the Lahore division, by telegram on Thursday morning, to despatch the 3rd Sikh Infantry to reinforce the troops that have been already sent to the frontier to overawe the Sittana fanatics, and the regiment consequently marched past the city of Lahore en route to its destination on Friday morning, within twenty-four hours after receiving orders."

If Lord Elgin be as fond of state and show as our Harry the Eighth, he is anticipating with delight the prominent part he will perform on the Field of the Cloth of Gold at Lahore. We shall no doubt obtain glowing descriptions of the brilliant scene which will be presented to so many thousands of admiring eyes this cold season, and as a mere spectacle it will no doubt be something memorable, and will perhaps furnish rich materials to some British romance writer who will venture on the bold attempt to make India interesting to readers at home. The camp of the Governor-general is to leave Kolka on the 1st of October. It is expected to reach Sealkote about the 28th of the month. The Governor-general will then receive, in grand durbars, the Jumnoo, or Cashmere Maharajah. The camp will be at Peshawur early in December. From there it will proceed to Lahore, the proposed scene of so much gorgeous finery and State and diplomatic meetings and military reviews. There, also, the Governor-general will open the Agricultural Exhibition, which will be thronged with people of almost all nations, and present a dazzling variety of national costumes. At the great durbars some of the leaders of the Punjab nobility will be presented with Orders of the Star of India and of the Bath.

It has been officially intimated that for the future soldiers' necessities will be supplied to the troops in India by the Indian Government. This refers to such as will have to be imported from England. Most of these articles can be procured locally, and the Commander-in-Chief points out the advantages of this mode of obtaining them. Besides the great saving of time, and perhaps of expense, the soldier will always be better satisfied with anything purchased by himself, or within his own knowledge. It may also be made the powerful means of developing regimental workshops. For such articles as cannot otherwise be procured requisition must be made on England. It is recommended that soldiers should be permitted to purchase the articles they individually require themselves in the bazaars wherever practicable, but under the supervision of a non-commissioned officer.

The annual Invaliding Boards at Calcutta and Mooltan have been abolished. Divisional Invaliding Boards, to be assembled at stations occupied by European troops, will, in future, examine all men proposed to be sent to England either for change of climate or discharge. The divisional boards are to be invariably presided over by a Deputy Inspector-general.

The Honourable Mr. Maine has prepared a Bill to improve the administration of justice in India. It is proposed by him that something like the present system of Small Cause Courts should be spread all over India. The jurisdiction will be up to £50, and in some cases £100. The Bill will provide an immediate remedy against breach of contract, and the High Court of Bengal will send its own judges on circuit to watch the proceedings of the district courts.

In Afghanistan, the Ameer was near Cabul, and in a personal interview "patched up" a friendship with Azim Khan.

An Exhibition of the Arts and Industry of Oude, to be held at Lucknow, will open after those of Bengal and the Punjab.

The Bishop of Calcutta and Sir Charles Trevelyan have headed a movement to raise from all parts of India a subscription for a grand Memorial Hall, bearing the name of Dr. Duff, the missionary. It is to be erected in Calcutta, and to be devoted to educational meetings, lectures, &c. £15,000 will be required for the purpose. The hall is to be in Carrara marble, in imitation of the famous Maison Carrée of Nîmes.

The Bengal section of the East India Railway has obtained a net profit, during the half-year ending June 30, of £218,270.

The Government are commencing the preparations for the political mission which is to be sent into Bhootan in the ensuing cold weather. The military escort for the mission is to consist of fifty picked men, volunteers, from the 25th Regiment Punjab N.I. at Barrackpore, and a draft of sappers and miners at Darjeeling.

The steamer Armenian, taken up for the conveyance of part of H.M.'s 43rd L.I. to New Zealand, will embark 350 men of the regiment and eight officers, under the command of Major Colville, the junior major of the corps; the remainder, including H.M.'s 68th Regt., following in the Aratoon Apar, under the command of Lieut.-colonel Booth.

JAPAN.

PARIS, Oct. 28.

The Opinion Nationale of this evening asserts that despatches have been received from Japan, representing that the English have made some attacks on the Japanese, which were unsuccessful. The vessels destroyed some barques, but the forts maintained their fire to the last. "The English," says the Opinion Nationale, "were obliged to withdraw without having obtained the required satisfaction. The Japanese displayed great courage and perfect discipline, and absolutely refuse to pay the indemnity."

THE BETHUNE SOCIETY AND DR. DUFF.

On Thursday, the 17th of September, there was held an extraordinary meeting of this society to "take into consideration the best means of commemorating the services rendered by its late president, the Rev. A. Duff, D.D., LL.D." The theatre of the Medical College was crowded to suffocation. No less than 600 souls were present, and among them were some of the highest officials of the State—our able Finance Minister being of the number. All classes of the community were fairly represented, and the proceedings were highly interesting. The chair was taken by Rajah Pertaap Chunder Sing Bahadoor, one of the vice presidents of the society, who in a short but appropriate speech explained the object of the meeting, as soon as the secretary had read Dr. Duff's letter resigning into the hands of the members, in consequence of ill-health, his office of president. By the first resolution, which was moved by the Hon. Justice Shumbhoo Nauth Pundit in a calm, dignified speech, and seconded by Dr. Chevers in an eloquent one, the meeting desired "to place on record the deep concern and sympathy" with which the members had received the resignation of their president, and "to express an earnest hope and prayer for his restoration to health and usefulness."

The second resolution proposing an address to the rev. gentleman was moved by Baboo Wootendro Mohun Tagore, in a neat speech, and seconded by Baboo Greesh Chunder Mitter in the most feeling speech delivered on the occasion. The address is an able document, and expresses in terse and eloquent language the gratitude of the members. But able as it is, it is only an attempt at a summary of what Dr. Duff has done for the society. Baboo Greesh Chunder very justly observed that this address was but an imperfect record of the services of the rev. gentleman. One of the principal objects which Dr. Duff had in view during his incumbency as president of the society was to promote a friendly intercourse between the educated native and the educated European; and this object we were told had been in a great measure attained.

The third resolution was to the effect that a fund be raised for the purpose of commemorating the highly successful presidentship of Dr. Duff by a portrait. It was moved by Baboo Greesh Chunder Ghose with his usual eloquence, though its effect was somewhat marred by the theatrical motions of the speaker, and a repetition of the same sentiments in almost the same words. But there can be no doubt that his gratitude to Dr. Duff was sincere, for he observed that the Rev. gentleman's services could not be adequately commemorated even by a statue of gold. Baboo Greesh Chunder was seconded by the Rev. Lal Beharee Dey, who made the most sensible speech delivered on the occasion. One of the happiest expressions used by this speaker was, that Dr. Duff was "a living martyr."

The fourth resolution, proposing a committee of the gentlemen who are to act as trustees of the fund above referred to, was moved by Cowar Hurrendra Krishna, and seconded by Dr. Tamez Khan. As president of the section of female improvement the Cowar very appropriately observed that had Dr. Duff remained in the country ten or twelve years more, the females of Bengal would have assembled, like the males that night assemble, to do honour to the rev. gentleman.

The fifth resolution, proposing that Dr. Duff be elected an honorary member of the Bethune Society, was moved by Baboo Degumber Mitter in a few pregnant sentences, the most remarkable of which was "that in doing honour to Dr. Duff the members of the Bethune Society were doing honour to themselves." Baboo Degumber was seconded by Baboo Koylas Chunder Bose, the able secretary of the society, who delivered one of the sweetest speeches ever heard in the halls of the Bethune Society.

From the foregoing summary of the proceedings of the evening our readers will be able to gather that the meeting was a singular success, and we beg to congratulate the promoters of the movement on the fact. Dr. Duff will no doubt be gratified to learn that his services are duly appreciated by those over whom he so ably presided; and although a portrait is by no means a suitable memorial, yet, when he comes to know in what spirit this tribute to his successful presidentship has been proposed, he cannot but regard it in the light of a statue of marble or gold.

MR. BEADON AND THE HIGH COURT.

The Friend of India is naturally and excusably jubilant over the "wiggling" administered to the Lieutenant-governor of Bengal by her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, in reference to his Honour's disrespectful treatment of the Judges of the High Court. The charges brought by the High Court against the Lieutenant-governor were twofold. In the first place, the Judges complain that after consulting them as to the propriety of extending a pardon to Joykissen Mookerjee, he acted upon his own judgment without waiting for their reply, but not without indulging in a sneer at their assumed dilatoriness. In the second place, his Honour is charged with attempting to bring the High Court into contempt by referring to them on trifling cases through a mere docket forwarded by an Under-Secretary. And when the Judges of the High Court vindicated their dignity and independence, and reminded the Lieutenant-governor that he had at his right hand a Legal Remembrancer and Government Pleaders, Mr. Beadon, instead of admitting his error, mounted the high horse, and insisted on having a Minister of Justice for his own exclusive and particular use. The Government of India, however, declined to foster his Honour's too exalted notions as to his relations with the High Court, which was declared to be in no way subordinate to the Bengal Government, as its predecessor the Sudder Court undoubtedly had been. This decision is thoroughly approved of by Sir Charles Wood, who expresses himself in these clear and explicit terms:—

"I have to express my entire concurrence with your Government, and with the Judges of the High Court, that it is highly expedient that the attention of the Court should not be distracted from purely judicial matters by being called upon to express extra-judicial opinions upon questions of law and practice." In two of these cases, I am of opinion that there was no necessity for making any reference to the Court at all. In the other case of the reference from Bombay, the required information might have been procured from the Remembrancer of Legal Affairs; but if it was thought better to get it direct from the High Court, there is no doubt that a letter addressed to the Chief Justice by the Lieutenant-Governor, or to the proper officer of the Court by his secretary, would have been acknowledged in a manner quite to the Lieutenant-Governor's satisfaction.

"I observe that the mode of communication by docket in addressing the High Court was ordered by the Lieutenant-governor to be discontinued as soon as he was informed of the Court's objection to it. In doing so he acted properly. The Judges of the High Court ought to be addressed in the same manner as the Judges of the Supreme Court were addressed by the Government. The order of the Lieutenant-governor in at once directing its discontinuance would have satisfied the Judges that the mode of address of which they complain did not imply, as observed by the Lieutenant-governor, any want of respect for them or disregard of the dignity belonging to their office, had the Lieutenant-governor frankly communicated to the Court the nature of the instructions of the 16th September, 1863, to which he refers in his Minute of the 16th March last.

"I cannot discover in these proceedings any sufficient reason for the appointment of a Minister of Justice. The High Court, while declining to furnish the Lieut.-governor with extra-judicial opinions, has expressed its readiness to give him all the assistance in its power in cases in which he may feel a real difficulty, after giving them his personal consideration, provided they can do so consistently with their own duty. The correspondence at pp. 174 to 189, 194 to 201, and 288 to 294 of the abstract of Lieut.-governor's proceedings for the month of March last, which has just been received, manifests an unwillingness in the Court to recognise the authority of the Lieut.-governor, or to afford him the necessary assistance to enable him to carry on the important functions of the Executive Government in connection with the administration of civil and criminal justice in the provinces subject to his authority.

The Court draws a distinction between the judicial and the executive branches of the administration; and while it declines, very properly, to act extra-judicially, it is ready to afford all the assistance in its power in promoting the efficiency of the supervision and control over the subordinate Courts, which form, as you observe, a very important part of the duties of the Lieut.-governor."

We further learn from our Serampore contemporary that a third casus belli arose very shortly before the receipt of this despatch. Through some extraordinary hallucination or fit of ill-temper, his Honour is represented to have accused the High Court of allowing its business to fall into arrears. So far, however, is this from being the case that, if the Friend be rightly informed, "there will not be by next January work sufficient for all the judges." When the High Court commenced its labours, it took over arrears from the Sudder Court to the extent of 1,060 regular, 4,354 special, and 383 miscellaneous appeals. In two years all this enormous mass of litigation will have been disposed of, and nothing will remain to be done but the current business that surges up day by day. Can Mr. Bendon say as much for any department that is actually under his own control?—Bengal Hurkaru.

THE NEW CENTRAL STRATEGIC STATIONS IN INDIA.

Only two things are yet lacking to complete the administrative revolution caused by the mutiny of Fifty-Seven—a reform of the Judicial Service and Courts as distinguished from the Law itself which has been already much improved, and a complete reorganisation of our military position in the peninsula. Lord Elgin has it in his power to win a reputation equal to that of any of his predecessors in days of peace, by putting these two stones in the great arch of administrative reform, for he has colleagues well fitted and willing to assist him in both, as Mr. Maine and Sir Charles Trevelyan. Of the two reforms, the latter is by far the more important. It has been well said that the English in India ought to imitate the Normans, who kept the keys of military power in their own hand; while this principle is tempered by another derived from our Saxon ancestors, to preserve and extend the rights of the people. A stable and perfect military system in India means peace and light taxation to all her millions, who would be again, as they were a century ago, the first victims of anarchy and war; while it secures for the English ruler easy finance, a rapidly growing civilisation in Asia, and an increased prestige in Europe. Every circumstance urges the present Government of India to an immediate and liberal consideration of the strategic position of our army. There is peace, and there is long likely to be peace, within our borders. There is a large surplus of revenue for a second time since the mutiny, and every probability that that surplus will annually exceed its predecessor. A Royal Commission, after nearly five years' patient study, and after the most faithful collection of evidence from the obscurest stations in India, has reported in language at once emphatic and appalling that, with a few exceptions, every military cantonment in India defies the simplest sanitary laws. Above all, Lord Dalhousie's trunk railway system is fast hastening to completion, and a net-work of road and tramway feeders is about to connect every part of India with this base. Recognising these facts, a sum of three hundred thousand pounds was assigned in the last Budget for the erection of barracks for English soldiers at central strategic stations, and one of the ablest military engineers in India, Colonel Crommelin, C.B., who has left his mark on Lucknow for ever, has been appointed to the special duty of projecting the necessary works.

It is impossible to over-estimate the military and political importance of the railway system of India. That far-sighted statesman, Lord Dalhousie, when he planned the triangular lines, as they have been called, may not, any more than successors who had better opportunities of judging, have anticipated the events of Fifty-Seven. But we know that he did subordinate commercial and all other considerations, in planning the course of the railways, to that of their military value. He, as well as his predecessor Lord

Hardinge, knew what it was to create and then re-inforce an army fighting for empire north of the Sutlej. None had remonstrated so bitterly as he against that transfer of English troops from India to the Crimea, which precipitated the revolt in Oudh and lengthened the early campaigns in the mutiny. He foresaw, what the amalgamation of the armies has brought about, that the Indian army would thenceforth be looked on as the reserve of England during a continental war, and he was eager to make up for a weak European force by such strategic superiority as only railways could render possible. And when the mutiny came, the contingency against which he had done his best to provide, was only too bloodily experienced. The Sonthal war had thrown back the railway works in the Gangetic valley more than a year, but his short and most successful branch to Raneeunge made that the chief base from which to operate first against Arrah and then against Cawnpore and Lucknow. Had the trunk railways been pushed on as he wished, it is not too much to say that the mutiny of Meerut might never have risen into the magnitude of a rebellion, from the Sutlej to the Betwa on the south and the Gunduck on the east. Who does not remember the half-despairing cry of Sir Henry Lawrence to Lord Canning just a fortnight after the Meerut massacre?—"It is impossible to place a wing of Europeans in Cawnpore in less time than twenty-five days; the Government dawk and the dawk companies are fully engaged in carrying a company of the 84th to Benares at the rate of eighteen men a day; the bullock train can take a hundred men a day at the rate thirty miles a day." As it was, had Neill arrived an hour later Benares would have fallen. And what thoughts are excited by the fact that had railway works been only one year more forward, the brave Tenth would not have been butchered at Dinapore in an ambush; and the memorials which stand on Wheeler's entrenchment and over the Well at Cawnpore would have been trophies of a rescued garrison and reunited families.

We allude to these things that the importance of the trunk railway system as a military base may not be undervalued, in days when the horrors of Fifty-Seven seem to be as much forgotten as the Black Hole tragedy, and less cared for than the Cabul disasters. To listen to the thoughtless attacks of would-be financiers on the five per cent. guarantee, one would suppose that for railways alone is due all that has ever been mistaken in Bengal civilian finance. Cheaply have we purchased future security at the trifling cost of the temporary loan of a few millions of interest. And when we look at the present condition of the trunk lines we are forced to the belief that, up to this time, Government has been indifferent to their political value. Not a sod of the great links between Delhi and Lahore, and Mooltan and Kotree, has yet been cut, nor has the latter been even sanctioned. While great efforts are made to complete a branch from Bhosawal by Omrawuttee to Nagpore, the Thull Ghaut works are incomplete, and for all the energy that is shown one would suppose nothing is being done beyond the present G. I. Peninsula terminus of Chalisgaom, while it will be three years before Allahabad is bound by an iron tie to Jubulpore. Worse than even these, perhaps—for the Deccan is now the only internal cause of anxiety—Madras is still separated from Bombay by nearly the whole breadth of the peninsular, and discussion still goes on whether the line should run from Arcconum to Sholapore through Hyderabad, as if the question admitted of a moment's doubt. Is it already forgotten that the auxiliary force supplied by South India in 1857-58 was just one year in marching to the Jumna?

From Rajmahal or Sahebgunge to Lahore and Mooltan every great railway station must be made a strong fort. What the Austrians are in Lombardy as a military power to curse, the English must be in India with their Railway Quadrilaterals to bless. It would require a military statesman with the genius of a Napoleon, the skill of a Vauban, and the sanitary experience of a Sir Ranald Martin, to lay down for ever, and carry despotically into effect, a great series of strategic lines. The first none of our military men may possess, but Sir W. Mansfield and Sir Hope Grant have had experience of the mutiny, and, whatever else Sir Hugh Rose may be, no one has seriously questioned his soldierly dash through Central India. For the rest there are in the Indian Engineers and the Medical Services more scientific ability, and more practical experience for a duty of this kind, than any army in the world has ever manifested, for where is the army that has had such a career as theirs? Connected with the great railway lines there are the neighbouring hill stations, at which the Royal Commission recommend one-third of the army to be always stationed. Darjeeling will soon be a day's march from the Ganges—a tramway would make it three hours—and like an eagle in its eyrie that station is so placed as to watch Nepaul, Thibet and Bhootan. Lucknow must be connected with Cawnpore, and thence to Fyzabad and Napaul there should be an iron path to another sanitarium, such as we have often urged should be there established. Allahabad is being made the most impregnable strategic position in the land. To the united paradise of Dehra and Landour a tramway would soon convey the troops from Agra and Delhi. Already Dalhousie is close to Umritsur, and the railway would soon put it en rapport with Mooltan and desert Sind. What is true of the Calcutta and Kurrahee trunk line is true of all, for that from Allahabad to Bombay and that from Bombay to Madras pass through Ghauts where, at a trifling but healthy altitude, military colonisation may follow with slow footsteps the progress which, we trust, will soon dot the Himalayas with English homes.—Friend of India.

ENGLAND'S RESPONSIBILITY FOR INDIA.

Conservatism of the most obstructive character is the rule which guides Indian administration in England. The debate in the House of Commons on the motion of Mr. Arthur Mills, for the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire whether any and what alterations may be advantageously adopted in the Act of 1858 which constituted the Home Government of India, resulted in eliciting the fact that even Lord Stanley is satisfied with the present constitution of the Council for India. It is well-known that when he prepared the Act he was very doubtful of the propriety of disqualifying the members from obtaining seats in Parliament, and it has been said by his friends since that he was convinced both the Council and Parliament would benefit by the presence of a few members of the former in the latter. This belief is now dissipated. With that freedom from prejudice and party ties which distinguishes him, Lord Stanley declared he saw no reason why the Act of 1858 should be considered final. But "the Council were the confidential advisers of the Minister, chosen for their knowledge of Indian affairs, and not from party motives, and difficulties might arise if they were to have seats in the House." Sir E. Colebrooke, a name of Indian reputation, was the only speaker who, besides Colonel Sykes, wished to see the Council of India strengthened by the members having seats in Parliament, which he thought would not tend to weaken the just authority of the Secretary of State.

The first point to be settled in this discussion was not even raised in express terms in the debate—whether the Secretary for India should have a Council at all. We believe that every official in India, from the viceroy downwards, and every non-official interested in India, both on the spot and at home, except the Exeter-hall party, would gladly see the Council superseded by a few under-secretaries. This is the opinion of the one English journal which understands Indian affairs, and it is the expressed belief of Lord Palmerston, who knows better than any other statesman the art of governing. Were there no Council, the official thinks there would be no insolent and vexatious despatches, and the Indian landholder and Manchester spinner would more easily carry their point were the buffer of a dozen old Indians, who know nothing of the present state of India, removed. We confess that we sympathise much with this view, for we hold that in proportion to the extent of home interference with India, after sending us good rulers, is the amount of risk to the empire. But, acknowledging that nothing could be worse than the administration of the present Secretary for India and his Council, in which the only three independent members have been silenced, we must not forget that Lord Stanley's administration helped by the same Council was most beneficial, and that half the bad effects of the present home administration will be removed on Sir Charles Wood's departure from office. We believe that the danger of ruling India, even through Sir Charles Wood and the present coerced Council, is considerably less than it would be were there no Council at all. If the Council is a buffer against India, it is also a buffer against the Ministry of the day for India, and the time may not be far distant when we shall find it to be so.

There must, for the sake of India, as well as in accordance with the constitutionalism of England, be some authority to control the Minister's management of the finances, and had eight out of the fifteen members of the Council done their duty, the Mysore family would have been led to the law-courts for a decision on their preposterous claim, instead of being paid more than half-a-million out of a treasury described by the then Indian Chancellor of the Exchequer as within a few days of insolvency. It is to the prevention of those influences which caused the fifteen members, save a Spartan three, to sacrifice the interests they were appointed to protect, and not to the abolition of the Council, that reformers should direct their energy. What is true of finance is equally so of patronage, and excessive Crown influence, and unblushing Horse Guards' jobbery. The legal power of the Council may not be great, and it ought not to be so great as to prevent an imperial measure sanctioned by the country. But the very existence of the Council, the very fact, for instance, of such a strong protest as that against the amalgamation of the armies, accomplishes an important end. In the constitution under which India is governed, the Viceroy and his advisers may be considered as a House of Commons, taking all initiative measures and managing all details; the Council as a House of Lords, acting as the ballast, and the Secretary for India as the Crown. Never were such words of wisdom uttered regarding India as Mr. John Stuart Mill's—that nothing can be worse for India than an English Cabinet Minister who is thinking of English, not Indian, politics. The only mode in which England can govern India with any chance of success is "through a delegated body of a comparatively permanent character." But this body should differ from the court of directors in the infusion of English influences, so that Indian experience may see that the most enlightened methods of administration are wisely adapted to India.

How, then, should the Council be improved? Clearly it ought to retain the two great advantages of the Court of Directors which it has superseded—the members should have the right of standing for Parliament, and should hold office for only a limited period. Lord Stanley, with his usual fairness, admitted that the difficulties which he dreaded from members of the Council having seats in the House, had, to a great extent, been avoided by the moderation and good sense of the old directors who had seats in Parliament. If these difficulties were slight in the case of directors such as Mr. R. D. Mangles, who were always badgered and always complaining, they would be much less with men like Sir John Lawrence, Mr. Willoughby, and Colonel Durand. If Sir C. Wood's intercourse with his Council had been so very harmonious as he describes, and if it is as true as we know it to be incorrect that these differences, four in number in four years, "occurred on the most trivial and unimportant matters," why object to the presence in the House of as many as could afford to induce constituencies to send them there? This disqualification reacts on the Council itself, for no Anglo-Indian who seeks a career and has a little money would bury himself in the little back parlour at Westminster, where the life is very much that in a dull slub, when he could get a seat in the Commons. If the responsibility of Parliament for India is not to be a fiction, if the Minister is not to be as absolute except in finance as if he had no Council, if England is not to wash its hands of its greatest dependency except when some great rebellion awakes it to the wrong which it has done, the most experienced Anglo-Indians must not be shut out of the great legislature of the nation. Since the Court of Directors have ceased to exist, the Indian debates in the Commons have been failures, and statesmanship and eloquence in this as in the foreign policy of England have found an arena in the Lords.

Finally, each member should hold office for only five years. India is making greater progress than any other country, because it was more backward than any other. As little should the majority of the Council consist of men who know nothing of the country since 1857, as the rule be passed that no one should be eligible for Parliament who was not of age before the Reform Bill. Even Sir John Lawrence, whose proper place is the House of Lords, has done injury by his authoritative and uncorrected views on our land policy, derived solely from the exceptional state of things in the Punjab and the much-condemned, famine-inviting, and pauperising system of Thomason in the North-West. To these two reforms we would add a third, which was proposed in the House of Commons in 1858, of giving at least one English merchant or manufacturer like Mr. Crawford, Mr. Bazley, or Mr. Baxter, and two influential non-officials from India like Mr. Scott of Bombay and Mr. Mackinlay or Mr. Bullen of Calcutta, seats in the Council. But to secure this, and as the only means except another mutiny to awaken England to a sense of its responsibility for India, the members of Council ought to have seats in Parliament.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE CLERGY IN THE PUNJAB.—The Lahore Chronicle furnishes us with some startling facts in connection with clergymen of the Church of England in the service of the Government of the Punjab. The entire number attached to that province is twenty, of whom five are chaplains, fourteen assistant chaplains, and one missionary. Of this number eleven are non-resident at Hill sanatoriums, and the important stations of Ferozepore, Lahore, Umritsur, Jhelum, and Abbottabad, are left without the "benefit of clergy." Surely this state of things demands immediate action on the part of the bishop. However necessary a brief holiday at a hill station may be, it is vitally important that some provision should be made to supply the places of those clergymen who are absent from their duties. As it is, large and populous stations are, according to our contemporary, left wholly unprovided for in the matter of spiritual advice.—Hurkaru, Sept. 19.

THE SITTANA FANATICS.—The Hurkaru, of Sept. 19, has the following:—"The Sittana fanatics are likely to prove more troublesome than was at first anticipated, if we may judge from the following paragraph taken from an up-country paper:—"An urgent requisition was received by the Major-General commanding the Lahore division by telegram on Thursday morning, to despatch the 3rd Sikh Infantry to reinforce the troops that have been already sent to the frontier to overawe the Sittana fanatics, and the regiment consequently marched past the city of Lahore en route to its destination on Friday morning, within twenty-four hours after receiving orders."

COLONEL SLATER.—We (Oudh Gazette) regret to hear of the serious illness of Colonel Slater, Pension Paymaster of the Cawnpore Circle, who has been compelled to leave on sick certificate, under charge of Dr. Slipton, of the Queen's Bays, being rendered completely helpless from an attack of paralysis. Captain Allen has been appointed to officiate for him.

"WHAT TO WEAR IN INDIA."—"It is evaporation alone which enables us to live in the tropics at all." Such is the burden of an essay entitled "What to Wear in India," which appears in the last number of the Bombay Saturday Review. Evaporation, we are reminded, is the antidote to heat, and it is excessive heat that engenders disease and dries up the juices of life. But evaporation can never be produced where the clothing is dark, heavy, and close-fitting. Above all things it is necessary that the dress should be loose and open, even at the terminations, such as the neck, ankles, and wrists. Woollen textures, if thin and light, are superior to either cotton or linen, but only under these conditions. Few things are more important than to protect the eyes from the sun's glare, for there is much reason to believe the sunstroke might often be traced to the effects of light and heat upon the optic nerves, which are in direct communication with the brain. Another great point is to keep the head cool, which may best be accomplished by wearing hats and caps of a light colour, and consisting of an opaque substance, not too heavy or too easily heated, and provided with abundant means of ventilation. A turban, though excellent in every other respect, is no defence to the eyes, but almost any sort of covering is good that avoids pressing on the forehead like a circlet of iron, and at the same time allows the hot moist air to escape from the crown of the head. Colour is a consideration of great value. The coolest is white, and then in the following order come yellow, red, green, blue, and black. The main point, of course, is to maintain the blood at its natural temperature, or at 98 degs. If it rise above this inconvenience and danger ensue. The object, therefore, is to favour the access of cold and dry air to the body, and the eviction of hot and moist air—in other words, to maintain an easy evaporation. Thick, dense, tight clothing prevents the escape of this hot, moist air, and hence the necessity for wearing loose, flowing garments of light texture, and, as already observed, of light colour. There may be nothing very original, indeed, in these directions, but they are at least sensible and easily understood—nor are they difficult to be carried into execution.—Hurkaru.

THE EAST INDIA COAL COMPANY.—We regret that it is not in our power to afford any encouragement to the shareholders of the East India Coal Company. On the contrary, the information we have received through a perfectly reliable channel, places the position and prospects of the company in a particularly dismal light. The whole of the mines constituting the Toposi Colliery are stated to have been on fire, and the pillars were consequently so much burnt that they are nearly certain to give way as soon as the water has been pumped out. This operation, too, is a matter of time, and not likely to be brought to a conclusion for many months to come at the present rate of working. Of course, if the pillars give way, the superincumbent earth will fall in and fill up the mines, as has already happened to a certain extent. The only work now going on at Toposi is in a quarry, from which about 800 to 1,000 maunds are daily extracted for the use of the East India Railway Company. It is true that some 400 maunds are daily raised from the Basrah Colliery, but of very inferior quality, as, indeed, is also that from the quarry. The Nugraah and Gopeenathpore Collieries are lying idle, the former on account of fire-damp, and the other for some equally good reason, but which is not specified by our informant.—Hurkaru, Sept. 19.

RETIREMENTS.—The following officers have retired from the service from the 1st inst., on the pensions of their rank, with the additional annuity of £200:—Colonel E. W. S. Scott, Colonel Vincent Eyre, C.B., and Colonel W. Barr, of the Royal Artillery; Colonel E. L. Ommanney, and Colonel C. B. Young, of the Royal Engineers.

ACTION AGAINST A NEWSPAPER.—The Hindoo Patriot says that Syud Looft Ali Khan, the millionaire of Patna, has instituted an action against the Englishman, damages laid at one lakh of rupees, but he forgets to state what it is for.

RAM SINGH.—A carpenter by trade named Ram Singh, belonging to the village of Baitna, some nine miles N.W. of Loodiana, became some time since a disciple (or chela) of a religious fuker in the N.W., who, dying, is said to have bestowed his prophetic and religious mantle on Ram Singh, though there are two other claimants to the honour. Ram Singh made the most of his position, and has come to be almost worshipped as a living incarnation of Gooroo Govind. He preached to the Sikhs so well on the necessity of union among them, and succeeded in making so many disciples in various parts of the country, that his movements began to attract the attention of the authorities. He was watched, traced, and finally ordered to return to his village, and remain there under surveillance, with special injunctions to himself and disciples (whose intercourse with him was considerably restricted) not to visit the Sikh place of worship at Umritsur at the time of Dewaleo. It is generally believed among those who know him and his coadjutors, that he had some political object to which his religious professions were used as stepping-stones the more readily to secure an efficient following, and it is certain that more than one person of rank and such influence as Punjab Sirdars possess was among his disciples, or lent the aid of his countenance. The Government were fully warranted in the steps they took, while they kept their own counsel, though they could not stop the leaks by which the papers obtained an inkling of the matter, and made nothing known, until Mr. Ram Singh was quietly housed in his own village.

A CURIOUS WILL CASE was heard by Mr. Justice Morgan in the Bengal High Court. Captain Godby, 35th Bengal Native Infantry and Adjutant 1st Sikh Cavalry, when at Lucknow in 1858, and in presence of the enemy, made a will, leaving his property to his brother, and concluding—"I wish that none of my clothes may be sold by auction, but that they may be all burnt. My watch, sword, and Bible I wish sent to my mother." Captain Godby died a year ago of cholera at Lahore, without making another will. The judge refused to give probate of this, remarking that the privileges granted to military testaments under our law had been borrowed from the Roman law. Under that law a military testament, valid by reason of its being made on an expedition, remained in force for three months only after the soldier returned home or arrived at a place where there was a consul or other authorised person before whom a valid will might be made. Applying this principle, for he had not been able to find any decision, he refused probate to this testamentary writing which, although valid had the writer died in the expedition upon which he was engaged, must, having regard to the date of his death, in time of peace and several years after its making, be deprived of its privileges as a military testament.

SUTTENDRO NATH TAGORE.—The mail from England has brought us very good news, inasmuch as it concerns the people of this vast country to whom it has opened a new and better field of showing their talents and acquirements than that of kranedom or such other Ministerial offices. I allude to the successful examination which Baboo Suttendro Nath Tagore has passed in the Civil Service test for the first time in India's history. This Baboo is one of the two Bengalee competitors who went last year to England from the Presidency College of Calcutta, and though unfortunately one of them has totally failed, it is not therefore the less gratifying when we consider that one of the two has not only passed successfully, but has obtained the highest mark among the sixty candidates who have all passed the test—which is indeed highly creditable to India, and to her mental superiority as a nation when brought to bear with foreigners. But one thing which we are not very pleased to hear of is, that our first competition walla is not to be posted to Bengal, but is to be sent to one of the other presidencies, where, of course, we shall not have the pleasure of witnessing how he acquits himself in his practical service. Baboo Suttendro Nath Tagore is second son to Baboo Debendro Nath Tagore, who is well known throughout India as President to the Calcutta Brahmo Somaj. I hear also that within a few days some three or four more Bengalee candidates will go to England to compete for the Civil Service test, being encouraged by the success which has attended Baboo Suttendro's first attempt. These are very good signs of the times, and our rulers may rest assured that they have by this another concession made the tie of loyalty and good feeling still closer between the two great nations, and which will secure the permanency of British rule in India upon a still sounder basis than it has hitherto been.—Delhi Gazette.

ABOLITION OF THE BUDGET OFFICE.—The days of the Budget Committee are now numbered. We hear that the Financial Member of the Council has recommended that the Budget Office be at once abolished, and that all the papers connected with the said proposition are now before the Governor-General at Simlah. On the abolition of the above-mentioned committee the business of that office will be transferred to the Financial Department. As the aforesaid office was hitherto maintained at an enormous expenditure, it might be supposed that when it is done away a great saving would result to Government, but the idea is chimerical. If our information be correct, on the abolition of the Budget Committee another office will shortly be created, to be designated the "Controller of Government Muniments." This officer will receive a salary of Rupees 3,000, with an assistant on Rupees 1,000 or 1,500 per mensem, together with a large office establishment. Under such circumstances, there will clearly be no actual saving on the abolition of the Budget Office—no real economy in all these changes.—Hurkaru.

HINDOO FREEMASONS.—The September number of "The Indian Freemasons' Friend" is especially interesting; in that it contains the antagonistic opinions of the Duke of Sussex and Dr. John Grant, Provincial Grand Master of Bengal, relative to the initiation of Hindoos into the rites of Freemasonry. His Royal Highness was in favour of admitting every man who believed "in the existence of the Grand Architect of the Universe and in futurity," and likewise in a state of rewards and punishments hereafter. With regard to Mahomedans it does not appear that any scruples have ever been entertained, but only twenty years ago, when an attempt was made to initiate two sons of Russomoy Dutt, a Hindoo gentleman of good repute, the opposition carried the day and rejected the candidates. There was no more strenuous opponent of the proposed innovation than Dr. Grant, whose objections were based upon the idolatry, the untruthfulness, and general immorality, which he believed to be characteristic of the Hindoo. The question has been lately revived, owing to the initiation of Baboo Khettermohun Gangooly in Lodge St. John, the very lodge that formerly resisted the admission of Asiatics into Masonry "on any ground whatsoever." However, so long as Hindoo gentlemen are prepared conscientiously to make a declaration similar to that of Baboo Khettermohun Gangooly, we can see no reason for refusing to associate with them on equal terms of universal brotherhood. "I am not," said the Baboo, "a Pantheist or a Polytheist. I do not identify my Creator with any one of His creatures. I believe in the existence and superintendence of one Great Architect of the Universe, whose wish is the happiness of all His creatures, whose will is law, whose laws are impressed on the heart of every right-thinking individual, and whose never-failing justice shall reach the transgressor of His laws on the great day of judgment to come."—Bengal Hurkaru, Sept. 19.

STEAM PRINTING IN INDIA.—The Englishman's announcement, a few days back, that his journal would thenceforth be printed by steam, has led many of our contemporaries into the mistake of thinking the Englishman's was the first newspaper steam press set up in this country. Messrs. Sanders, Cones, and Co., the proprietors of this journal, printed a Calcutta daily newspaper, the Indian Times, by steam, as far back as 1850. They were the first who tried the experiment in this country, and they did not find steam printing answer, it only proving profitable when a very large number of copies were to be struck off. The Hurkaru, at a subsequent date, was printed by Messrs. Samuel Smith and Co. by steam, but the novelty was also found not to answer there. Now, we have the Englishman here, and the Times of India in Bombay, printing by steam, and as we believe both have double-cylinder presses, they are likely to find the innovation answer as far as convenience and expedition are concerned. We however, doubt that they will be profitable.—Phanix.

DELHI, Sept. 16.—Since my last we have had a few showers, but the heat has been very great, and sickness, I am sorry to add, very prevalent. Fortunately, it is the usual autumnal fever, and not dangerous, but very lowering, and at times takes a turn to the head, especially among European sufferers, in which case it generally ends fatally; consequently there have been several military funerals of late. But the mornings and evenings are now cooler, and I hope the cold weather has set in. There has been a committee sitting some days for the purpose of ascertaining the origin and course of the disease known as Aurungzebe. All the principal hakeems and zurars of Delhi have been examined, and several interesting facts elicited; but I do not think the result will prove so satisfactory as one could wish. It is acknowledged on all hands that the disease has become more common since the mutiny; but no reason is assigned for this fact. As an old resident, I am pretty certain that what is known as Aurungzebe (or "Delhi boils") was unknown to the European residents up to the day of the mutiny. Since the mutiny they have become all too prevalent, and I have remarked that in the neighbourhood of the Palace and Jumma Musjid, people have suffered more severely than in other localities. It was thought that the wells in these neighbourhoods had something to do with the disease, and some bodies, or rather bones, taken out of them, in 1858, favoured the supposition; but whether this has been represented to the committee or not, I cannot say; it is an important point, however, so I give it publicity. A foul murder was committed near the city on the Kootub-road last Sunday night; the victim a Brahmin. The police were patrolling on foot (as there are no mounted police available, on account of the recent clippings), when they heard the last groan proceeding from some high grass. The night was dark, but they commenced a search and soon came upon the body of a man still warm, with nineteen cuts about the neck and shoulders. Information was sent to the Pahargunge thannah, and the police were at once on the track and in two hours the murderers, two in number, were captured. Captain Millett, district superintendent, and Mr. Goose, inspector, were soon on the spot, and never left it until the case was complete. The murderers had, it seems, followed their victim from Mooltan; they had a large supply of drugs, narcotics, &c., and were tempted to commit the foul deed by a small sum of money the murdered man had in his possession. The weapon (a chopper) was found next day. The prisoners are now in irons in the kutwalee, and will, it is to be hoped, suffer the extreme penalty of the law. The station is very empty; all who could get away have gone hillwards; another fortnight or three weeks will see them all returning. Nothing appears yet settled about Mr. Cooper's successor; indeed, it seems doubtful now whether he will leave Delhi at all; he is still on leave in the hills. The weather is clear; mornings and evenings cool, but the days hot; there is every appearance of the fine weather having set in.

SIMLA, Sept. 12.—The weather for the past ten days can only be described by the term delicious. Occasional showers, just enough to temper the heat of the sun, which, between them, shines with a brightness so vivid as to render the aspect of the hills truly glorious, making them stand out in the landscape with extreme clearness, causing the contrast between the depth of the shadows and the brightness of the sunshine to be almost startling; the grand and magical "effects" caused by light in this transparent atmosphere it is impossible to describe, and could only be fully appreciated by a painter enthusiastically devoted to the limner's art. Our several photographers have not been idle, but have taken advantage of the cessation of the rain to take many charming views of the magnificent scenery by which we are surrounded. The lovers of gaiety, also, you may be sure, have taken equal advantage of this fine weather to disport themselves out of doors. Scarce a day passes without a pic-nic; in all sorts of romantic little glens and nooks, on the summits of the hills, down in the valleys, by the side of the waterfalls, under the shade of the lofty firs in picturesque Annandale, may be seen groups of merry-makers enjoying the pure air, which almost appears to intoxicate one. Balls also continue, and, in fact, Simla is in a whirl of gaiety. Two curious dinner parties have been given at Government-house; one entirely for gentlemen, presided over by Lord Elgin; the other, a few days later, entirely for the fair sex, the Countess alone entertaining her guests, a style of entertainment not likely, I fancy, to be very popular. Major Gough, a few days since, led to the altar the fair sister of Captain Hill, the officer implicated in the Narkundah dak bungalow fracas. The happy couple are passing their moneymoon at Mahaseo. Sir Hugh Rose, with a large party, is at his villa at Mahaseo. A report has been spread that the Commander-in-Chief is to leave Simla with a flying camp on the 1st proximo, but I believe this is not quite correct; his departure will not take place so soon, though both the Viceroy's and Sir Hugh's camps will be formed at Kalka, and leave that place very early next month. Allan and Hayes, Limited, of Calcutta, have had this year, for the first time, an establishment here, and have, from all accounts, done a remarkably good business; indeed, the residents and visitors ought to be very grateful for the opportunity afforded them of procuring good articles of jewellery at moderate prices, very different to the style of article formerly palmed off by firms who united the sale of pickles and cheeses, or else of black draughts and saddlery, and tobacco, with that of "articles of bigotry and virtue." Messrs. Hamilton and Co., of Calcutta, would also seem to have heard of the stroke of business done by Allan and Hayes, as, a short time ago, they, for the first time, favoured us with a flaming advertisement of their stock in our local advertiser. I fear, however, in this case the old adage, "better late than never," will not hold good. For the second time this year, has a limited company put forth its prospectus from Simla, and this time it is one, which, if an old-established and popular name has caught to do with ultimate success, may look forward to an exceedingly favourable reception from the public. I allude to the firm of Messrs. Peake, Allan and Co., chemists, who have just issued a prospectus in which they propose to convert their flourishing business into a joint-stock limited, under the title of the "Punjab Trading Company." The present partners of the firm will take a large amount of the shares, thus, as it were, vouching for the bona fide character of the undertaking; and in addition to this will guarantee a dividend of 12 per cent. for the first three years after the formation of the company. Messrs. Peake, Allan and Co. have several extensive establishments in different parts of the country, besides the one they have here, viz., at Lucknow, Umballah, Meer Meer, &c., and their liberal dealings have long since procured for them a wide and well-deserved popularity; the only thing in their prospectus which even the most determined critic can find to cavil at is, that it is rather too verbose, and enters too much into the aims and objects of the promoters of the scheme, thus affording a most decided contrast to the modest prospectus lately issued by Allan and Hayes, Limited; but this is the fault of the author of the prospectus, and not of the undertaking itself. Of course, that great encongraver of the Stamp Act, Major Goad, is not able to keep himself for any length of time from public criticism; at present he is suing Captain Clarke, of the 7th Dragoon Guards, as one of the stewards of the Umballah races, for preventing his horses from running, for reasons with which I am not acquainted. The case has been deferred for some time, and, during the interval, which has offered time for reflection, both parties appear to have cooled down, and there is every probability that the matter will end in an amicable compromise. The case of Coxen v. Mahoney, which appears as though it would ever remain before the public eye, was appealed by the former. The appeal, to our great astonishment, was quickly replied to. I say astonishment, as Sir Herbert Edwards, our commissioner, is generally so much taken up with the interests of religious societies, that he has but little time left to attend to the duties of his office, so that frequently appeals from the lower courts lie unreprieved for months, to the great discomfort of the appellants, as well as to the subversion of the ends of justice, in very many instances. But to return to the appeal in Coxen v. Mahoney: Sir Herbert Edwards gave his decision in favour of the appellant, awarding him instead of the nominal damages of one rupee given by Mr. Murphy of the Simla court, substantial ones, to the extent of Rs. 250. One would almost suppose this was more to indemnify Mr. Coxen for the strictures passed on his character by Mr. Murphy in his decision than for the libel passed by Mr. Mahoney, and which the public find much difficulty in discovering. A cricket match was played at Annandale a few days ago. A novel spectacle was witnessed on the occasion, which made the spectators quit the cricket ground for the adjacent race course. The beautiful Mrs. W— challenged a Captain S— to a hurdle race; hurdles were speedily erected, and most gallantly was the race run, and easily won by the fair lady, amid the plaudits of the numerous lookers-on.

NATIVE LAW AGENTS OF THE MOFUSSIL COURTS.—Complaints of late have been frequent and loud regarding the Native Mooktears or Law Agents attending the Mofussil Courts. Several of the judicial officers have reported to the Government of Bengal the conduct of some of these persons as highly reprehensible, and are of opinion that, as a body, they are generally dishonest, and altogether a disreputable class of men. They have further recommended that the Mooktears system in their courts be abolished, and that some other agency to transact law business between suitors and their courts, or between pleaders and clients if possible, be introduced in its stead.—Englishman.

AN INUNDATED STATION.—We are sorry to perceive that the station of Rampore Beaulah has, once more, become a victim to the encroachments of the Ganges, having, according to a late account, been inundated. As the river in this particular spot is always working its way under the banks, and shifting its channel, it is not much wonder. It is rather a pity to abandon it, as it has always been very healthy, in consequence of its elevation, and is rather a pretty spot. In all other respects, it is a failure, and ought to be abandoned.—Delhi Gazette, Sept. 19.

MILITARY CHANGES.—We learn that the 15th N.I., who were to have marched on the 15th proximo for Peshawar, are to proceed to Durrundah; and that the 17th Royal Poorbeahs, detailed in the relief for the latter station, are consequently to occupy the Sonthal district, the Government of Bengal having applied for a regiment to be quartered there.—Oudh Gazette, Sept. 16.

HUZARAH.—The 13th Bengal Cavalry, under command of Major Watson, c.b. and v.c., left Rawul Pindee for Hurreepore, in Huzarah, on the 8th Sept. There is a report that they are to cut up the enemy's crops! We do not, however, vouch for this. It is expected that the 41st Regiment N.I., and a couple of guns, would also be sent off to support the cavalry.

RESIGNATION.—We (Lahore Chronicle) understand that the Brigadier-general commanding the Punjab Irregular Force has tendered the resignation of his command, moved thereto by dissatisfaction with the use made of a private communication by a high military authority.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MADRAS HOTEL.—The Madras Athenaeum recommends the formation of a local hotel company, on the ground that the "Oriental Hotel Company" will soon be in the field and monopolise the business. Our contemporary further suggests that the Madras public will be called upon to subscribe, in the case of the Oriental Hotel Company, to an undertaking, in the management of which they will scarcely have any voice at all.

MEDICAL.—We understand that on the retirement of Dr. J. McKenna, deputy inspector-general of hospitals, Presidency division, which will take place in a month or two, the appointment will be filled up by Deputy Inspector-general J. E. Mayer. The latter will then have to vacate the posts now held by him of principal of the Medical College, chemical examiner, and medical storekeeper at the Presidency. The principalship, as we have already stated, will be conferred upon Dr. G. Smith; the second appointment, chemical examiner, will, we understand, be given to Dr. Wyndowe; but we are not informed as to who will be appointed medical storekeeper.

LOSS OF THE "NOVELLE ALFRED."—We regret to learn from a telegram received from the magistrate of Ganjam, at the master attendant's office here yesterday morning, that the French ship Novelle Alfred ran ashore at Calingapatam on Monday, the 31st inst. We are at the same time glad to hear that all hands were saved. The vessel lies at present a total wreck.—Overland Athenaeum, Sept. 28.

MR. R. S. ELLIS.—We learn that the Honourable Mr. R. S. Ellis will be relieved on the 1st proximo from his duties as Collector of Madras, preparatory to proceeding to join the Governor-General at the approaching sitting of the Imperial Council for making laws and regulations, of which he is a member. The Sub Collector of Madras will, we understand, take charge of the district, pending the appointment of an acting collector.—Madras Times, Sept. 25.

MR. J. D. SIM, the Revenue Secretary to Government, left the presidency yesterday, to rejoin the Governor at Oosoor. We believe that before returning to Madras his Excellency will visit the Trichinopoly district, for the purpose of satisfying himself, by personal inspection and inquiry, as to the expediency of certain measures connected with the revenue settlement of that district, in regard to which, it is said, his Excellency and the civil members of council are at issue.—Madras Times, Sept. 25.

RAILWAY TRAFFIC RECEIPTS.—The receipts of the Madras Railway of the South-West Line for the week ending Sept. 12, 1863, amounted for passengers, &c., to Rs. 19,364-1-9, for goods, &c., to Rs. 25-675-3-6, making together Rs. 45,039-5-3, or an average receipt per mile of Rs. 101-14-11. During the corresponding week in 1862, the receipts were Rs. 31,769-8-10, or an average receipt per mile of Rs. 78-4-0. The receipts of the North-West Line for the same week amounted for passengers, &c., to Rs. 1,714-9-11, for goods, &c., to Rs. 1,491-8-10, making together Rs. 3,206-2-0, or an average receipt per mile of Rs. 78-3-2. During the corresponding week in 1862 the receipts were Rs. 1,325-2-10, or an average receipt per mile of Rs. 40-1-3.

SHOAL BETWEEN ADEN AND GALLE.—Captain Jack, of the barque Eddystone, recently arrived at Colombo from Aden, reports the discovery, on the morning of the 11th inst., of a new and dangerous shoal in latitude 10 deg. 10 min. N., long. 63 deg. 40 min. E. It appeared to him to be a patch above water about two miles in extent, resembling a recent coral formation. The Eddystone passed close to this reef, and got soundings ten, nine, eight, and seven fathoms respectively. This discovery is of material importance, as the above bearings would place the shoal immediately in the track of steamers running between Galle and Aden.—Ceylon Times, August 29.

GOVERNMENT AND THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF have decided that soldiers of the local army deemed unfit for further duty by medical committees, may, if of approved good character, and irrespective of length of service, be permitted to remain in India on their own application, on the understanding that they forfeit thereby all claim to a free passage home at any subsequent period.

PUBLIC WORKS.—We understand that Lieutenant Colonel S. O. E. Ludlow, who has lately retired from the public service, has been nominated Chief Engineer to the Irrigation and Canal Company, in room of Colonel H. C. Cotton, upon whom has been conferred a superior appointment, with the high sounding title of "Director General in India." The post of Consulting Engineer for the Company, thus vacated by Colonel Ludlow, has been bestowed upon Captain P. P. L. O'Connell, who will hold the appointment, in addition to his present one of Consulting Engineer for Railways. The Madras Irrigation Company, too, we observe, have selected an engineer of their own in England. They have already obtained sanction to the appointment for their service of an additional officer, to be styled "General Auditor," whose duties will be chiefly those of a Travelling Inspector of Cash, Stores, and Accounts.—Overland Athenaeum.

BOMBAY MUNIFICENCE.

Just as the illiterate Athenian citizen grew weary of constantly hearing the justice of Aristides extolled to the skies, so will the merchants of Calcutta and Madras fret and fume over the oft-recurring panegyrics bestowed upon their native brethren in Bombay. A representation having been made to some of the leading native firms in that city of the distressed condition of the Madras weavers, the sum of 80,000 rupees was subscribed in a few days, the Jeejeebhoy heading the subscription-list with the munificent donation of Rs. 25,000. Two, three, and five thousand rupees were the amounts respectively contributed by a dozen other houses. Then we have Karsundas Madhowdas, Esq., remitting ten thousand rupees to the Asiatic Home in Poplar, London, and Nusserwanjee Bhowanuguree, Esq., presenting £250 to the Strangers' Friend Society. How much, we wonder, will the Calcutta houses contribute for the relief of the poor weavers in Madras? Unless waited upon in person their donations will not, we fear, materially improve the condition of the poor sufferers. The Jews of old were at least more joyous and human in their worship of the golden calf, for they sat down to eat and to drink and rose up to play; but it is not very often that the sound of mirth and revelling, or singing and dancing, is to be heard sweeping across the Maidan, or disturbing the calm, fashionable, untroubled air of Chowringhee. With that, however, we might cheerfully dispense, if the lack of gaiety were made good by a bounteous flow of charity. Money, no doubt, may be had as the reward of importunity, but there is nothing spontaneous, nothing emotional, nothing from the heart. Jones will give whatever Brown gives, and Robinson will put down his name for twice as much as either—not because his feelings are touched, but because he is, or wishes to be thought, richer than his neighbours. This is not charity. This is not the voluntary outpouring of a kindly and grateful heart. It is but the prompting of a morbid and purse-proud vanity. Contrast Calcutta with Bombay, and mark how Parsees and Hindoos, enriched by the sudden rise in cotton, gladly give of their abundance to the poor, no matter of what creed or nation. After all, the Calcutta men are wise in their generation. Let us eat and drink, say they, for to-morrow we die—and, they might add, shall never be missed by the needy and the outcast.—Bengal Hurkaru, Sept. 19.

WHAT IS A TIME BARGAIN?

A time-bargain is simply a bet upon the future price of goods, and partakes no more of the nature of trade than a bet upon the result of a prize-fight. A time-bargain may be represented exactly, in the form of a dialogue, as follows:—

1st Sowcar: I will bet you a lakh of rupees that Dholera cotton will be 500 rupees a candy on the 1st of March next.

2nd Sowcar: I will not take your bet, but I will sell you 1,000 candies at 450 rupees, deliverable on that day, upon the understanding that no cotton is to be asked for, but simply the difference between 450 rupees and the price of the day.

1st Sowcar: Done.

Now this is an exact description of what a time-bargain is. Instead of betting a fixed sum of £10,000, the amount of the wager is the difference of price between real cotton on the 1st of March and the rate named in the bargain. This species of gambling is admirably suited to the idiosyncrasy of the natives of India. The game supplies them with sufficient interest and excitement, while it calls for no exertion whatever. The sowcar can thus sell a million of bales of unreal cotton without rising from the cushion on which he reclines at any stage of the business. Under this system, many millions of fictitious bales of cotton have been so bought and sold during the last two years in Bombay, and we shall recal the history of the period to our readers' recollection. It is necessary to premise that, by common consent of the parties, three fixed settling-days are appointed in each year, and upon these days the bets mature. As the more important of these wagers approach maturity, the most desperate efforts are made to raise or depress the price of actual cotton, according to the interests involved. If a sowcar, or number of sowcars, find they are likely to lose heavily, they resort to any rascality that promises to help them to evade it. At one time, as in 1861, they have dared the desperate experiment of cutting the telegraphic wires, and falsifying all the Galle messages. At another, they circulate false bulletins of news through the bazaar, and take advantage of the momentary panic or excitement that results to hedge their risks and improve their position. As the settling-day draws near, they arm themselves with all the capital they can command, and stand on the verge of the market, ready to rush in at the critical moment, and raise or depress rates by their reckless operation.—Times of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE BRITISH INDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY have obtained from the Bombay Government a lease for ninety-nine years of the greater portion of Butcher's Island, for the purpose of erecting wharves, godowns, &c.

SHERE ALLEE KHAN.—The following account of a conversation held between Naib Sooltan Mohamed Khan and Sirdar Mohamed Auzim Khan, is given by a person who has just arrived from Zoomut. When Naib Sooltan Mohamed, on the part of Ameer Shere Allee Khan, advised Sirdar Mohamed Auzim Khan to give up all hostile ideas, and to accompany him to Ghuznee, where the Ameer was willing to receive him in a brotherly way, and to comply with his wishes, the Sirdar made the undermentioned reply:—"I have no intention of fighting with Shere Allee Khan, and as for my going to Ghuznee, that will never be the case; I would never trust Shere Allee Khan's word. Do you not know how he behaved towards me when we were in Herat. Until Herat was taken, Shere Allee Khan trusted me with all sorts of commands and duties, and gave me good hopes, but the moment Herat was taken, he gave the charge of it to his sons. Not only this, but Shere Allee Khan had made a plan to have me murdered in the camp between Herat and Gurrishk, and had it not been for Sirdar Mohamed Shurreef Khan, who informed me of the conspiracy, I should not have been alive now. I am now quite happy in my own territory, and would be very thankful to Ameer Shere Allee if he would leave me alone here." Naib Sooltan Mohamed having received a Khillut from Auzim Khan, had left for the Ameer's camp with the above reply.

ALLIGATORS.—The Muggur Peeralligators have nearly eaten up another fakeer. He is an old man on a visit from Khorassan, and was washing his hands in the tank, when a muggur seized him by the right hand, and would have drawn him under had not people by rushed to his assistance, and pulled him out; not until, however, his hand was nearly torn off at the wrist. The old man was brought to the Civil Hospital at Kurrachee, where it was found necessary to amputate his arm. This is the sixth case of the kind reported since the 14th of June last, and is the most serious. The surgeon in charge of the hospital has represented the matter officially to the Commissioner.

ADEN.—A Bill to provide for the administration of criminal and civil justice at Aden is now under the consideration of the Bombay Legislature. It is proposed that the Resident shall be the Chief Judicial Officer. His position will be that of a District and Sessions Judge, and he will further be invested with small cause powers up to a limit of one thousand rupees. The Bill, according to the Times of India, "declares that the administration of civil and criminal justice is vested in the Court of the Resident. It also empowers the Assistant Resident to dispose of cases in the first instance, subject to appeal, in all civil suits for more than Rs. 500, and in all criminal cases involving more than six months' imprisonment, to the Resident himself, but without appeal in such cases of less importance. The Resident will, however, be at liberty in all cases, within the period allowed for appeal, to call for any such proceedings before his Assistant. All the proceedings of the Resident's Court are rendered subject to the control of the Bombay High Court, and in capital cases the Resident will have no power to pass sentence of death, but is to transmit the proceedings to the High Court for judgment. Where European British subjects are charged with any offence involving more than three years' imprisonment and fine under the Penal Code, the offender is to be transmitted to Bombay for trial, that the administration of justice shall be guided by the spirit and principle of the Bombay regulations. The Government of Bombay are also empowered to pass rules, regulating appeals, &c., in civil cases not exceeding Rs. 1,000, and of a nature cognizable in a small cause Court under Act XLII. of 1800, and that the procedure of such Act shall be followed."—Bengal Hurkaru, September 9.

CHINA.

HONG KONG, Sept. 11.

From Peking and the northern ports there is no news of importance; everything appears to be quiet at the different foreign settlements. Major Gordon continues to manœuvre against the rebels. He is said to have occupied an island in the Tae Hu Lake, while Dr. Macartney has taken a place called Fungehing, no doubt in pursuance of Gordon's plans. The place taken is a large city, and the drilled troops that captured it were never before under fire; they are said to have behaved well. The rowdies who compose Burgevine's force have not again attacked the Imperial troops. It is rumoured that they are to be led against Ningpo; and as loot is all they want, the rumour may prove correct. By fighting against Major Gordon they might get something totally different, and it is therefore more consistent with probability to suppose that, as they cannot sack Shanghai, they may have a chance with Ningpo. Considerable anxiety and a secret desire for the success of the rebels exist even in what would be called respectable quarters here. One effect of the proposal made by certain people lately, viz., to let the rebels alone, and to defend the treaty ports, would be to raise enormously the price of land within the foreign "concessions." Whether that be one of the secret motives which lead to the desire for such a policy on the part of the British Government, it is, of course, impossible for us to say; but that a rise in the value of land in Shanghai and at every protected port would be the immediate consequence of the policy proposed is most undoubtedly true.

A more legitimate mode of reaching that summum bonum of felicity in Shanghai—a rise in the value of land—is a scheme for a railway from Shanghai to Soochow, which has been matured and placed before the Chinese Government for approval. The distance is about seventy miles, and the route would embrace the cities of Kading, Taitsan, and Quinsan. It is not yet known whether a concession will be granted, or whether immediate steps are in contemplation for the construction of the road.

We stated in our last issue that the Futae or military mandarin at Shanghai had offered a reward of £1,000 for the person of the Burgevine, "dead or alive." This offer, which was duly published, drew from the American Consul a protest, to which the other consuls put their names. To this document the Futae returned a speedy reply, stating that treaty rights were not touched by his proclamation, and that in joining the rebels Burgevine made himself amenable to Chinese laws.

At Ningpo matters are getting into better order, and the drilled troops are spoken of as being in a good state of discipline. Burgevine and his gang may even find Ningpo, or the cities on the route, too hard a nut for him to crack.—Overland China Mail.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 18th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton, on the 13th and 27th of the month except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

A French line of mail packets now leaves Marseilles on the 19th of every month for Alexandria. Postage for letters and papers to India and China the same as is charged by the English mail, via Marseilles. Letters intended to be forwarded by these packets must be specially addressed "By French mail packet from Marseilles."

EXPORT OF SPECIE.—The Ceylon, which left on Tuesday last, conveyed £90,400 in gold to Alexandria, £74,050 in gold and £375,850 in silver to Bombay, making a total of £540,100.

THE MHOW COURT-MARTIAL.

THE Cornhill Magazine for November has an article extending to no less than upwards of two dozen well-filled pages on the subject of the Mhow Court-martial, from the pen of the able writer whose initials, "J. O.," are so familiar to the public. The article is very acute, very elaborate, and, upon the whole, very just, though the writer will certainly not give much satisfaction to the friends of Col. Crawley and Sir Hugh Rose, or to the president and members of the too-famous Mhow Court-martial. "J. O." shows very clearly, we think, that the proceedings of the court-martial exhibited a strong leaning in favour of Col. Crawley, while poor Captain Smales and his witnesses not only had "no favour" shown to them, but were denied "a fair field." As to the Indian Commander-in-Chief, it is impossible not to see that with all his merit as a leader in battle he is utterly unfit for the duties of an administrator of military justice. "J. O." has taken up the "moral and social difficulty" in the Crawley case with more courage or with more information than any other public writer. Everyone will now understand that a woman was originally at the bottom of all the mischief in this case, as in so many other similar cases in the British Indian community. It appears that a lady, divorced from her husband by Lord Campbell in 1858, "under circumstances of extraordinary profligacy," was married again to an officer of the — Light Dragoons, and about a year before Colonel Crawley came to the regiment which he has so ill commanded the officer who had married the divorcee exchanged from his own regiment into the Inniskillings. Colonel Crawley, finding that Captain Smales and Dr. Turnbull, and other married officers of the regiment, would not recognise the lady in question, vehemently took up her cause, and at last peremptorily ordered in a formal memorandum "that the harmony and good feeling which should always subsist between officers of the same corps should not be jeopardised by any further allusion to this moral and social difficulty by any officer under his command." This explains at once the false position in which the commanding officer of the regiment had placed himself, for after so despotic an attempt to dictate to his officers on the question of whom they should associate with in private life, it was not to be supposed that there could be any hope of his maintaining his influence or authority anywhere but on the parade-ground.

The Home court-martial on the Crawley case, and the military authorities here, will no doubt be more wary in their proceedings than were the court-martial at Mhow and the Indian Commander-in-Chief, for they will be under the wholesome dread of immediate public criticism.

TEA PLANTATIONS IN INDIA.

WE cannot contemplate what British authority and British enterprise have lately done towards improving the political institutions and developing the vast natural resources of India without wonder and indignation and regret at the narrow views and obstinate prejudices which so long discountenanced the independent British settler, and regarded every European out of the Government service as a dangerous "interloper." Nor do we envy the feeling with which the still surviving members of the old East India Company must look back upon their mistaken policy, and behold the vast changes for the better which a more liberal system has effected in so short a time. But we can forgive their errors if they can have the magnanimity to confess and to regret them, and to rejoice with their fellow-countrymen in those peaceful triumphs which are the results of a system of Government so directly opposed to their own once dearly-cherished principles and opinions. And that some of the leading members of the Court of Directors have outlived their blunders, and are willing to sail on a new tack, is practically demonstrated by their having accepted office in her Majesty's Indian Council, and given their cordial support to such liberal measures as in an earlier portion of their career they would most vehemently have denounced as ruinous.

We have been led into these remarks by the perusal of Dr. Jameson's most interesting and valuable paper on the Tea Plantations in the North-West Provinces and the Punjab, and his elaborate report on tea cultivation in the Kangra Valley. The local Government only a year or two ago prophesied that the time was "not far distant when tea would become one of the chief Indian staples." That time has all but arrived, and we may soon expect to rival America with our Indian cottons, and China with our Indian teas. Not only has the Government carried on many large and successful tea plantations of its own, but it has given the most generous encouragement and assistance to all classes of tea planters, Native and European, companies and individuals. And now that tea plantation in India is proved to be "a great fact," and not a doubtful experiment, the Government, with consistent liberality, announces its desire that their own great prosperity as tea planters should be transferred to private speculators. The whole of the Government plantations in the Kangra Valley are to be advertised in the English and Indian newspapers as for sale to the highest bidders on the 1st of November, 1865, at the upset price of two lakhs of rupees. To give the reader a correct idea of the value of the Government factories and plantations in the North-Western Provinces we must borrow Dr. Jameson's own figures. The following details show the quantity of tea prepared in the factories during the season from April 1862, to April, 1863:—

Kowlaghir factory, in the Dehra Dhoon...	18,915	12
Hamul Bagh ditto, in Kumaon ...	6,241	8
Ayar Toli ditto, in Kumaon ...	8,475	8
Bheem Tal ditto, in Kumaon ...	2,251	0

Total ...	35,883	12
To this add the yield of the Kangra plantations ...	16,125	0

And we have thus an outturn of ... 52,008 12

Financially the result of the working of the tea plantations, North-Western Provinces, may be thus considered:—

	Rs.	As.	P.
To 35,883 12-lbs., at Rs. 1.8 per lb. ...	53,825	10	0
To 2,859 maunds of seeds, at Rs. 20 per maund ...	5,718	0	0

Total ... 1,11,005 10 0

To expense of working the plantations ... 65,000 0 0

Balance... 46,005 10 0

To this must be added the value of the plants distributed gratis to private planters—viz., 7,00,000, at Rs. 3 per 100 ... 21,000 0 0

Total balance ... 67,005 10 0

lbs. ozs.

All the plantations show an increase on the outturn of last year, that of the Dehra plantations being ... 3,933 4

Of the Hamul Bagh and Ayar Toli plantations ... 689 10

And of the Bheem Tal plantation ... 985 9

Total ... 5,608 7

Dr. Jameson calculates that there might easily be raised on the waste and other lands in the North-Western Provinces and the Punjab and Dhooons upwards of 900,000,000 pounds of tea, a quantity equal to the whole export trade of China, and that with careful cultivation that enormous quantity might be doubled, and thus not only allow for the consumption in India, but afford a vast supply for export to other countries. In fact, there really seems no reason whatever why India should not supply teas to the whole world. What a field then is India in these days for the employment of British industry and capital, even with respect to only one article of commerce. But we are only beginning to obtain faint glimpses of her incalculable resources, and it is only now become generally known in this country that the whole of India is not like Bengal—"a constant vapour-bath;" but includes, on the contrary, almost every variety of climate, and that there are many parts of Upper India which are far healthier than England. Vast tracts of forest and jungle have already been cleared for the cultivation of tea, which will thus not only be profitable in a pecuniary sense, but also in a sanitary point of view. Everyone now admits that for the security, and the prosperity, and full development of the natural value of our British possessions in the East, we cannot have too many of our energetic fellow-countrymen there; and we cannot doubt that, encouraged by the new and more liberal views of the Home-Indian Government and the chief local authorities, companies and individuals will hasten to benefit themselves and India, and their own country, by the judicious and spirited application of their capital, and talent, and labour, to the agriculture and manufactures of the East. There will soon be, we doubt not, a sufficient number of Europeans settled in India to secure it from mutinies, and rebellions, and civil wars, or foreign enemies, and render such a vast army as the present one an unnecessary drain upon the Indian revenue.

The Natives in the lower provinces have long looked upon tea as a valuable medicine, but, as we are glad to hear, they begin to regard it as the Chinese have always done, as a luxurious daily beverage, and it is expected that the best market for the Kangra teas will be the Punjab itself. Two hundred and fifty 40-pound chests of this tea have just been sent to this country to be tested in comparison with the teas of Assam and China.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE PRINCIPAL OF THE MADRAS MEDICAL COLLEGE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

DEAR SIR,—In your trenchant article on the Madras Medical College, which appeared in the July 6 issue of Allen's Indian Mail, you have me up to public animadversion as the principal of the College, owing to whose theological teaching the decadence of that institution is due. Permit me to correct your facts. I am not now, I was not then, and I never have been, Principal of the Madras Medical College. I am at present junior professor (College rank), having joined the College upon March 1 last, a few weeks prior to the date of the report you so forcibly comment upon. To whatever cause, therefore, the present unsatisfactory condition of the College may be due, it is very evident that it cannot be owing to my zeal as "a missionary preacher," to my neglect as a lecturer on medical science, or to my incapacity as a principal.

I cannot expect any alteration of your views regarding the suitability of my "address," but I think I may expect an editorial withdrawal of statements not founded upon fact.—I am, dear sir, yours faithfully, GEORGE SMITH, M.D., Professor of Midwifery, &c., Madras Medical College.

Madras, September 22, 1863.

[We did not state positively that Dr. Smith was Principal of the Madras Medical College. Our words were, "Is it possible that Dr. Smith, who is, we believe, Principal of the Madras Medical College, has caused dissatisfaction and disgust, and checked the desires of the students for purely professional knowledge, by an attempt to connect a system of religious proselytism with medical and surgical studies? Has the College been turned into a Tabernacle?" We knew not with certainty who was the Principal of the Medical College. We merely surmised that Mr. Smith was the Principal, from the fact that he delivered the annual address to the students. We will not treat Dr. Smith as Swift treated poor Partridge the prophet and almanack maker—refusing to believe him even when he contradicted the report of his own death, and passionately insisted upon the fact of his own existence;—we at once admit our mistake. Dr. Smith is not, then, a Principal, but a Professor. But this single mistake—(our correspondent, by the way, should not pluralise his charge, and talk of "facts" to be corrected and "statements" to be withdrawn)—in no degree nullifies our objection to the character of Dr. Smith's address, as better suited to a Christian temple than a College, in which persons of all religions were to be instructed in surgery and medicine. Dr. Smith was engaged by Government as a teacher of midwifery at a college attended chiefly by Hindoos and Mahomedans. He was not engaged as a missionary preacher. He, therefore, mistook both the time and the place for his theological oration.—Ed.]

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL CRAWLEY AND THE LATE SERGEANT-MAJOR LILLEY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

SIR,—I am the brother of the late Sergeant-Major Lilley, and I am sure you will agree with me that his memory is far too dear to those who know full well the high character he always bore to allow of any effort remaining untried to prove how unmerited are the aspersions attempted to be cast on the memory of a good and worthy soldier by those to whom he had a right to look for encouragement and protection. It is but a few days since it was publicly stated that my late brother was an habitual drunkard, and, as a proof of this, his incapacity from drink was affirmed at the battle of Balaklava. By a curious chance, I had preserved my brother's letters, and was able to prove by them, so far from being in the state affirmed, he did not reach the Crimea until after the fall of Sebastopol, and more than a year after the affair at Balaklava. I placed these letters in the hands of the editor of the United Service Gazette, who was kind enough to publish my refutation of this shameful falsehood, and who still holds those letters open to inspection.

This calumny refuted, another has sprung up, Lieut.-Colonel Crawley and his friends still persisting in slandering my poor brother, in the vain hope of screening themselves from the consequences of their own conduct. Last week remarks appeared in one of the leading London journals, as also a reproduction from an Indian paper in one of the military journals, imputing my brother's death to intemperance. It appears to me to be of little importance to the real points at issue as to how my brother died, or whether he died at all. The real question is, whether his commanding officer had a right to act towards him in direct disobedience of the Articles of War. That he died under such treatment was but an aggravation of the case; but, Sir, these false and wicked statements naturally cause his family much distress, and this will, I hope, plead with you as a justifiable excuse for my begging of you to publish in the Times the enclosed extract of a letter written by Dr. Turnbull, surgeon of the 6th Enniskillen Dragoons, referring to my brother's death. This extract has been many months in my hands, and a copy of it was forwarded to the Horse Guards, and its existence is, therefore, perfectly well known:—

"With regard to poor Sergeant-Major Lilley's case, Colonel Crawley has done all he could to prove he was a drunkard, and was furious with me because I would not side with his views. Dr. Barnett and I frequently saw him during the period of his arrest, and never saw him the least worse for drink. I believe the poor fellow died of a broken heart from the ill-usage he received from the Mhow and regimental authorities."

"Mhow."

This is a literal copy. I repeat, the Horse Guards are in possession of it, and I ask, as a favour to myself and family, the publication of this defence of my brother's character which has been wantonly assailed. SAMUEL LILLEY.

VERNACULAR LANGUAGES OF INDIA.

CAMBRIDGE, Oct. 24.—The Council of the Senate have reported to the Senate that the term of three years for which the present University teacher of Hindustani was appointed, agreeably to the grace of the Senate of October 25, 1860, will expire on the 29th of November next, and the question of providing for the instruction of the selected candidates for the Indian Civil Service in the vernacular languages of India has, therefore, come under their notice.

The following is an extract from the instructions for the guidance of candidates for the further examination for the Indian Civil Service issued by her Majesty's Civil Service Commissioners:—

"The vernacular languages considered admissible for the several presidencies (Sanskrit being admissible for all) are the following:—Bengal: Hindustani and Bengali. Madras: Tamil and Telugu. Bombay: Hindustani, Gujaratti, Maharratti, and Arabic."

"Every selected candidate must pass to the satisfaction of the Commissioners in Sanskrit, or in the vernacular of his presidency, but subject to this requirement, he may obtain marks for any one, or any two, of the above-mentioned languages. Other Oriental languages may, with the consent of the Civil Service Commissioners, be taken up as extra subjects, but no marks will be given in respect of them."

It appears from the report of the Commissioners that more than half of the appointments given are usually for the presidency of Bengal, about a quarter for Madras, and the rest for Bombay, but these proportions are liable to variation.

Candidates nominated to the Bombay presidency almost always select Hindustani as the vernacular language in which to pass, but those nominated to Madras require instructions in Tamil or Telugu, and it might be difficult to find a teacher conversant with these languages as well as with Hindustani. The Council have reason to believe that teachers of the principal Oriental languages required could be engaged temporarily, provided that £40 or £50 per term were guaranteed to each.

The number of members of the University requiring instruction in the different languages varies from year to year, and it therefore appears to the Council that an arrangement for meeting the requirements of the students as they arise, is preferable to having a teacher of Hindustani only.

The number of nominations to the several presidencies is known soon after the publication of the lists of selected candidates, which takes place in August, so that the number of students desiring instruction in the several languages might be ascertained at the commencement of the Michaelmas Term.

The Council therefore recommend that the Vice-Chancellor shall be empowered to expend annually a sum not exceeding £150 from the University chest, in engaging teachers of such of the Oriental languages, and for such periods as he may think fit, and also to fix from time to time the fees which the students should pay for such instruction.

The Council further recommend that this arrangement should come into operation at the commencement of the Lent Term, 1864, and should continue in force for three years.

The Vice-Chancellor has invited the attendance of members of the Senate in the Arts' School on Wednesday, the 28th inst., at two o'clock, for the discussion of the above report.

THE LATE FIELD-MARSHAL LORD CLYDE.

On Wednesday afternoon, the 21st inst., a public meeting of the noblemen and gentlemen of the county of Lanark, and of the merchants, bankers, and other citizens of Glasgow, was held in the Merchants'-hall, for the purpose of taking steps with a view to the erection in Glasgow of a monument to the late Field-Marshal Lord Clyde. Among those present were the Right Hon. Lord Belhaven, Sir Archibald Alison, Sir James Fergusson, Sir James Campbell, Mr. Walter Buchanan, M.P., the Lord Provost, Colonel Alison, the Lord Dean of Guild, &c.

The Lord Provost, who was called to the chair, said they had not met under the idea that any monumental statue was necessary to perpetuate the memory of Lord Clyde, for he believed that history would do the memory of the departed hero that justice to which he was so well entitled. But, considering that the departed soldier was a citizen of Glasgow, it would indeed be strange if those of his own time should not leave to posterity some lasting memorial showing the estimation in which they held the many great and gallant services of his lordship—services which commenced with his early years—(applause). The Lord Provost also mentioned that, in endeavouring to raise a monument to Lord Clyde, it was not intended to ask large sums. The desire rather was, that the subscriptions should be extensive in number, and while the maximum subscription was of a limited character, it was hoped that a large number of small contributions would be received. The feeling of the committee was that the whole community of Glasgow should aid in the effort to erect some monument to Lord Clyde worthy of his name.

Sir Archibald Alison then addressed the meeting as follows:—My Lord Provost and Gentlemen, &c.,—I am sure I express the unanimous opinion of all who hear me, when I say that the country owes your lordship a debt of gratitude for the trouble you have taken in giving it, by this meeting, an opportunity of expressing the feelings with which all are animated towards the late lamented Field-Marshal Lord Clyde. England has already taken the lead on this subject; a committee has been formed in London, having at its head the first in rank and the first in station, to promote the erection of a suitable monument to his memory in the metropolis of the empire; and the unanimous voice of the nation has procured a last resting-place for his remains in that time-honoured fane where the poets, the philosophers, and the statesmen of England—

"Sleep with her kings, and dignify the scene."

It is not fitting at such a time that Scotland should be unmindful of one of the most illustrious of her sons; that Glasgow, his birthplace, should be without a monument to his memory. Such a testimonial is wanted, not to do honour to the dead so much as to testify the feelings of the living—not to record his deeds, but to evince our sense of their importance, and to excite the emulation of our children by giving to it a suitable expression. I shall not attempt, at this time and in this place, to give any summary of the deeds of the lamented Field-Marshal, from the time when he joined the British army, in 1808, amidst the wooded cliffs of Portugal, on the eve of the battle of Vimiera, to that when he closed his long career, by trampling under foot the last embers of the Sepoy insurrection on the banks of the foaming Raptée, beneath the shadow of the mountains of Nepal. I will not speak of the young hero who led the "forlorn hope" at the first assault of St. Sebastian, or of the "thin red line" at Balaklava, which has become a household word over the whole civilized world. I shall mention only four circumstances which demonstrate in what estimation, when danger threatened and it became indispensable to bring real merit to the front, he was held by those under whom he served. When victory on the banks of the Alma quivered in the balance, and the noble regiment of the Fusilier Guards was crushed by the Russian fire from the Great Redoubt, it was Sir Colin Campbell, at the head of the Highland Brigade, who made the decisive charge, and, in conjunction with the Grenadier and Coldstream Guards, under the immediate orders of the Duke of Cambridge, drove the enemy from their formidable stronghold, and won the fight—(applause). When the long and dreary winter set in, and it had become essential to preserve at all hazards our connection with Balaklava—the magazine of the army—it was to Sir Colin and his hardy Highlanders, in conjunction with an equally brave body of Frenchmen, under General Vinoy, that the duty of defending the communication was assigned—the post of honour as the post of danger. When the British were repulsed from the Redan, it was to Sir Colin Campbell and the same Highland division that the task was entrusted of renewing the assault—an assault prevented only by the retreat of the enemy. And when Hindostan was involved in the horrors of the Sepoy revolt, and our Indian dominion rocked to its foundation, it was to Sir Colin Campbell that Lord Palmerston applied to "restore a falling cause and a sinking empire;" and then it was that, when asked when he could set out, he gave the memorable reply, "Tomorrow morning." And well and nobly did he discharge that, the last and most important, duty intrusted to him by his country. Without doing into details with which all are familiar, suffice it to say that when he advanced in November, 1857, from Cawnpore, to effect the deliverance of the long beleaguered garrison of Lucknow, he bore the fate of India on his sword's point, for he was marching with 6,000 men—our last reserve—to assail 60,000, intrenched to the teeth in the capital of Oude, with 15,000 victorious rebels threatening his rear and communications. If he had failed in his enterprise India for the time was lost, and the renown of the British name for ever dimmed; for, had our Eastern possessions been torn from us by our own troops, where would have been our prestige as a great, our security as an independent Power? I will not seek to magnify his victory by dwelling on the immensity of the interest then at issue; it is enough to say, that never in British story was contest engaged in where the stakes were heavier or the victory was more nobly won—(applause). I would rather linger, in a few words, over his private character, known to a narrower circle than his public exploits, but not less deserving of interest and admiration. His mind was simplicity itself; he never harboured a thought which did not belong to the heroic character. Heart and soul were wrapped up in his public duty. He was ambitious, but it was for his country, not himself. Like the Roman General whom Tacitus has immortalised, he "sought rather to be than to appear great, and thus the more he shunned praise the more was he deserving of glory." Too noble to be envious, too simple to be ostentatious, he was ever ready to bestow praise on others, and desired only to conceal from observation his own great exploits. He was alike superior to the love of gain, the first impulse of ordinary, and the thirst for praise, the "last infirmity of noble minds." His modesty was such that it amounted to a fault, for it often exposed him to misconception, and made him appear what he was not, indifferent to the gratitude of his country. The thought of being the object of general admiration in public assemblies, so often coveted by eminent men, was so painful to him that he would do anything to avoid it. After the sword had been presented to him at Glasgow in 1856, he said to me, "I would rather have stormed the Redan." And when about to embark from India, on his return to Europe in 1860, he wrote to me, imploring in the most earnest terms that I would endeavour, if possible, to have him spared the agony of any public reception in Glasgow. And if it be true that "the ruling passion is strong in death," we may well say that this was his ruling passion, for he left an express injunction on his executors that no mention should in any posthumous memoir be made of his actions, except in the simplest terms and without eulogy of any kind. He was avaricious, but it was only of the blood of his soldiers; he was prodigal, but it was of his own life alone. He never would owe to force what he could gain by skill, and his first thought in every combination was how it could be accomplished with the least loss to his men. Profoundly versed in strategy, his plans were generally successful, and the desired end attained with a surprisingly small loss of life. But when the decisive moment arrived, and it was necessary to strike with an iron gauntlet, no one could strike a heavier blow, and none ever preceded him in the field in delivering it. He rode with the foremost skirmishers in the attack on the Russian redoubt on the Alma; and the Commander-in-Chief in India resumed his old post of leader of the forlorn hope on the assault of the Shah Nujeef Mosque at Lucknow. No general was ever more solicitous for the welfare of his soldiers, or exceeded him in the eloquence with which in moments of danger he animated their courage. He was too generous to be wealthy, too independent to be early prosperous. The rank which he attained—the Peerage, the Field Marshal's baton, were all earned by his right arm; and the fortune which he left was the reward of his public services, not earned by his private exertions. What he gave away during his life would have made a handsome competence for an ordinary man. In a word, he was, to use the expression of the Roman annalist, "a man of ancient virtue, in all the duties of life most admirable"—(loud applause). Sir Archibald concluded by moving the following resolution:—

"That this public meeting, deeply impressed with the loss which the country has sustained in the death of Colin Campbell, Lord Clyde, and anxious to testify their high admiration of his military talents, and gratitude for his illustrious services to his country, resolve to erect a public monument to his memory in his native city."

Mr. Walter Buchanan, M.P., seconded the resolution, which was cordially agreed to.

On the motion of Sir James Campbell, a number of noblemen and gentlemen were appointed a committee to collect subscriptions and decide upon the form and site of the monument, and the artist to be employed.

The Lord Provost intimated that although no effort had been made to obtain subscriptions contributions amounting to upwards of £700 had been voluntarily made.

A vote of thanks to the Lord Provost brought the proceedings to a close.

THE BUY-OUT SYSTEM IN INDIA.

There is yet time to prevent the establishment of a system in India which would under any circumstances be a damnum hæreditas from the old company's service, but which is positively in itself contrary to the whole spirit and intent of the Queen's service in the economy of the new regiments which the destruction of the old system has created and rendered necessary. There is no doubt of the fact that under various pretences the mischievous plan of "contributions," which was legalised by the old company as the result of their small pensions and retiring allowances, is in the course of development in the new regiments raised for the Queen. In certain of these regiments old officers have gone in with the view of being bought out at good round sums, and the readiest mode of getting rid of them, and of obtaining a promotion all through the regiment, has been adopted or is about to be largely introduced. Every old Indian knows to the pice how much he would have been called on to pay according to his grade, if it was necessary to buy a colonel, a major, or a captain, but it was expected that in the case of new regiments specially designated as non-purchase corps, the infliction of a compulsory contribution from each officer would have been avoided. The mode in which young officers raised their quota in old times was most ruinous to them. It cannot fail to be destructive now. For any purpose of promotion or obtaining steps, the Indian banks were ever ready to lend money on such security as the commission and collateral guarantees of the borrower's friends afforded. And so it was that men were obliged to pass long years of their lives in India, because they could not leave the country in consequence of indebtedness to a bank. There has been many a life weighted and wearied to the grave—many a career destroyed by that baleful system. Debt may make some Cæsars, but it assuredly ruins hundreds of good soldiers where it envelops a single desperate officer. Now, it is within our own knowledge that there is a very great probability of ruin hanging over officers from the introduction of the "contribution" system, unless the Government at once interfere and protect them. In some of the new cavalry regiments officers have been appointed from the general list of the presidencies. They find themselves called upon to contribute so many rupees to buy out senior officers who have gone into these regiments for the purpose of getting money. If the system is tolerated for a moment, these young men must either raise the money or subject themselves to the intolerable "Coventry" of the combination of the moneyed men who are anxious for promotion, and can afford to pay for it. If they raise the money, they become the victims of a system of which the presiding genius is debt. What follows in the train of that tutelary demon we know full well in India. It is often ruin—nearly always the loss of independence—constant anxiety for the present, and a future full of gloom and wretchedness. There is no reason on earth why the few should be permitted to ruin the many, or the many be allowed to ruin themselves. If an officer is prepared to violate the rules of the service for his professional advancement, let him do so at his own risk, but let him not be allowed to force others to aid him in his object. We know of the case of one officer who has joined a regiment from the list of a presidency, and finds himself threatened with this enormous tyranny. He is loved in his regiment, and he likes and loves his regiment; he has lived on his pay without debt, and he is quite content to take the chances of service for his promotion; but he is made aware that payments will be expected from him which will cause him to become a burden on his friends, or raise money at usurious rates, which will cast a heavy burden on himself. He is quite justified in resisting the demands, but unless he is sustained in doing so, the officers will consider themselves entitled to treat him as a nuisance, and to exercise that power of which they can make such cruel use. It is surely only necessary to call the attention of the excellent administration which we are happy to have at the War Office to this very great evil to secure their intervention, and to obtain guarantees for the observance of the letter and spirit of the Queen's Regulations in her Majesty's Army in India, which has no prescriptive right to be disobedient.—Army and Navy Gazette.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

The report of the directors states that no additional mileage had been opened in Bengal during the half-year, but it was expected that the line from Benares to Mirzapore would have been completed and ready for traffic by the 1st of the current month. In the North-West Provinces an additional length of 48½ miles from the Toondla Junction to Allyghur was opened on the 1st of March, so that on the 30th of June last the company had open for traffic 935½ miles. On the Jubbulpore line the contractors, Messrs. Waring and Hunt, were making reasonable progress. The permanent way and works had been maintained in efficient order during the half-year at a cost of 12½d. per train mile. The number of passengers conveyed on the Bengal division during the past half-year was 1,392,600, of whom 13,978 were first-class and 45,909 second-class passengers. The gross traffic receipts on this division for the half-year ending the 30th of June last had been 391,832, and the net receipts £198,082. The net traffic receipts from the opening of the line to the 30th of June last had been £1,035,135. On the North-West Provinces the average length of line in work for the half-year was 304 miles. The permanent way and works had been maintained in efficient order at a cost of rather less than 0½d. per train mile. The working expenses had been 49 67 per cent. of the gross receipts. The number of passengers conveyed during the half-year was 297,917, of whom 2,956 were first-class, and 5,823 second-class passengers. The proportion of railway materials included in the traffic returns of the past half-year was about 22½ per cent. The gross traffic receipts for the half-year ended 30th June last had been £124,532, and the net receipts £62,675. The net traffic receipts since the opening of the line for public traffic had been £208,048. The Board had been informed that the Government of India was favourably disposed to the construction by the company of the line to the Kurlhurballee coalfields, and that the surveys which the Board suggested last February were progressing.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY COMPANY.

The half-yearly meeting of this company was held yesterday at the London Tavern; Mr. W. J. Hamilton in the chair.

Mr. Watt, the secretary, having read the notice convening the meeting, the report was taken as read.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, congratulated the proprietors on the steady progress that had been made with the works. Their chief engineer had just arrived from India, and would give them any information they required on the subject. The Biore Ghat incline had been opened on the 21st of April last for goods traffic, but it could not be opened for passenger traffic until the works were properly consolidated. Some settlements, as expected, had taken place during the monsoon, and had interrupted the traffic for some time. He considered that the report of Mr. Graham, their chief engineer, was, on the whole, extremely satisfactory as to the progress of the works, and also with regard to the last paragraph in it, relating to the completion of the surveys of the alternative line to Hyderabad, instead of the original one to Moodgul. He thought the proposed line to Hyderabad was of so much consequence, both in a political and commercial point of view, that he trusted the Government would sanction its construction. The object of the extension line was to form a junction with the Madras Railway at a point near Hyderabad, and thus complete a through communication from Bombay via Hyderabad to Madras. The alternative line would be about sixty miles longer than the originally proposed line via Moodgul, but when it was considered that it would pass through a rich and populous district, while that to Moodgul was a barren and unproductive district, there could be no difficulty in deciding in favour of the best line. The distance from Bombay to Madras was between eight hundred and nine hundred miles, so that an increase of sixty miles in that distance to secure those advantages was not important. He believed the Government of Bombay, as well as that of Madras, were favourable to the best route being adopted. During the past half year the receipts for traffic amounted to £290,000, out of which they had to deduct £56,000 for carrying traffic over the Ghat, leaving £234,000, which was an increase of £67,000 over the corresponding period of last year. No doubt the working expenses were very considerable. The increase in the working expenses was £45,000 during the past half-year, of which £25,000 was paid by the company as compensation for damages. He thought it satisfactory, notwithstanding the increased cost of working and damages, that the net receipts were £21,000 more than the corresponding half of 1867. The loss by damaged cotton arose in two ways. The first loss amounted to £10,000 from fire, while a heavy train of cotton was passing through an arid and barren district, and, in spite of all the exertions made to extinguish it, nearly the whole train was consumed, involving an additional loss in the destruction of rolling stock. But the great loss which occurred to them took place just before the setting in of the monsoon; and in alluding to this question it would be necessary for him to advert to the conduct of the Bombay Government, which he did not think was fair or just towards the company. Immediately prior to the monsoon a great quantity of cotton was brought to their railway at Etregaum and Egutpoore. The natives brought their produce in vast quantities, partly in consequence of its being the period of the year for sending it to market, and partly stimulated by the high prices in Bombay. There was no doubt some want of management in the traffic arrangements; but when this great loss from damage to the cotton had been reported the Government sent an engineer officer to inquire into the matter, and immediately published his report in the newspapers without giving the company's committee in Bombay an opportunity of explanation. Not only did the Government authorities do this, but they made very serious charges against the company in language neither fit nor decorous on their part. He then read the resolution of the Bombay Government, in which they expressed an opinion that the conduct of the company was very discreditable on the first opening of the cotton trade, in which all the arrangements had broken down, not only causing great loss, and that the management was disgraceful, inasmuch as 4,000 bales a day should have been carried, while the railway never carried more than 2,000 bales. Of course, as soon as the statement appeared, the committee in Bombay proceeded to give an explanation of the circumstances. The Government ought to have inquired of the committee for an explanation of the matter before publishing the report referred to. With regard to not having efficient traffic arrangements, there was an enormous amount of business brought to the railway, and it could not be conveyed away at once. So far back as the middle of last year the company applied to the Government to allow them to send out two additional traffic managers, as they expected to lose one, and they had since lost the services of Mr. Cooper. When this proposal was made to the Government they said it was premature and better to defer it, thereby putting off the appointment of additional superintendence and leaving them without sufficient assistance to carry on the traffic. Not having sufficient cover at the station, considerable loss was sustained. The natives brought immense quantities of cotton to the railway, and actually covered several acres of land with cotton in bales from four to six deep; but, on the other hand, the Government had refused to allow the company to make sidings for the accommodation of the traffic. By the advice of the Government consulting engineer the requirements of the company in this respect had been reduced, and the estimates had been cut down. The committee in Bombay had proposed to the Government certain requirements for the traffic, and pointed out what was likely to occur and which had occurred. On the opening of the Biore Ghat, the contractor for carrying the goods had all his carts released, and also a large number of additional carts, so that he was enabled to bring down to the Thull Ghat so much cotton in two or three days as the company could carry away in three or four weeks on a single line of railway, having but a limited number of waggons to meet this extraordinary pressure. The company had been in negotiation with the Government during the past ten years respecting a goods station at Bombay, but nothing had yet been done. He hoped, however, that in the course of another year there would be something tangible done in this most important matter. The committee had applied to the Government to allow the company to store the cotton in some of the Government stores in Bombay, but a most extravagant price was fixed upon by the officials. Complaints had been made that a number of third-class passengers had been left behind at one or two stations. It was impossible for the company to provide for a large addition to the number of passengers without running additional trains; and the company were prevented from running additional trains without express authority from the Government. With respect to the fares for third-class passengers they were exceedingly small, less than a farthing per mile, and they carried about 40,000 to 50,000 third-class passengers a week. The average distance travelled by third-class passengers was 30 miles, and the average fare 9d. each passenger. The fare was very little more than the cost of their conveyance. This was the explanation he had to give. Under these circumstances the presence of one of their colleagues, Mr. Ayrton, M.P., in Bombay would, it was believed, tend to some settlement of the various subjects remaining unsettled between the company and the Government. The settlement of the station at Bombay and the alteration of the fares were of the utmost importance to the company. The Government had been urged to fix maximum rates, leaving to the company the power of fixing rates in the same manner as in England. The company had secured the services of a gentleman as general manager. They looked to this appointment with great satisfaction, and hoped they should not have to meet such charges in future as those recently published by the Government.

Mr. J. G. Frith, in seconding the motion for the adoption of the report, said there had been a great want of forethought in the Government authorities, and the result had been very disastrous. The interference in the internal arrangements of the railway company had been attended with the most injurious effects on the interests of the shareholders. He hoped the experience they had had would have the effect of removing these obstructions to the successful working of the railway.

The motion was then carried unanimously, and the forfeiture of certain shares for the non-payment of calls was confirmed.

After some observations by a shareholder, a vote of thanks to the chairman and directors was unanimously carried.

The Chairman, in acknowledging the vote, explained that his objection to Government control was only in respect to undue interference in the management of the internal affairs of the company. In other respects he thought the control of the Government beneficial to the shareholders, as it prevented an improper waste of their funds and served to check abuses; but he thought engineer officers should confine themselves to what they were conversant with, and not enter into minute details of railway management that had taken years of experience to arrive at. With regard to the general control of Government, he thought it was most beneficial to proprietors.

Mr. Graham, the chief engineer, explained that the works were steadily progressing, and they were extending into the cotton district. At Nagpore they would get into the most important cotton fields of Western India. By the end of the year they would open to Shegaum, and in June, 1864, a further distance. He confidently looked forward to the end of 1865, or nearly in 1866, for the completion of the lines to Nagpore and Jubbulpore. The surveys of the line to Hyderabad had been completed, and lodged with the Government for approval. Hyderabad contained between 300,000 and 400,000 inhabitants. When the undertaking was completed he could hardly imagine a more successful system of lines than they would have from Nagpore and Jubbulpore in the interior to the port of Bombay.

The proceedings then terminated.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SUDDEN DEATH OF GENERAL MACNEIL.—We regret to announce the sudden death of General Roderick Macneil, Colonel of the 78th Regiment of Foot, who expired shortly after eleven Thursday forenoon, the 22nd inst., in his dressing-room, at his house in Hyde Park gardens. The deceased general was a Peninsular and Waterloo officer. He was at the battle of Corunna, under Sir John Moore, and subsequently served in the Walcheren Expedition in 1809. After seeing active service in Swedish Pomerania and Holland in the years 1813 and 1814, he took part in the campaign of 1815, including the battle of Waterloo. For some years he held the command of the 78th Highlanders, with which regiment he proceeded to India. In recognition of his long and meritorious services, the deceased general was, in 1855, appointed colonel of the 8th (King's) Regiment of Foot, and, on a vacancy occurring in the 78th, he was transferred to that regiment. He entered the army as ensign in March, 1808, and obtained the rank of General in December last year.

PROPOSED COUNTY MEMORIAL TO CAPTAIN SPEKE.—During the transaction of the county business at the Somersetshire quarter sessions, held at Wells on Tuesday, the 20th inst., a discussion took place respecting the propriety of making a county demonstration in honour of Captain Speke, the discoverer of the source of the Nile, who is a native of Somersetshire. It was stated that her Majesty had expressed a desire that a memorial of some kind should be placed in the county which had given birth to so distinguished a traveller. It was resolved to invite Captain Speke to a county dinner at Taunton, to be succeeded by a grand ball, and the following gentlemen were appointed a committee to consider upon a fitting testimonial with which to present the gallant captain:—Lord Taunton, Sir W. Miles, Bart., M.P., Colonel Pinney, M.P., Sir A. A. Hood, Bart., M.P., W. H. P. G. Langton, Esq., M.P., Dr. Prior, and Messrs. Grenville, Sandford, Hamilton, Dickenson, Coombe, Elliot, Halliday, Kinglake, and Esdaile.

THE LATE CAPTAIN JOSLING AND COMMANDER WILMOT.—The following is an epitome of the services of the above officers of her Majesty's ship Euryalus, 35 guns, and flag-ship of Vice Admiral Kuper, C.B., who lost their lives in the attack on Kagosima, Japan. Captain John James Stephen Josling was only thirty-seven years of age, and entered the navy over twenty-three years ago, nineteen years and nine months of which had been devoted to active sea service. He was acting-lieutenant of the Scout, 14, Commander Loring, in the East Indies, in 1847; and senior of the Thetis, 38, Captain Kuper, C.B., in the Pacific, from July, 1850, to the spring of 1854, when he joined the Eurydice, 26, Captain Ommanney, in the White Sea, and remained in her until promoted to commander, November 2, 1854. As commander he served in the James Watt, 91, at Devonport, from May, 1856, until June, 1857; in the Princess Royal, 91, in the Mediterranean, from Feb. 1858, until Dec. 1859, when he joined the Queen, 80, and again served on the same station until advanced to post rank, Jan. 31, 1861. He was appointed to the Euryalus, 35, screw frigate, flag-ship of Rear-Admiral Augustus L. Kuper, C.B., Feb. 10, 1862. Commander Edward Wilmot was in his thirtieth year, and entered the navy in 1845. He was mate of the Prince Regent, 90, employed on particular service, from June, 1852, until the spring of 1853, when he was appointed to the Royal Yacht Victoria and Albert, and remained in her until the following September, when his captain, Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, O.C.B., obtained flag rank. He was advanced to the rank of lieutenant, Sept. 26, 1853, and after a few months' employment in the Excellent, gunnery ship at Portsmouth, joined the Royal Albert, 121, flag-ship of Vice-Admiral Lord Lyons, O.C.B., &c., June 24, 1854, and was employed in the Mediterranean until Aug., 1858. He was lieutenant of the Indus, 78, flag-ship of Vice-Admiral Sir Houston Stewart, K.C.B., on the North-American and West India station, from Nov., 1858, until the spring of 1859, and was flag-lieutenant to Rear Admiral George Rodney Mundy, C.B., in the Hannibal (89), in the Mediterranean, from May, 1859, until advanced to the rank of commander, Dec. 24, 1861. As commander he served in the Agamemnon (89), on the North-American and West India station, from Jan., 1862, until paid off in October following, and his appointment to the Euryalus was made Jan. 20 of the present year.

THE LE BAS PRIZE.—This prize, founded in memoriam of the Rev. C. W. Le Bas, of the late East India College, at Haileybury, for the best English essay with reference to the probable destinies and prospects of the Anglo-Indian empire, has been this day adjudged for the present year to John R. Mozley, B.A., King's College. The examiners were of opinion that an essay bearing the motto "Ego nec studium," &c., was deserving of especial commendation, and the author is requested to call upon the Vice-Chancellor.

THE BURNEY CASE.—It may be as well, in reference to the case, of which we have not, we fear, heard the last, to state that Sir Hugh Rose sent Colonel Burney's papers to the Governor-general, and that it was Lord Elgin who gazetted the brigadier's out, in pursuance of his acceptance of resignation or the alternative of a trial. The option was given to him solely because he had, or was believed to have had, submitted to insult from his junior officers. In consequence of the judgment of Sir Mordaunt Wells, which has taken the Commander-in-Chief somewhat by surprise, we imagine Sir H. Rose will order a strict investigation into the conduct of Colonel Turner and Captain Eyre; and the latter will, it is surmised in India, demand a court-martial. The whole affair will not tend to promote good will between the civil and military powers in India.—Army and Navy Gazette.

THE CRAWLEY COURT-MARTIAL.—The prosecution in the court-martial on Colonel Crawley will be conducted by Colonel Sir Alfred Horsford, K.C.B., Deputy Adjutant-General, Horse Guards, and it is to be hoped that the gallant officer will fare better than poor Colonel Brownrigg did in the cause célèbre at Dublin. The task is at any time odious enough; in the present instance it promises to be of unusual difficulty, to say nothing of its duration and of the stress it will lay on the powers of body as well as of mind. So we cannot but say for one in Sir Alfred Horsford's position, "Heaven send him a safe deliverance." The instructions prepared by Mr. Denison, the Deputy Judge Advocate-General, under the direction of the Judge Advocate-General, will no doubt be clear and explicit; and as the issues are but two, it may be expected, notwithstanding the number of witnesses, that by good management the trial may be concluded in a couple of months. Sir George Wetherall will preside; and among the members of the court will be, it is said, General Rumley and Colonel Hodge, the rest being, as far as they can be had, officers conversant with cavalry matters and Indian practice. Colonel Crawley has retained the services of Mr. Denman, and his friends are sanguine that he will establish an excellent case. The private letters of many military men from India indicate a state of opinion there more favourable to the accused than could have been considered possible here if a tithe of what has been alleged against him be true. A history of the whole case from a pen practised in military matters will appear in the November number of the Cornhill Magazine. J. O. can be just as well as unmerciful.—Army and Navy Gazette.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.—The surviving founders of University College will remember the hearty co-operation which they met with in their project from several opulent Indian merchants, and notably from Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, Bart., Framjee Cowasjee Bunnajee, Sudasew Kaskinath Chutree, Rogay Mohammed Ulay, and other Bombay gentlemen. From the time when, by means found by the late Earl of Auckland, Dwankanath Tagore, Sir Edward Ryan, and others, Dr. Goodeve brought over Soorjo Coomar Chuckerbutty, now Dr. Chuckerbutty, one of the Professors in the College at Calcutta, Bholanath Bose, and their two fellow-students, and provided for them a course of British academical education, the college, in one or other of its faculties, or in its junior department, has had a constant succession of students from the Presidencies, mostly Parsees. Of the estimation in which intelligent and distinguished Indians hold the advantages which their countrymen have thus enjoyed a substantial proof has just been afforded to the authorities of the college, by the munificent gift of £1,000 for the hospital. The following are the terms of the letter which was addressed to Dr. Walshe, emeritus, Professor of Medicine, and forwarded by him for communication to the Council:—

"London, Oct. 20, 1863.

The balance-sheet, which was read by the chief manager, Mr. C. J. F. The creditor side showed that they had, in coin and bullion, £2,775,883; landed and other property, £172,998; debts secured by landed and other property, £50,293; Government securities, £1,047,127; promissory notes or bills of other banks, £45,025; balance due from other banks, £1,221,332; notes and bills discounted, or other debts due to the corporation, not included under the foregoing heads, £10,224,984; making the total, in round figures, £15,537,642. The profit and loss account showed that the balance undivided in December, 1862, was £4,178, and the amount of net profit for the half-year ending June 30, 1863, after defraying current charges and providing for all bad and doubtful debts, was £111,727, making a total of £115,905. ORIENTAL INLAND STEAM COMPANY.—A special general meeting of the shareholders of the Oriental Inland Steam Company (Limited) was held at the London Tavern on Tuesday last, for the purpose of confirming resolutions passed at a late extraordinary meeting, to authorise the issue of unallotted or forfeited shares. Colonel Grimes, who took the chair, urged upon the shareholders the necessity of taking up their proportionate share and preference capital, for unless they did so there was but little chance of the company being able to go on, or of their property being saved. After some discussion, the following resolutions were passed:—

"1. The directors shall have authority to issue the present unallotted and forfeited shares, with a preferential right of dividend not exceeding 8 per cent. on the amount of each of such shares, giving to the holders of fully paid-up shares, and to the holders of C shares, in respect of whose shares no call due is unpaid, the preference in the allotment of such shares, in proportion to the shares held by them, over other applicants."

"2. The directors shall have authority, with the consent of a general meeting of the shareholders, at any future time to issue any other unallotted or forfeited shares in the company, with a like preferential right of dividend, not exceeding a rate to be expressed in the resolution of the general meeting of shareholders authorising such issue, with a like preference of the holders of fully paid-up ordinary shares, and of C shares, in respect of which no call is due and unpaid, in the allotment of such preference shares. And also to consent that the directors may issue, in addition to the present 6,500 unallotted and forfeited shares, any other shares which may become forfeited, not exceeding in the whole 10,000 shares, inclusive of the present unallotted and forfeited shares, with a preferential dividend not exceeding 8 per cent."

Mr. Paul proposed, and Mr. Godwin seconded, as an amicable adjustment, the following, which was carried:—

"That 3,000, or about one-third of the shares, should be forfeited; and that the sums already paid upon them should be transferred as payment to the credit of the holders of such shares."

A vote of thanks to the chairman closed the proceedings.

The minimum prices declared were, as before, 1s. 11½d. per rupee on Calcutta and Madras, and 1s. 11¾d. on Bombay. The applications within the limits amounted to 317 lacs. Tenders on Calcutta at 1s. 11½d. will receive about 30 per cent., on Bombay at 2s. about 6 per cent., on Madras at 1s. 11¾d. will receive about 30 per cent., and all above these prices in full.

MR. EPHRAIM MOSELY'S IMPROVE-

MENT in the CONSTRUCTION of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES, on an INDIA-RUBBER BASE, are secured by Letters Patent, dated December, 1852, whereby the continual outlay of new teeth is avoided, alterations from the absorption of the gums, or any other cause, being easily remedied, and the first outlay no greater than for ordinary kinds. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted as under:—It consists of one continuous piece of Prepared India-rubber. The Artificial Teeth present an uniformly even surface to the action of the tongue, preventing lodgment of food and all secretions, so much complained of in the present system. No gold or any other metal being required, all springs, wires, and fastenings are wholly unnecessary; sharp edges are avoided, a greatly increased freedom of action is supplied, a natural elasticity hitherto wholly unattainable, and a fit perfected with the most unerring accuracy, are secured, while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums. The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the prepared india-rubber; and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may be retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being at the same time provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

Quintessence of Jamaica Ginger and Camomile.

GINGER has long been deservedly known as an excellent domestic medicine, and, combined with camomile, it is the most efficient stomachic tonic known, for while the ginger relieves the stomach from distension and flatulency, arising from impaired digestion, the camomile strengthens the coats of the stomach, and by that means gives it a healthy and invigorating tone. So highly concentrated is this preparation, it is unimpaired by age or climate, and we adapt it for exportation. In Gout, Rheumatism, Dysentery, Cholera, or those complaints incidental to tropical climates, it is invaluable, as in numerous cases a dose or two has checked and frequently cured most alarming attacks. No family should be without it. Sold in half-pints, quarter-pints, and one-eighth pints.

Agreeable Sydlitz Powder, in one bottle, protected by a case, with measure and spoon included. The advantage of this preparation is the perfect combination of the solid ingredients of the Sydlitz Spring in one compound powder.

It is very cooling and refreshing, well adapted for exportation, or travellers by land or sea.

Aromatic Liniment of Quinine.—For the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria.

No person exposed to the influence or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for it taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria.—Sold in tins, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by THOS. WILKINSON (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Fleet-street, London, W.

DINNEFORD'S PURE FLUID MAGNE-

SIA has been, during twenty-five years, emphatically sanctioned by the Medical Profession, and universally accepted by the Public, as the Best Remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion, and as a Mild Aperient for delicate constitutions, more especially for Ladies and Children. When combined with the Acidulated Lemon Syrup, it forms an agreeable Effervescent Draught, in which its Aperient qualities are much increased. During Hot Seasons, and above all, in Hot Climates, the regular use of this simple and elegant remedy has been found highly beneficial.

It is prepared in a state of perfect purity and of uniform strength by DINNEFORD and Co., 172, New Bond-street, London; and sold by all respectable Chemists throughout the World.

IF you GREASE or STAIN with PAINT

any Silks, Cloths, Curtains, or other article of Household Furniture, or Wearing Apparel, the best and most effectual agent for removing it is the BENZINE COLLAS, which will not alter the colour or injure the texture.

Sold by SANGER and Son, 150, Oxford-street, W., and all respectable Chemists. Price 1s. 6d. per Bottle.

IMPORTANT TO PEOPLE RETURNED

from INDIA.—The only really effectual relief for torpidity of the liver, bile, and all those weak feelings arising from the change from a hot climate, is SANGER'S TASTELESS ANTIBILIOUS POWDERS, a trial of which will satisfy the most sceptical. They are invaluable for chronic bile, and do not weaken the system by violent purging, or saturate it with mercury, which most remedies for the bile do.

Sold by J. SANGER, 160, Oxford-street, W., in packets, at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., or by post for fifteen or thirty-six stamps.

EMERY'S PATENT AMERICAN COTTON GIN, with CLEANER and CONDENSER, adjustable for all kinds and conditions of Cotton, and suited for all Climates and Countries; also adapted for Steam, Water, Horse and Manual Power.

BLAIR'S GOUT and RHEUMATIC PILLS.

—This preparation is one of the benefits which the science of modern chemistry has conferred upon mankind; for during the first twenty years of the present century to speak of a cure for the Gout was considered a romance; but now the efficacy and safety of this medicine is so fully demonstrated, by un-olicted testimonials from persons in every rank of life, that public opinion proclaims this as one of the most important discoveries of the present age. These Pills require no restraint of diet or confinement during their use, and are certain to prevent the disease attacking any vital part. Sold at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per Box, by all Medicine Vendors.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—

Indisputable remedies for bad legs, old wounds, sores, and ulcers. If used according to directions given with them, there is no wound, bad leg, ulcerous sore, or bad breast, however obstinate or long standing, but will yield to their healing and curative properties. Numbers of persons who have been patients in several of the large hospitals, and under the care of eminent surgeons, without deriving the slightest benefit, have been thoroughly cured by Holloway's Ointment and Pills. For glandular swellings, tumours, scurvy, and diseases of the skin, there is no medicine that can be used with so good an effect. In fact, in the worst forms of disease dependent upon the condition of the blood, these medicines are irresistible.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Governor-General left Simla early on the morning of the 26th of September (under something like a double royal salute), to make his viceregal progress through the land of the Five Rivers. He was accompanied by Lady Elgin and Miss Bruce. His Excellency expected to arrive at Kangra on the 16th October, Dhurmsalla on the 17th, Madhapore on the 24th, and Sealkote about the 2nd November. The march will thence be resumed on the 10th, and on the 8th of the following month the viceregal camp will be pitched at Peshawur, where a three days' halt will be made, after which His Excellency will leisurely retrace his steps to Lahore, so as to be there by the middle of January, in time to open the Punjab Exhibition, and resume his labours in Council.

Sir Hugh Rose left Simla on the 6th October, on a tour of official inspection. He was accompanied by Captain Moore, his Persian interpreter, and Captain Browne, A.D.C. His Excellency had had a terrible throw, head foremost, from his horse; but he is used to such accidents, and had his usual good fortune to escape with no serious injury. He is likely to come into personal contact with Sir Mordaunt Wells, at Lahore, and it is pretty certain that he will not greet the ex-judge with looks of amity.

The Legislative Council at Calcutta will be at Lahore in January.

Sir Bartle Frere and Sir William Mansfield are at Poona.

Sir Robert Napier is about to visit the Andaman Islands and Port Blair.

Mr. Ayrton, M.P. for the Tower Hamlets, is now at Bombay, inspecting the works of the G. I. P. Railway Company, of which he is a director.

Dr. Duff, the Missionary, was at Bombay on his return from the Straits, but was to leave for Calcutta by the P. and O. Company's steamer, on the 14th of October. He is much improved in health, though still weak.

H.M.'s 33rd Regiment, at Poona, were under orders to proceed to New Zealand.

A curious and shocking case of domestic conspiracy has occurred in India. A Mr. Tucker, of the Pilot Service, was on bad terms with his wife, a vindictive termagant, who had frequently brought him into the police-court. She had been heard to say that she would effect his utter ruin. For this purpose she actually went so far as to accuse him of forced violation of his own daughter, and the daughter had the barefaced wickedness to appear as a false witness against her father. He was tried before the High Court of Bombay, and pronounced not guilty.

Affairs in the capital of Affghanistan wear a more peaceable aspect. The Delhi Gazette's Cabul news letter describes a reconciliation between the Ameer and Azim Khan. With six sowars the Ameer visited his rebellious brother at Gurdraiz, and embraced Sirdar Mohamed Azim Khan as he was coming out to receive him. Mohamed Azim Khan took the Ameer into the fort and treated him very kindly. It is said that the Ameer remained there for the night, and that all matters were settled between the two brothers; but as it is given out even in Cabul that the Ameer went thus comparatively unattended because he feared his troops would desert to Azim Khan, we may expect active hostilities on the part of the latter the moment he is joined by Afzul Khan, his brother by the same mother.

The Hindoo Patriot mentions the establishment in Calcutta of "The City Bank," with a capital of a million sterling, in £50 shares, by Bengali capitalists. The shares are already at a premium. We are glad of this, if the scheme is sound. Bengalis have, in respect of enterprise and trade, too long lagged behind their Bombay brethren.

There will be no end to the Nanans for some time. We are now told of another who has been captured by the Political Agent of Jolhpore, and is being forwarded to Captain Davidson, at Ajmere. Will Captain Davidson be again taken in? The last Nana is said to be in a dying state. It is believed there is no rebel leader of note in Saloombur; which place was said to have given so pleasant a reception to the last pseudo Nana, and was said by his attendant still to harbour the real Tantia Topee. But there are some three hundred rebel sepoys in the neighbouring jungles.

There is said to be some likelihood of the Honourable Mr. Drummond, Lieut.-governor of the North-West Provinces, soon resigning his important post. Mr. Wingfield is spoken of as his probable successor, though that gentleman's health is not in a condition favourable to much exertion and responsibility.

It is said that the Mysore question is at last settled, and that the Rajah has been told that he is not to get back his country. It is also said that there is to be a large encampment of British troops at Mysore in anticipation of disturbances. Mysore is financially in a flourishing condition, with an accumulated surplus revenue, amounting to at least a million.

The reports of the acting Chief Engineer and the Traffic Manager give a very satisfactory account of the progress of the Scinde Railway. Notwithstanding the prevalence of sickness, particularly amongst the inspectors and platelayers, and the small staff employed, a large amount of work has been done, and the bridges at Pimpree, Kringala, and Mayting are almost completed. The road to Keamaree is also in a forward state of completion. There has been a gradual increase and development of the traffic during the past half-year, which has fully equalled all anticipations. The average earnings for the half-year ending 31st December, 1862 was Rs. 15,000 per week—to June last it was Rs. 22,900, being an average weekly increase of Rs. 7,000.

The little war on the Huzara frontier is under a pretty potent check. There is now there a force consisting of some companies of the 191st Fusiliers, the Guides, 1st Punjab Infantry, a squadron of the 5th Punjab Cavalry from Kohat, and a squadron of the 12th Irregular Cavalry from Rawul Pindee. It has been decided that an expedition is to be sent against the enemy, and the details of this Sir Hugh Rose is now busily arranging. The 71st, from Nowshera, is to form one of the European regiments for this service. The expedition will be 5,000 strong, and will be commanded by Brigadier General Chamberlain.

It is authoritatively stated that Sir Robert Montgomery retains the Government of the Punjab till February 24, 1865.

The Alabama is cruising in the Bay of Bengal.

The prospects of the cotton crop in the Central Provinces are affording every gratification to those concerned in its cultivation. The season has been most favourable.

Captain C. Strutt, of the Bombay Artillery, and formerly aide-de-camp to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, has, we understand, been appointed by Government Superintendent of the Hill Forests in the Himalayan range; and will exercise supervision over the growth, preservation, and disposal of the valuable timber contents of those portions of our territories.

Much surprise, says the Bengal Hurkaru, is expressed in military circles at Sir Hugh Rose's delay in taking action on the judgment delivered by Sir M. L. Wells in the Burney case. So far as it is publicly known, nothing whatever has been done to investigate the military offence of combination charged by that learned judge against General Campbell, Brigadier Macpherson, Colonel Gordon, and Captain Eyre. Neither does it appear that the contempt of Court shown by the destruction of a certain important letter and telegram has been visited by any mark of displeasure. Above all, no step has been taken to make amends to General Burney for the imputation of disgraceful conduct so hastily and unjustly adopted by the Commander-in-Chief. It is, therefore, generally supposed that his Excellency is awaiting instructions from the Horse Guards as to his future proceedings in this matter; and no one will be surprised, and very few sorry, to hear that Sir Hugh has been recommended to send in his resignation.

We mentioned in our last number that Brigadier Chamberlain had resigned, or was about to resign, his command, in disgust at the Commander-in-Chief's official use of a private communication. This seems to be a mistake. We take the following from the Lahore Chronicle:—"We hear from Murree, where Brigadier-General Sir Neville Chamberlain is at present residing, that the gallant officer's intended resignation of the command of the Punjab Irregular Force is caused by continued ill-health, an early return to England being deemed essential to its recovery. We infer from this information that the reason we lately assigned for Sir Neville's resignation—the use made of a private communication by high military authority—was incorrect."

The Rev. J. H. Pratt, Archdeacon of Calcutta, was about to resume his tour of visitation (recommencing in October, and ending in February, 1864,) through the chief towns of the Punjab.

BENGAL.

THE BURNEY CASE.

SIMLA, Sept. 16.—With regard to the Burney trial, I believe Sir Hugh Rose has not taken any definite action yet in the matter of the very extraordinary evidence of the several officers on the part of the defence. But that he means to do so I am safe in assuring you. The conduct of the one which appears to me as most calling for severe censure is that of Colonel Gordon. I know, from independent sources that this officer has been at the bottom of the whole business, and that, moreover, he has, in his persecution of Colonel Burney, been secretly aided and abetted by Colonel Macpherson. At the time of the occurrence of the Dinapore squabble it must be remembered that Colonel Macpherson, commanding the 10th N.I., was first on the Commander-in-Chief's list for a brigade command, and Lieut.-Colonel Gordon for the command of a corps. The simple removal of Brigadier Burney was, therefore, admirably calculated to serve the purposes of both these officers. To this end they most perseveringly worked, taking every advantage of poor old Burney's kindly disposition, till, at length, the one worked himself into a brigadiership, and the other into the command of a regiment, by effecting the removal of Brigadier Burney.

COLONEL TURNER.—The witness who, next to Colonel Gordon, most distinguished himself, seems to have been Colonel Turner, Deputy Judge Advocate-general. That he should, above all others, have so demeaned and stultified himself, disgraced his department, and brought discredit on, and even very nearly compromised his patrons, is not a little surprising; though I am in a position to say that no very high opinion of his judgment and abilities has ever been held by his superiors. There can be no doubt that he has "cooked his own goose," for, unlike the contradictions and prevarications of Gordon and Willis, remarkable only for their maliciousness, his statements betray an amount of departmental ignorance which is unpardonable even in the most inexperienced, and is wholly intolerable in an officer in his position. He will, therefore, be removed from his staff appointment without fail. "No one," observes Sir Mordaunt Wells, "heard the evidence of Colonel Turner without feeling distressed and annoyed. I have no doubt he is an honourable man," (Sir Mordaunt said the same of Gordon), "but a man without an atom of independence, and who is prepared to sink every feeling of independence to obedience to head-quarters. His manner was that of a man oppressed with a weight. Every answer came from him as if he wished to reflect the mind of some other person. He said his appointment hung on the breath of the Commander-in-Chief, and that he must postpone every consideration to obedience to orders. He said he could not tell what were the duties of his office, and that if he were to disclose the nature of the manifold ones of his office Sir Charles Wood might be inclined to abolish it. I never saw a witness give his evidence in such a fright as he was. I say 'fright,' as that is the only word that fully expresses the real state of his mind, as indicated by his manner." This is a pretty thing to say of a colonel in the army, holding the highly important office of deputy judge advocate-general; and it is most strange that a man himself accustomed (at least supposed to be) to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and generally to conduct the proceedings of a court of justice, should be so flabbergasted in the examination of himself as a witness. As I have said, it is impossible that Col. Turner can hold his appointment longer than it will take to issue the necessary orders for his removal. So much, then, for these three colonel witnesses—Gordon, Willis, and Turner.

GENERAL CAMPBELL.—A fourth witness, General Campbell, remains to be disposed of; but he must be spoken of in connection with the conduct of the Commander-in-Chief. Sir Hugh Rose does not altogether escape censure from the bench; but had the judge taken a more minute and more military view of the case, he would have found that the Commander-in-Chief acted throughout with perfect good faith, and that truly, as Sir Mordaunt observes, General Campbell in some respects exceeded, and in others fell short of his instructions. The Commander-in-Chief, however, depended on him for the fullest compliance with his instructions, and believed to the last that the General acted with the most perfect justice and fair play to all parties. On the General's reports, and on no other statements, did His Excellency frame his own orders. It has been most distinctly shown that the Commander-in-Chief did from the very onset desire that a "searching inquiry" should be instituted. It was with this view that he deputed General Campbell to Dinapore, General Campbell, however, in company with Colonel Turner, his legal adviser, completely misapprehended the object of his mission, and instead of investigating the charges which had been clandestinely preferred by Lieutenant Eyre against Brigadier Burney, proceeded in the most summary and arbitrary manner possible to demand the resignation of the oppressed and persecuted brigadier. "Will you resign?" was the laconic and authoritative question, according to the evidence of the plaintiff and Colonel Turner, put by him to Brigadier Burney. It was never the Commander-in-Chief's intention that such harsh and unconstitutional measures should have been had recourse to; and when at length the brigadier was bullied into resigning, and his resignation was forwarded to the Commander-in-Chief, his Excellency naturally believed that such had been tendered voluntarily, and accordingly arrived at the conclusion that "by resigning the brigadier had acknowledged the sufficiency of the evidence against him, and his guilt."

No further proof was required. The resignation was accompanied by the General's report, which, unless the Commander-in-Chief chose to ignore, was sufficiently confirmatory of the act as being one which, under the circumstances, the Brigadier deemed most preferable; in a word, as in the Crawley case, the Commander-in-Chief relied upon the judgment and discretion, and I may also say honesty, of the Major General commanding the division, as indeed he is bound to do in all such cases; and if his orders were not carried out to the letter and in the spirit they were given, the fault rests with the General, who alone is responsible for all the contumely and injustice the Brigadier has suffered, and who I yet hope will be made publicly answerable for his conduct, grossly improper as it has been throughout the business. As for Capt. Eyre, it is almost impossible to utter his name without loathing. He boasted that, so far from having been "reprimanded for the violent and insulting language he said he had used to Brigadier Burney, he had been promoted." That promotion will ere long infallibly result in as complete a degradation as ever befel a charlatan who had successfully played his pranks for a time. "Nothing," says the judge, "could be worse than his (Captain Eyre's) conduct, and yet he has held himself forth as a hero, but a hero of a low (and, I may add, despicable) order," proved guilty on the clearest evidence of the meanest cowardice and of the grosslest falsehoods. Such, in brief, is the opinion held here in the highest circles on the now famous Burney case, which adds another to the thousand illustrations the world has had of the old saw, namely, "from little causes what mighty results spring."

THE LATE ELOPEMENT.—No particular local news. Great preparations going on for the headquarters staff fancy dress ball, to come off on the 23rd inst. From the sister sanitarium of Mussoorie we hear further particulars of the late elopement, to the effect that the fugitives were met in the Dhoon, on their way down the plains, by Major Thompson, who, having the day previous received a telegram conveying the news of the event, was hastening up to Mussoorie from Roorkee; that Colonel Bush bowed to him; that he exclaimed—"Good God, can it be you?" that Mrs. Thompson then seized the reins, and whipped the horse into a gallop; and that Thompson, being in a dooly, was only able to cast a revengeful glance at his wife and her guilty lover as they rapidly passed out of sight. It appears that Bush has a private fortune of £2,000 a year, and that not long since he sent in his papers to retire from the service. He is only twenty-nine years of age, and stands six feet two inches, while Mrs. Thompson is close upon forty, and has long been known as "the naughty Mrs. T." We have beautiful clear weather now. I can from my eyrie see all the plains some fifty miles off, stretching away far into the distance.—Correspondent of the Times of India.

POPULAR EDUCATION IN THE PUNJAB.

According to Captain A. R. Fuller's Report on Popular Education in the Punjab and its dependencies for the year 1862-63, the want of funds has been a serious bar to progress. The greater credit, therefore, is due to those through whose zeal and perseverance this deficiency has been to a great extent obviated and made good, so far as results are concerned. In the course of the twelve months there was an increase of 54 schools and 7,510 scholars, making in all 2,036 schools and 60,000 scholars, while upwards of £10,000 have been expended on school-houses from the local cess. The cost of educating each pupil in the Zillah, Tehsil, Village, Normal, and Female Schools was respectively Rs. 44-5, Rs. 4-14-10, Rs. 4-3, Rs. 102-11-8, and Rs. 3-13. The fees are said to have increased eight-fold since 1859, in which year they amounted only to Rs. 1,134, whereas in 1862-63 they rose to Rs. 9,419. English is becoming an essential branch of education in the Punjab, and instead of the 1,725 boys who were taught that language in 1859-60, there were 5,834 boys and adults instructed in the course of the past year.

A native deputy-inspector to each district is pronounced indispensable to secure real efficiency. As a proof that very satisfactory progress has been made at the Delhi, Lahore, and Umritsur schools, it may suffice to mention that of twelve candidates for the Calcutta University entrance examination, seven passed. Much inconvenience, however, has been felt from the want of an institution in the Punjab where matriculated students may pursue their more advanced studies. The supreme Government has, therefore, been urged to convert one of the existing schools into a college, with a regular staff of professors. The Lieut.-governor, we observe, has intimated his approval of Capt. Fuller's suggestion to appoint local committees of public instruction, "composed principally of the chief native citizens, who, as a general rule, should be left to themselves, and not be fettered by the admixture of Europeans with their number." An increased grant has been asked for the maintenance of the Normal schools, which are rightly described as "the basis of the whole system of vernacular education." A considerable number of masters have already passed through these schools, though they cannot as yet boast of having attained a high degree of proficiency.

One of the most gratifying results of the general spread of education in the Punjab is the establishment of 103 female schools, attended by 2,224 pupils, or double the number stated in the report of the previous year. As his Honour well observes:—"A great movement of vast importance to the moral and intellectual welfare of the inhabitants of the Punjab has been thus begun, and the prejudices of centuries are gradually being overcome." Of schools receiving Government grants in-aid the number has been increased from 30 to 64, and the sum of Rs. 36,852 was spent upon them, exclusive of Rs. 50,000 granted to the Bishops' School at Jutoy. It is the Lahore School, it may be remarked in conclusion, which the Lieutenant-governor proposes to erect into a college.—Hurkaru.

SAMUEL.

There is a friend of ours in Simla, a very kind, good-natured, good-tempered, generous gentleman, whose name which it is S. B. Goad. But somehow or other, he is destined to lead the life of that electric eel of Barnum's, which could not exist except in boiling hot water. His kindness once induced him to lend a house to a party of gentlemen as wanted to give a ball. What was the consequence? An infamous party, which his name was Walter Fane, a milingitary gent, smashes the chandelier, and then pushes poor Samuel off his own premises; and what was worse, declined to make any reparation. This was very bad. But Samuel shortly after was treated with the basest ingratitude by a heditor who had a pony as was adicted to fits. He blistered the pony, and what's more, he blistered him with his own hands. The name of the pony was Crab, white as a lily, which it came up from Burmah. What was the reward for this kindness? This disreputable heditor said to the saviour of his pony's life that he (Samuel) was a man of good birth but of bad principles, and that he (the pony's owner) knew nothing about him except in a professional way as a horse doctor. His next misfortune was a squabble with the Simla Bank. What was the consequence? Many persons though he was in the right, but the majority of voters considered that he was decidedly in the wrong.

As one of the kindest landlords in creation, he lets his houses to people at the most unremunerative rents. What is the consequence? With the basest ingratitude they perpetually give him trouble. Within the past few years he subscribed largely to a race meeting—simply for the purpose of sport, and not for profit. What was the consequence? They said his horse was not an untrained horse. There was a noise about the stakes, which ought to have been fried in onions, and served up with Harvey sauce. Then he buys a racket court. What is the consequence? It brings him into a pool of trouble, and into the columns of all the rascally papers in India. To narrate the instances of ingratitude towards this good and worthy man, which his name is Samuel, would occupy more space than we can spare. The last instance of ingratitude would seem to be that of Mr. E. P. Moore. This gentleman, we believe, was once a lieutenant of her Majesty's 53rd Foot, and never under a cloud. Very properly, he is tenacious of his reputation, and insists upon the world knowing the fact. He is quite right in supposing that the world has its eye upon him, just as it has on 'tother party, which his name is Samuel. They are both notoriety, and it will be a question with the world which of them is in the right. But we think Goad will get a verdict, because he has the candour to say nothing about his conscience, and Mr. E. P. Moore does, and dwells upon it.

But to be serious. With all his faults we have a great respect for Samuel Goad. During the mutiny, when numbers of officers and others were running down the khuds, and hiding themselves, abandoning women and children to their fate, Sam Goad remained in Simla, unmoved, and armed only with the sword which he had worn as an officer in the Bengal Cavalry. It is said that conscience makes cowards of us all, but Sam Goad's conscience made no coward of him. Valour was his, and that attribute covers as many sins as even charity itself.—Mofussilite.

THE NATIVE PRESS.

We lately announced the intention of the Government of Bengal to appoint a reporter on all the papers edited and published by natives of the country within its jurisdiction. The Government of India has now sanctioned the expenditure for the office, and Mr. John Robinson, the official Bengali translator, will immediately enter on his new duties. Were the measure not altogether an experiment in a field too long untied, we should be inclined to condemn the parsimony which bids fair to ruin it. The whole expense is only Rs. 150 a month. After subscribing to all the native papers, the balance is to be devoted to the employment of a Pundit who knows English and Bengali, and a Moulvie who is familiar with English and Oordoo. They will be superintended by the reporter, in addition to his present duties, and his will be the responsibility. Every paper written by a native, whether in English, Bengali, or Oordoo, must be read by the official, who is responsible. A reporter may devote a few minutes of his leisure daily to listen to the droning sing-song of Pundit or Moulvie, just as before the halcyon days of the new constabulary the "Joint" used to hear his omlah read the darogah's daily reports, as he lay in bed or sipped his morning coffee. But this will be far from satisfactory to a Government which watches over the interests of the public, and wishes to be guided by native opinion so far as it deserves attention. The reporter's duty is every week to make a special report to Government of everything worthy of notice in the social and political contents of the papers. Now there are twenty-four journals in all published in Bengal proper, at intervals varying from a day to a week. Six of these are written in English alone, four in Hindustanee, and fourteen in Bengali. They are not large, it is true, and the English papers are too much a reflex of those edited by Englishmen, and too little represent Bengali opinion, or give local information; but we question if an officer whose duties for nine months of the year are heavy, with two legislative machines turning out Acts at high pressure, has the necessary time to be responsible for a careful report on the contents of those twenty-four papers, or ought to be expected to stand on so high a platform of Indian politics and information as to be the best critic of such productions.

We are glad, however, that the office has been established in any form, and doubt not that what is now only an experiment will become a standing and dignified institution in every local Presidency. The duty more naturally attaches itself to the Educational Department, and we feel assured the weekly reports of such men as Mr. Kempson in the North-West, Captain Fuller in the Punjab, Mr. Howard in Bombay, and Mr. Powell in Madras, would prove as instructive to the public and the native press itself as they would be valuable to the State. We trust that, though other local Governments did not enjoy the luxury of a Nil Durpan trial, they will follow the example of Bengal. It would be well for the Government of Bengal to publish, if not the whole, at least selections from Mr. Robinson's weekly reports and translations of the vernacular papers. Native opinion would thus have its due weight with the English public, while the native press would see itself as in a mirror, and be incited to supplement its defects as well as get rid of its mistakes. We believe it is intended that this experiment shall ultimately be the basis of a vernacular Moniteur. The Bengali Gazette, which this journal established in 1840, has now been made over to Government in Calcutta, and it is contemplated to make it the medium of authoritative expositions of Government measures for the guidance of the people. At present there is a Bengali Educational Gazette somewhat of this character, supported by a liberal grant-in-aid from Government. However valuable such a Moniteur might be as both a social and political engine, we doubt if Government would not accomplish their benevolent object better in a more direct manner. Moniteurs are two-edged swords, which may do more evil than good to the Government which supports them. With so suspicious a population as Asiatics, a vernacular paper of this kind might be as great a failure, but in a more serious way, as the present Official Supplement to the English Gazette, which seems, by fits and starts, to edit itself.—Friend of India.

THE ROMANCE OF INDIAN LAW COURTS.

Where the proceedings of half the Law Courts in India, whether civil or criminal, reported for one year with as much care and fulness as those of England are in the London and provincial newspapers, we should have a body of facts more disgraceful to human nature than the Old Bailey records, more full of instruction for our guidance as legislators and rulers than the experience of the oldest Anglo-Indians, and more redolent of romance than the Arabian Nights. We have only occasionally such rare glimpses into the profound abyss over which we so carefully tread, and which we do so much to conceal, as the revelations made by Mr. Tayler of the proceedings of Abdool Azeez, so long the chief civil uncovenanted judge at Patna. Now and then a case finds its way into the High Court and so to the light, like that of the Paul Chowdry clan or Sibkissen Bannerjea's forgeries. And there is hardly a young magistrate in the country who is not often sorely puzzled by suits, which in England would be decided in the Ecclesiastical or Divorce Court, and demand all the acumen of judges like the late Sir Cresswell Cresswell and his successor Justice Wild.

In the Punjab at least woman is one of the most fruitful causes of litigation. Among the degenerate Rajpoot tribes the pride of blood and the poverty of purse combined lead to female infanticide. Fewer than the men, the women thus become objects of sale and purchase in the highest as well as lowest families, and betrothal contracts form the most difficult and delicate cases which young assistant commissioners, themselves innocent of all knowledge of the thrall of a woman's eye, are called on to deal with. In the Hill district of Kangra especially, and all over the Punjab in the days of the Sikhs, marriage contracts were treated in a peculiar manner. Not merely was specific performance enforced, but if a man died before he married, his betrothed was considered the inheritance of his family, and married to the deceased's heir. Endless ramifications and complications were the result, a chain of exchange betrothals running perhaps through ten families, and if one link failed the whole chain was broken. We have heard of a case in the days of the Sikh incumbency when, a tradesman having become bankrupt, his creditors began to look about for assets. The most valuable part of his property being his daughter, she was sold in marriage as part payment of the debt. Our courts have done what they could to check this, by ignoring suits for betrothal where money or exchange is concerned; but this does not satisfy the people, and we must go deeper into the whole question of betrothal and marriage. In former days it was the usual practice for a man to betroth his daughter to Ramdass for a hundred rupees, and having got the money to betroth her over again to Ramsing for another hundred. There was lately a case in which a woman had thus betrothed her daughter five times over, and after all married her off to a sixth. Registration of course stops all this. Marriages even at home are difficult to be established as facts; what are they not in India? Magistrates have had two men in court, each producing a document and declaring he was the husband of the woman, who all the while protested that she was married to neither. The rival Cazees were called into court, and each took the side of his client. Finally, the lower court decided that A was the husband, and delivered the woman to him, sending B to prison. On appeal the judge made the case over to respectable natives. They decided that B was the husband, and that A ought to be transferred from the nuptial couch to prison.

When Mr. Forsyth was deputy commissioner of Kangra, in 1854, he called meetings of the people, and they then agreed to give up bartering in betrothals; to register every betrothal in their village books, and thus to put a check to the traffic which used to go on, and to decide their disputes among themselves. The result has been most pleasing. Time and experience have modified some of the rules, and Colonel Lake now reports that the village tribunals of the Kangra district alone decided 794 cases of this kind, of which only 112 were appealed, and of the appealed decisions 45 per cent. were confirmed. The five Tehseeldars of the district, themselves of the people, decided 1,565 cases, of which only fifty one were appealed, and of these 86 per cent. were confirmed. Before this arrangement was made our courts were clogged with betrothal cases, in which it was impossible for an English lad just out of college, or a raw lieutenant fresh from the army, to give satisfaction. The courts are now relieved in the proportion of 684, which used to be the average number of cases per annum, to 48, which is the number of appeals. In the nine years from 1854 to 1862 there were 3,599 contracts annually registered in Kangra. This is about half the number of betrothals in the whole district, but those who registered were the less wealthy class, who generally bring their disputes into court, while the higher classes who are too proud to register, are equally so to bring such cases before English magistrates.

It is now proposed to extend this system of registration to the whole Punjab; but with that tentative wisdom which characterises the foremost of our local administrations, every official is called on for a report on the subject. That such cases should be as far as possible decided by native judges, or by committees of the panchayat kind out of court, all will admit, and the success in Kangra is a powerful argument in favour of this. We must remember also that the evil to be thus removed is intimately connected with the female infanticide of which it is the direct fruit, as well as with the great expense of marriages, and the early age at which women marry and bear children. Now not only is every deputy commissioner this cold season to take steps for discovering the extent of female infanticide, but the Government of India intends, we believe, to pass an Act on the subject, and in that it would be well to embody Colonel Lake's proposal to quarter special police on offending villages. The natural result of such preventive measures will be the almost complete prevention of female infanticide, and the restoration of the usual proportion of the sexes. Betrothal and marriage disputes will then fall to the level of other districts, and special registration will be less necessary than it now seems to be. Meanwhile there can be no doubt of its advisability, if the district officials are able to report, as we heartily trust they will be, that even half the population will register such contracts as they do in Kangra. But we confess we sympathise with Sir Robert Montgomery in his disinclination to entertain any proposition affecting the social comfort of the people committed to his charge, until he has fully taken the sense of the leading members of the community. Will it not be sufficient should a majority of the district officers report that the feeling of the people in the plains of the Punjab is decidedly against registering betrothal and marriage contracts, to declare that in all such disputes henceforth a preference will be given to the claim which is supported by a registered document?—Friend of India.

BUSSORAH TO BELGRADE.

Nothing is so remarkable in the politics of that vague but no less real difficulty, the Eastern Question, as the recent revival of governing energy and financial solvency at Constantinople. What the Crimean war began in Europe, and the Syrian massacres showed the necessity of in Asia, the present Sultan is steadily carrying out, with a haste which has more than once brought on his measures the suspicion of madness. The promise of his accession to power has not been disappointed. The seraglio is no longer in the ascendant. Under the counsels of Fuad Pasha the army and navy are on a sounder footing than they have been during the last century. Debt is being paid off, and the revenue is rising. Ruling over, in Europe, Asia, and Africa, what were once the gardens and granaries of the world, the Sultan is in some respects before the Government of India in his efforts to bring back fertility to abandoned soil, and to nurse the trade of the ports of the Levant into healthy proportions. Not only the fact but the whole circumstances of his recent visit to Egypt, are more significant of his intelligent policy than almost any other act. The dignity of the Porte has been well asserted by the despatch that declared that no company such as M. de Lesseps' would ever obtain large territorial concessions on the Isthmus; and though the final result of that despatch has not been the abolition of forced labour, the canal is to be completed by its present directors in such a way as to benefit commerce, if that be possible, as Mr. Hawkshaw seems to think, without aggrandising France. The Sultan's visit to Egypt has resulted in the adoption of a broad policy in the government of the Pashalics. The viceroys who rule the rude provinces of Asia are told that their centralising policy will be no longer tolerated, that they must govern as the Pasha of Egypt does, and not trouble the Porte with the pettiest details of their administration, allowing litigants to travel to Constantinople for the justice which should be obtained at their own doors. Still we do not expect that, in Europe, all this will tend to the consolidation of the Turkish power, however much good it may do in Asia. In the former the Mussulmans are steadily diminishing in numbers, and hold aloof from all that constitutes the daily life, and all that will create the national wealth of the country. The Christian races, on the other hand, are making rapid progress, and it is only a question of time when the Eastern Question will be solved for ever, by the Christians of Turkey ruling from Constantinople, as a barrier at once against Moslem Asia and Tartar Russia.

The Smyrna and Aidin Railway has been so successful in Syria that the Sultan has resolved at last to construct that great world's highway up the Euphrates Valley and on to Belgrade which Sir Macdonald Stephenson and Mr. W. P. Andrew have so long and so constantly advocated. Eight years ago the line from Belgrade, where the European system of railways ends on the south-east as it terminates at Lemberg on the east, to Constantinople, was promised, and preliminary negotiations were entered into, at a time when the Turks had not lost their new-born energy after driving Russia across the Pruth. But there is no doubt that now the line will really be made. The present Sultan is personally in earnest in the matter and is not acting merely from European pressure, while the harem has not robbed him of his energy as it spoiled his predecessor. M. Musurus, the Turkish Ambassador in London, has been in communication with a well-known railway director, whose name it would be at present premature to mention, and the work will be carried out under his superintendence as chief commissioner. The capital is to be raised by the Porte as a public works loan, in the proportion of five millions sterling for the 450 miles of Belgrade and Constantinople line, and twelve millions for its continuation by Bagdad to Bussorah, near the head of the Persian Gulf. The length of the latter is only thirteen hundred miles, or a few miles longer than the Great Indian Peninsula, the cheapest in India, which cost the same sum. The difficulties of construction up the Euphrates Valley and through Syria are certainly less than those offered by the Syhadree Ghauts, which demand works so gigantic and expensive as those of the Bhoire and Thull inclines. There is no reason why the whole line from Bussorah to Belgrade, working south-east from both Belgrade and the Bosphorus simultaneously, should not be completed in ten years. Material and skilled superintendence are near at hand, and all that caused delay in India is wanting there. We accept the electric telegraph cable, which is to put Calcutta in instant communication with Constantinople and London next March, as the earnest of an iron highway such as will place the Anglo-Indian in England in less than half the time now occupied by steamers from Bombay to Marseilles. What the railway is doing for India in commercial and social progress it will accomplish for Central Asia, where Colonel Pelly's report shows the country languishes for want of trading outlets and facilities.

The prospect of the early construction of this line will probably excite the Russians to activity in completing theirs from Lemberg to the Caspian, and thence by the Oxus Valley and through the Hindoo Koosh to Peshawur. There is room for both. Both take up independent lines of commerce, and the Czar is even more anxious than the Porte to make his empire the pathway of the wealth of the East to Europe. The project adds a new importance to the spirited enterprise of the British India Steam Navigation Company who, from Singapore to Bussorah, have established a network of coasting steamers. The links have just been riveted by the despatch of the first steamer from Calcutta, touching at each important coasting port, to Bombay. This company has shown more than the usual daring of pioneers, and it is a cause of gratulation that they early surmounted failure, and have with their large fleet become a power in the Indian Ocean. At present their steamers perform voyages from Bombay to Bussorah only once in six weeks. Thence a small steamer runs up the Tigris to Bagdad, and thence the nearest road homewards lies along the edge of an uninhabited tract to Damascus and Beyrout. This route is not always free from danger, but a traveller lately came from England to India by a more northerly and much safer course—from Latakia by Antioch, Aleppo Orfa, Diarbekir and Mosul, the old Nineveh, whence he sailed down the Tigris on a raft to Bagdad. From Latakia to Mosul the journey was on mules, attended by one dragoman, and cost a comparatively slight sum. To return in that way from India would occupy two months. For, after reaching Bagdad by steamer, the current of the Tigris is too strong to permit of a boat ascending it quickly, and mules must be used on the whole route to Mosul, Antioch, and the Levant. How different will be the day when the Anglo-Indian can take his ticket from Bussorah to Boulogne—only thrice the distance of Calcutta from Delhi, and a pleasant week's journey! Writers of the Dr. Cumming class will see in the railway the drying up of the Euphrates and the coming of the Kings of the East. More prudent speculatists, as the locomotive drags them through the site of the Garden of Eden, and past the ruins of the mighty Babylon, the great Nineveh, the birthplace of Abraham, and the battlefields of the Seleucidae and the Saracens, Bajazet and Othman, now white with cotton for the looms of Lancashire, will gratefully believe that the end cannot be so near at hand when the human race are only beginning to be brethren.—Friend of India.

THE HOUSE OF SINDIA.*

About the time that Queen Anne died in England, Ranojee Sindia, a low caste peasant, but headman of a village in Central India, left his ploughs and his oxen to take menial service in the family of the Mahratta Peishwa at Poona. Long had he held the humble office of slipper-bearer, when one day the Peishwa, Bajeerow, found him asleep on his back with his master's slippers clasped to his breast. The man's fortune was made, for surely he who was so careful in a little matter would be faithful in a greater trust. Entering the Peishwa's bodyguard, the peasant-mien became a soldier of fortune, and formed a friendship with another like himself, Mulhar Rao Holkar, from whom he used to borrow money. His younger son by a Rajpoot woman, the afterwards famous Madhaje Sindia, after fighting in the disastrous battle of Panniput, little more than a century ago, raised a family out of the wreck of the Mahratta power. Of the three great members of the Mahratta confederacy which emerged from the ruin of the Peishwa, Nana Sahib's great grandfather—even as the Peishwa had established himself on the ruin of Sivajee's family—Sindia was far greater than either Mulhar Row Holkar, whose house still exists, or Rajogjee Bhonsla, the rebellion of whose family at Seetabuldee swept it into oblivion just before the mutiny of 1857.

This Madhaje, lamed by a wound in the battle of Panniput, was the virtual founder of the house of Sindia. Gradually he assumed independent sovereignty. By the treaty of Salbaee we recognised his independence, which did more to increase his power than any other circumstance, and he became the master of the miserable Shah Allum, Emperor of Delhi, and of all Rajpootana. At his death in 1794, before Wellesley and Lake had carried our arms to the Sutlej, the house of Sindia with its great army under the Savoyard De Boigne, and extensive territory from Delhi to the Taptee and Cambay to the Ganges, seemed the most powerful in India. Madhaje's grand nephew, a boy of thirteen, named Doulut Rao Sindia, succeeded to his power. But ill advised and believing himself invulnerable, he was crushed by Wellesley and Lake, and again narrowly escaped punishment for his intrigues with Bhonsla and Holkar, at the hand of Lord Hastings, with whom in 1817 he made a treaty. Ten years after Junkjee Sindia, the nearest male relative, succeeded him, and in 1843 the present Maharajah Jyaje Sindia was acknowledged. The boy was then only eight years of age, and it is to the intrigues of the Gwalior durbar during his minority that Dr. Hope's little book is devoted.

As surgeon to the Court and to Sindia's contingent, Dr. Hope had peculiar opportunities for becoming familiar with the daily chronicle of intrigue, debauchery, and corruption, which form the life of a native court. With much force and considerable cleverness he writes a bill of indictment against Lord Ellenborough and the British Government, for their treatment of the family during the minority of its present chief. Had he confined himself to Lord Ellenborough's war he would probably have secured the sympathy of his readers for the native state, as much as if he had described that eccentric Governor-General's other "bit of humane rascality," the annexation of Sind. But Dr. Hope must permit us to say that prolonged familiarity with the intrigues and life of the Gwalior durbar seems to have somewhat blunted his moral sense, and to have done much to eradicate his higher instincts as an Englishman and a Christian. However worthy of condemnation this, like most of the other events of the Earl of Ellenborough's Indian career, may have been, the most anti-English of disinterested judges will allow that the house of Sindia has ever, except on this occasion, been treated with more than justice by the British Government; and that even if it had been treated unjustly on every occasion as Dr. Hope would hint, the worst form of English administration is vastly better for the people than the best kind of native rule as it was before the mutiny. Our law courts may be worthy of much of the condemnation with which they are visited, and cases like Mr. Carnac's recent outrage at Ghazeepore may be quoted with effect for the denunciation of an ignorant English public. But even Dr. Hope, with all his admiration of the punchayet system, will admit this, that there is no public opinion in native states intelligent enough to expose, or powerful enough to prevent, such rare cases of judicial forgetfulness as Mr. Carnac's. We can quote against our imaginative author the sober confession of one, to whose authority he will defer none the less that he is the statesman who has made Gwalior all that it is at present. In his valuable "Memorandum of Observations in the Administration of India," Rajah Dinkur Rao tells us that the people of Central India longed for the British Government, because native rulers so much overlooked the proper administration of justice and land revenue. "Owing," he says, "to the tyrannical state of the Native States, many bankers who live under the native government of Rajpootana keep their treasures at Ajmere, which is a small place under the British Government." Were we writing only for the Indian public we should be ashamed to waste a second on an exposure of the absurdity of Dr. Hope's preference for the native governments, a preference the logical result of which would be our departure from India, and its abandonment to worse anarchy than that from which we rescued it a century ago. While we do justly and love mercy let England thank God that He has entrusted to her the glorious task of regenerating millions of Hindoos, who have never known either intellectual or political independence. Will it be believed that an English gentleman, towards the end of the nineteenth century, regrets that we allow no career for military tyrants who made civilisation impossible, and waded through slaughter to a throne?

"Lord Wellesley drew up a treaty, the famous one of Bassein, than which none ever had a more withering influence upon the great chiefs of the country. By its terms the British Government, to avoid all semblance of partiality, determined that actual possessors of that date, 1803, should be regarded as rightful possessors, thus erecting for the numerous classes of petty chiefs, the feudal lords of the country, that solid and lasting foundation for their possessions which had never existed before,

The effect which this master-stroke of policy gradually produced in the character of the native princes it is impossible to estimate fully. Thirty years afterwards, search where you would within the circle of India as then formed, no Mahadajee Scindea, Jesvunt Rao Holkar, or Ameer Khan, generals of the soil, could anywhere be found. The greatest civilian whom the civil service of India ever reared, Sir John Lawrence, was asked one day by one of his earliest friends, to what circumstance the suppression of the frightful mutinies of 1857 was to be chiefly ascribed. His answer was, 'To a succession of miracles, but if to one circumstance more than another, to the fact that, amongst a hundred and fifty thousand mutineers, there was not a general.' If, added that great man, 'they had had half a general, we must have lost India.' By putting an end to military enterprises, Lord Wellesley destroyed the school for native generals. The consequence is, the descendants of the old Indian warriors, the present princes, have no martial disposition; but, with rare exceptions, pass their days amongst the females of the zenana, or, bespangled with splendid ornaments, that are becoming in our eyes only to women, while away their time listening to the monotonous sound of the tom-tom. But Dowlut Rao, if he could make no raids, joined in no such orgies as take place behind the eastern purdah. He had married the Baiza Bye, the most remarkable woman of the day. His boast was (and a most singular one it is, when we remember the low esteem in which women are held in all eastern countries), that he never undertook an affair of importance without consulting her. Nevertheless, though brought up amidst the tumults of war, and counselled by an ambitious wife, he also, by degrees, subsided into a common-place ruler, and just before his death, having no son, adopted Junkjee Scindea, then an infant, and appointed his talented widow Regent of Gwalior during the minority."

If Dr. Hope would, as he is well able to do, sketch the career of Baiza Bye, who died a few weeks ago, he would do a service.

He who would judge fairly of the relations of the British Government to the House of Sindia must take its whole history into consideration, and give even Lord Ellenborough his due. That House formed one of the many that struggled for the supremacy in Hindostan, which the Moguls could no longer wield on Arungezebe's death. There were the English and French; the Mahrattas new-born by Sivajee; the Douranee Affghans who shattered but did not seize their power; the Mahratta soldiers of fortune, Sindia, Holkar and Bhonsla; the Nawab of Oudh; the Nizam of Hyderabad; and the Mussulman soldiers of fortune, Hyder and Tippoo Sultan. All were upstarts; not one had any other right than that of the sword. One by one that Providence which sent English traders to India in the wake of the Portuguese and Dutch, made these rude savages to disappear or cease from aggression. Those only exist and have been increased in power whom England fostered or assisted. The Nizam still sleeps peacefully and draws his revenues quietly in the Deccan; but for us the Mahrattas or Tippoo would have extinguished him. Sindia and Holkar have a security for their vast possessions—the size of Great Britain—which we have given them. We made Sindia independent as we made the Vizier of Oudh a King. And, whatever may have been the rashness of Lord Ellenborough in his interference with Gwalior, his worst enemies will admit that his moderation after Maharajpore and Panniar was as marvellous. Dr. Hope may sneer at the ignorance of Lord Canning when, in his adoption despatch he said of Gwalior, "there is not a State which had stronger or more practical proofs of the wish of the British Government that its integrity should be maintained than Gwalior; from the time when, in 1826 and 1827, the then Maharajah was in his last illness perseveringly pressed by Lord Amherst to adopt an heir, and was assured that nothing could be further from the wish or intention of the Government than to exercise then and thereafter any interference in the internal administration of his country, or to pretend to control the succession to his State down to 1843, when the present Maharajah, then a child, was placed upon his throne and confirmed in the possession of it by Lord Ellenborough in person." But the unprejudiced reader of history will admit that, with the solitary exception of Lord Ellenborough's early interference, afterwards magnanimously atoned for, facts justify every assertion of Lord Canning's despatch. It has always been a cause of wonderment to us that Gwalior escaped annexation after Lord Ellenborough's war. As it is, the young Maharajah was well advised in 1857, and has been well rewarded. The mutinous contingent is extinct, and both Gwalior and Jhansi are likely to be as peaceful as Rajpootana. Raja Dinkur Rao has given them an enlightened code of laws and procedure based upon ours, and so long as the Maharajah trusts such an adviser prosperity must attend him and his territory. In a few years the railway will link him on to the great circle of civilisation, and he may be possessor of a truer greatness than his ancestor Madhaje's.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DEATH OF LIEUT. M. D. GORDON.—We regret to record the death from diphtheria, at Cawnpore, of Lieutenant M. D. Gordon, of H.M.'s 2nd Dragoon Guards—Queen's Bays—in the 21st year of his age. Deeply regretted by his brother officers, and esteemed by a large circle of acquaintance, his remains were followed to their last resting-place by nearly everyone in the station.—Oudh Gazette.

DEATH OF MR. JOSEPH WILLIS.—We regret to announce the death of Mr. Joseph Willis, the oldest merchant in Calcutta, who died yesterday afternoon at the advanced age of eighty. Mr. Willis came out to this country half a century ago, in company with his cousin and partner, the late Mr. Willis Earle. Though at one time prosperous and wealthy, Mr. Willis subsequently sustained some severe reverses, and after fifty years of toil and anxiety died insolvent.—Hurkaru, Sept. 25.

TROOPS FOR NEW ZEALAND.—The Government have accepted the tender of the agents of the screw steamer Lady Jocelyn, for the conveyance by that fine vessel of H.M.'s 43rd L. I. to New Zealand, at the rate of, as we understand, Rs. 400 per man, which is, if we mistake not, only Rs. 50 over the contract with the Armenian. Every effort will, we believe, be made to get the Lady Jocelyn away by the 1st proximo; and, although not a full power steamer, she might make the run to her destination in forty days, or thereabouts. In consequence of the Lady Jocelyn having been taken up by the Government for the conveyance of H.M.'s 43rd L. I. to New Zealand, the services of the steamers Armenian and Aratoon Apcar are now diverted to the transport of H.M.'s 68th regiment, now at Rangoon, to the same destination. The Armenian will, therefore, be hurried forward with her arrangements as quickly as possible, her provisions being supplied by Messrs. Ahmuty and Co., and the commissariat department equipping her with all the other requisite accessories, so that on her arrival at Rangoon she will be in every respect perfectly ready to receive on board three hundred and fifty men, and go straight away to sea and her destination. The Aratoon Apcar will, on her return from China, be similarly equipped and fitted out, and will follow in the wake of the Armenian with the least possible delay. As the accounts from New Zealand are very warlike, the Government is pushing forward the preparations with great vigour, and all departments are zealous and busy. H.M.'s 1st battalion 13th L. I. have received orders to be prepared to move into Fort William at a moment's notice.—Englishman, Sept. 23.

A NEW MILITARY SCANDAL.—Sir Hugh Rose has made so many mistakes lately in the matter of courts martial that we trust he will, for his own sake, be careful in the case of Quartermaster Lawrence, of H.M.'s 51st K.O.L.I., at Rawul Pindee, who was lately tried on five distinct charges. He was defended by Mr. T. C. Fenwick, of Delhi. No one can tell positively how the Court have decided, but it is pretty generally believed that Quartermaster Lawrence has been honourably acquitted. The charges completely broke down, the witnesses, other than European, were proved to have committed the most barefaced perjury, and the whole case was a carefully got up conspiracy to injure Quartermaster Lawrence, who, it has been shown, was most zealous in the discharge of his duties. The case was this:—Quartermaster Lawrence was charged with having received bribes from several native Commissariat contractors with the implied promise of not causing their supplies to be rejected. Captain Jenkins, the Commissariat officer at Rawul, was prosecutor, and Captain Boileau offg. J. A. General. Captain Jenkins, the commissariat officer, as an inducement to the contractors to say what they could, promised them entire forgiveness in every respect if they would turn approvers, and these men, with one or two exceptions, were the only witnesses produced by Captain Jenkins in support of the charges. Several things in this case should never have been allowed. The Officiating Judge Advocate-general and Captain Jenkins lived during the trial together, came to Court together, sat side by side, and left the Court together. All through the trial these two kept up a whispering conversation, left the Court together, during the proceedings, and returned together; and it was remarked by the whole Court and those present that the Officiating Judge Advocate-general took a most active part on behalf of the prosecution. All these things are highly improper, and should be severely noticed by the Commander-in-Chief.—The Hills, Sept. 17.

THE SITTANES.—The majority of your readers may be ignorant as to who or what these people are, who are occupying so much attention just now. I would, therefore, inform such, that some years ago the colony of Sittana was situated near the base of Muhabun, on the banks of the Indus; that the Syuds of the place were the remnant of the followers of that extraordinary adventurer Syud Ahmed, who, gathering a handful of warlike devotees ("Shayees") from various parts of India, raised a formidable rebellion in Peshawur. After winning and losing Peshawur, and Fusufzye, the Syud was evidently slain at the mouth of the Kaghgan glen by Sheer Sing, son of Runjeet Sing. Most of his adherents, chiefly foreigners of the Punjab, dispersed, and the remainder settled at Sittana. These people were always evil-intentioned and evil-conditioned, but their power of mischief was never great. They have endeavoured to rouse the bigotry of the surrounding Mahomedan tribes, especially of the Swatees. A king of Swat, the present one I believe, was elected to his position from these very people. They have frequently endeavoured to intrigue with Wuhabees and similar fanatic religionists among the Mahomedan population in various parts of India, and more than once correspondence relating to them has been intercepted. In 1852 they co-operated with the Hussunzyes against Jehandad, and actually seized a small fort belonging to that chief, but evacuated it on the approach of a British force under Colonel Mackeson. In 1858 a band of reformed Thugs were working on the road near Peshawur and fled to Sittana. The ferry over the Indus close to Sittana used formerly to be much harassed by the fanatics, who in 1855 made an attempt to re-establish the old colony at Sittana, but were dispersed by an expedition under Sir Sydney Cotton. The Hindoostanees had found an asylum at a place called Mulkah in the Aonazai country, and with the connivance of the Otmanzai and Jydoon tribes, who were especially bound over to prevent their re-settlement, they acquired a footing at Sirree, a post on the hill over the old site of Sittana, whence they commenced kidnapping Hindoo merchants and plundering and murdering our subjects. But a blockade against the colluding tribes soon established order, and if the present is but a similar raid, no difficulty will be experienced in doing the same now; but it behoves Government to satisfy itself that Cabul or other foreign influence is not behind, pulling the strings.—Times of India.

NATIVE REFORMERS IN INDIA.—The Oudh Gazette publishes a curious report in Indo-English of a meeting of the "Anjuman Akbar," a native association of Shahjehanpore, to promote the abolition of certain evil social customs among Hindoos and Mahomedans. The Hon. R. A. Drummond, the judge, presided, and special reports were read on the subject by native gentlemen. Pundit Bany Ram reported that the evil practice of paying large sums to the bridegroom with his bride prevails among the Kanoujees, or people of Kanouj, who are the most respectable in the district. The community is divided into three classes. A bridegroom of the first class gets 400 rupees with a wife of the same class, 500 rupees with one of the second class, and 1,000 rupees with a wife of the lowest class, and so on through all the grades proportionately. Moreover, the husband may marry again, "nay, over and over ten times, notwithstanding his first wife or subsequent wives are alive, and exempt from any chronic disease, barrenness, or other legal disabilities, and then leave them to the charge of their parents to provide for them." Some women, in poor and proud families, remain unmarried up to the fiftieth year of their age, and even for their whole life, "and this circumstance is productive of such evil consequences as are not worth mentioning." All of this is "repugnant to the dictates of the Hindoo Shastras." One Moonshie Shu Shahai, reported quaintly that the custom of giving money on the occasion of marriage is also prevalent among the Kayuts, and that "through avarice of money, no notice is taken of the beauty or deformity of the bride by some." As to the Mahomedans, Moulvee Mahomed Kramutwoollah Moonshiff reported against the ruinous custom of relatives feasting for forty days at the expense of the house in which some one had died, and against the social prohibition of the re-marriage of Mussulman widows in imitation of the Hindoos. Rules were adopted to induce families to oppose these practices. Cazeer Surfaraz Ally, "than whom a more learned scholar in the Persian, &c., is rare, and who is also a very respectable gentleman in his community," was appointed to compile a "good and easy" Dustoor at Amul for the instruction of the Purdahnash women.

DECREASE IN THE SALE OF SALT.—From May to July last the quantity of Bengal salt sold steadily decreased to 45,015 maunds in the last month. The sales of Excise salt during the quarter were maunds 11,039, against maunds 14,675 of the previous quarter. The year's manufacture as yet has been about maunds 27,000 in excess of that of 1862. In the same quarter 1,864,355 maunds of Cheshire salt were imported, and in May the shipments of this salt from Liverpool were so high as 20,336 tons. The price of Liverpool salt fluctuated between 60 and 70 rupees per 100 maunds in May and up to the first week in June; it then fell to 60 rupees, at which it now stands. In May Madras Kurkutch sold so low as 28 rupees per 100 maunds, but from the middle of June the price rose to 52 rupees. The trade in Kurkutch salt is extending to some of the lower marts of the North-Western provinces; the amount available for exportation for Madras was on 1st July 852,264 maunds. A company has been established in Calcutta to manufacture sea salt, near the Mutlah. In spite of the low price and superior quality of Cheshire salt, the company hope to make large profits by using a new process invented by Mr. Prestage of the E. B. railway.

COLONEL PRIMROSE.—"We hear," writes the Englishman, "that an announcement has arrived, by electric telegraph, from Madras, to the effect that Colonel Primrose, senior Lieutenant-Colonel of H.M.'s 43rd Light Infantry, will not come up to Calcutta to assume command of his regiment going on field service to New Zealand. How this arrangement can be effected we cannot imagine, as we have never before heard of an officer whose regiment was going on war service standing fast in an office appointment, except when his services there were considered indispensable by the Government; and no officer goes on half-pay when his regiment is ordered against the enemy. There can be no difficulty in filling up Colonel Primrose's appointment in the Adjutant-General's Department at Madras."

THE 93RD AND 42ND HIGHLANDERS.—We (Mossilite) learn that the 93rd Highlanders will relieve the 42nd Highlanders after the breaking up of the camp of exercise at Lahore. The 42nd will take the place of the 93rd at Sealkote.

WHO PAYS THE COSTS IN THE BURNEY CASE?—A Calcutta correspondent of the Mofussilite, who is described as "a gentleman of some position in society," assigns a singular, and, of course, erroneous motive for the small amount of damages awarded by Sir Mordaunt Wells to General Burney. He states that Colonel Willis pledged himself to pay whatever damages might be given against Captain Eyre, and that the General, having heard of this arrangement, and bearing no ill-will to the Colonel, instructed his counsel not to press for heavy damages, but to claim the highest scale of costs. This he did to punish Sir Hugh Rose, who had promised to pay all the costs, but whether from private or public funds, the Mofussilite's correspondent does not profess to know. The entire story bears on its very face the impress of a faulty imagination. What Colonel Willis may have undertaken to do it is not for us to decide, but it is plainly impossible that the Commander-in-Chief of her Majesty's forces in India would ever commit himself to such a gross act of partisanship. Least of all can it be suspected that Sir Hugh Rose, whose stern impartiality and utter indifference to outside influences are so justly appreciated, would ever take any particular side in a matter that must compromise the character of at least one officer, and perhaps of several. Captain Eyre, too, is a bachelor, and cannot, therefore, have any peculiar claims upon his Excellency's chivalrous devotion to the fair sex. Why, then, should he go out of his way to incur a pecuniary liability on behalf of a man whom he never saw in his life, and of whom he does not even appear to have heard previous to the receipt of his highly imaginative account of his disgraceful conduct towards a superior officer? So strict a disciplinarian as Sir Hugh must have been far too much shocked at such a brazen-faced acknowledgment of wilful insubordination to entertain for the offender anything but feelings of horror and disgust. It is clearly impossible that there can be any truth in the rumours reported by the Mofussilite's correspondent, and we have little doubt that his Excellency will see the propriety of contradicting an hypothesis so injurious to his character as an honest man, and so damaging to his position as Commander-in-Chief in India.—Hurkaru.

THE CINCHONA PLANT.—According to the last report of the Superintendent of the Botanic Gardens at Darjeeling, there were 6,530 cinchona plants in the nursery on August 23, or 1,910 in excess of the number reported on June 15. The increase would have been greater had there been a sufficient supply of pots, but so perfect is the communication between Calcutta and its favourite sanitarium that a large quantity, despatched from that city in the early part of July, did not reach its destination before the end of August. It is fortunate that the plants did not follow the example of Mahommed in the case of the immovable mountain, and that as the pot would not come to them they did not go to pot. Fortunately, all the damage that has been sustained is the loss of the two best months in the year, and a corresponding check to propagation.

THE CALCUTTA DISCOUNT BANK.—At last Calcutta is to have a genuine Discount Bank, and certainly not a day before it was wanted. The creation of so many Joint-Stock Companies has opened up a new market for speculation, but one that is regarded by the old banks with a very natural feeling of suspicion. It is useless, however, to attempt to stem the tide now approaching its flood. Speculation in shares will go on in spite of all restrictions, but not so successfully or so healthily as if supplied with proper and sufficient means. To Baboo Heeralall Mitter is largely due the credit of having recognised the exigencies of the period, and of having taken steps to fill the "obvious void." As deputy-manager, he will occupy a post to which he is well entitled, and in which he will serve as the best and surest medium of communication between the bank and its native constituents. Of the ultimate, and, indeed, immediate success of this undertaking, no reasonable man can entertain a doubt. But what is chiefly gratifying to those who are not likely to be directly interested in the operations of the Calcutta City Banking Corporation is the fact that four native capitalists are on the list of directors. The moneyed men belonging to the native community of Calcutta have too long held aloof from joint enterprise with their European associates. It is therefore an unexpected and most agreeable surprise to find four men of real mark and substance coming forward to set a good example to their brethren, and it is devoutly to be hoped that one result of this new undertaking will be to dash down the icy barriers of jealousy and suspicion that have hitherto divided native and foreign capitalists.—Hurkaru, Sept. 25.

THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICE.—The members of the Uncovenanted Service in Calcutta have held more than one consultation regarding the new rules. Complaining that Sir C. Wood's despatch is not an answer to the first memorial of the service, that in some places its English is unintelligible, and that the Government of India has misinterpreted some of its passages to the detriment of the service, they addressed another petition to Government asking for explanation, and of this no notice has been taken. Again, moved by the request of a large number of Hindoos, the Calcutta Committee are about to ask Government that privilege leave may be allowed to accumulate to three months, that fifteen months' furlough after ten years' service may be reckoned as service, and that the final pension be one-half, or one-third of the salary enjoyed during the last year provided it do not exceed the maximum fixed by Government, instead of a half or a third of the average of the past five years. We fear that in the case even of the very fair request that short furlough should count for service, Sir Charles Trevelyan will prove to be Sir Gregory Hardlines.—Friend of India, Sept. 24.

A TRAVELLER IN DISGUISE.—A European traveller with Russian passports and credentials from France, Austria, Prussia, and English Consuls, has lately passed through India, and gone via Kapoorthalla to Calcutta. He has travelled from St. Petersburg, through Moscow, by Astracan and Central Asia to Cashmere and the Punjab. He calls himself a Greek, and goes by the name of George Constantine. He speaks many languages, French with particular fluency, and has a good stock of plans, maps, &c., of the whole country he has travelled over. He had an interview with the Maharajah of Cashmere, whom he considers dull, ignorant, and illiterate.—Delhi Gazette, Sept. 24.

TELEGRAPH BETWEEN INDIA AND ENGLAND.—The Oudh Gazette states that Lieutenant Pierson, assistant to the chief engineer of Oudh, has been nominated by the Government to assist in the important work of laying down the telegraph cable intended to connect India with England, via the Persian Gulf. Lieutenant Pierson proceeds to join his new appointment immediately.

A MOST DELICATE COMPLIMENT TO SIR J. P. GRANT.—The native inhabitants of Berhampore are anxious to pay a most delicate compliment to the late Lieutenant-governor of Bengal, Sir John Peter Grant. It has been proposed for some time past to erect a public hall in that city to bear the honoured name of their zealous partisan, as a token of gratitude for all the mischief that ensued from his mistaken policy. With a nice discrimination of the ex-Lieutenant-governor's peculiar merits which does them great credit, the subscribers to the memorial are desirous to obtain a site that will be "free from payment of rent." With this end in view they have petitioned his honour for a grant of land on the bank of the river at the north-western extremity of the cantonments, and Mr. Beadon can hardly decline to accede to such a characteristic request, though he will probably suggest that the new building shall be called Repudiation-hall, and be surrounded with a belt of waste, uncultivated ground, answering to the celebrated epitaph on Sir Christopher Wren—"Si monumentum quæris, circumspice."—Hurkaru, Sept. 25.

OPIMUM SALE.—The following are the particulars of the opium sale, held at the Exchange-rooms on the 1st October:—

	Chests.	Highest.	Lowest.	Average.	Proceeds.
Behar	1,810	1,385	1,380	1,380-7-34	24,95,625
Benares	1,365	1,340	1,330	1,333-3-34	18,19,826

GOSSIP FROM SIMLA.—The departure of the Commander-in-Chief has now become an uncertainty, and it is more than probable that his Excellency may have to abandon the trip. The expedition against the Sitanees occupies his whole attention; the details are all arranged, but have not yet received the sanction of the Governor-general. The expedition will be 5,000 strong, and consist of the 71st, 51st, and 101st Regiments, a mountain train, and some Punjab corps, and will be commanded by Brigadier-General Chamberlain. The notice respecting the resignation of this officer, which appeared in the Calcutta papers, together with the reasons assigned for the same, are utterly false. The head-quarters staff ball was a magnificent and princely entertainment. There was not such a collection of gold and silver plate as was displayed at the Guards' ball the other day, but there was no lack of gorgeousness in the arrangements, nor of sumptuousness in the feast. The community of Simla is under great obligations to Colonel Hatch, the Judge Advocate-general, for giving up his house for the occasion, it being the best suited in the place for the purpose, and the beauty of the decorations and comfort of the arrangements could not be exceeded. The ball was opened with a quadrille danced by sixteen ladies and gentlemen in the costume of the time of Louis XV., who fully realised an idea of the magnificence of the court of that luxuriant monarch. There were about fifty or sixty of both sexes also in fancy costumes. There was not so much variety in the dresses, nor so many of them, as at the Commander-in-Chief's ball last year; still, there was but little wanting to complete one of those scenes of beauty and magnificence we read of in the Arabian Nights' Entertainments.

THE AMEER.—Disappointed in receiving aid from Mahomed Afzul Khan in his attempt to seize Cabul, Mahomed Azim Khan seems to have been induced to make peace with the Ameer. The Delhi Gazette's newsletter gives a letter from the Ameer to his son, which says Sirdar Noor Mahomed Khan and others succeeded in advising Azim Khan to go to the Ameer's camp. "I received Azim Khan very kindly, and presented him the famous and valuable horse of Sirdar Shah Nawaz Khan, which had fallen into our hands on the capture of Herat. Sirdar Mahomed Azim Khan by my own request has gone towards Korum and Khoost to see the rebellion suppressed there, while Sirdar Mahomed Surwar Khan, his son, is to accompany my camp to Cabul." On receiving this news a salute of 11 guns was fired in Cabul. We have yet to see what will be done when Afzul Khan joins Azim with reinforcements. On arriving in Cabul the Ameer, accompanied by all the Sirdars, went direct into the Bala Hissar. At first the Ameer sat down on the mourning carpet, which was spread, and after the Fataha was read by the Sirdars, the carpet was removed, and they all offered congratulations on his succeeding to the throne of Cabul. Forty-two guns were fired as a salute.

THE RIGHT WING 25TH PUNJAB INFANTRY, under command of Captain Longmore, will march from Allypore, via Budaon, 12th October, reaching Shahjehanpore on the 24th instant, at which place it will join the left wing and head-quarters of the regiment from Mooradabad. The whole regiment will then march together to its destination, Goruckpore.

THE EXHIBITION BUILDING AT LAHORE.—It is stated in a Punjab letter that the exhibition building at Lahore is not giving general satisfaction. The plans for lighting the interior, and for affording "show room," are said to be especially deficient. The exhibition is to be arranged according to classes, not according to localities, as at first proposed.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.—The vacancy in the committee of the Chamber of Commerce occasioned by the resignation of Mr. R. B. Mackay has been filled up by the election of Mr. R. L. Eglinton, of the firm of Messrs. Schoene, Kilburn, and Co.

THE LINE OF RAILWAY BETWEEN MIRZAPORE AND BENARES was opened for traffic on the 1st of October.

FUTTEGHUR, Sept. 22.—The day before yesterday a most serious affray took place at a village about thirty-five miles from here, which has resulted in the death of two natives. It appears that at the above named place Messrs. Gilmore, Macmillan and Co., of Calcutta, possess an indigo factory, which is under the charge of a Mr. Larson. The people in the village are noted budmashes, and, as is customary with them, refused to be engaged to cut the indigo plants as requested. Mr. Larson being made acquainted with this, proceeded with some men from another factory to carry on the necessary work, independently of them. He took a double-barrelled gun with him, as much for pigeon-shooting on the road as for his own protection. On nearing the spot the villagers turned out with lathies and first attacked the gomashtha, who died of the injuries inflicted last evening. On seeing this all the other attendants but one fled. The cowards then set upon Mr. Larson, and severely beat him, and knocked him down. On recovering his feet he was again attacked, when, in self-defence, he let fly right and left both barrels of his gun, which were loaded with shot, and killed one man dead and severely wounded another. Mr. Larson himself has sustained severe wounds on the head and shoulders; he has come in here for medical treatment.

MILITARY SCANDALS.—Military scandals have been rather the fashion lately, and in each case some of the "big wigs" have been either directly or indirectly implicated. We hear now that a "neat piece of scandal" is being hatched for the benefit of the Poona public in the lines of H.M.'s 4th Foot. In the present case, however, only "smaller fry" are, we understand, in any way implicated. We shall be glad to have further particulars, but so far as we at present understand the case, there is little doubt that a lieutenant of the above-mentioned gallant corps has been indiscreet enough to attempt to extort money from a disciple of Esculapius, on a charge of seducing his wife. The Doctor, who is a married man himself, and on whom we have heard the highest encomiums passed, we are glad to say, repudiates the charge with indignation. The case will probably shortly come before the law courts, but in the meanwhile we think that Col. W. * * might have had good taste enough to defer such arbitrary measures as the expulsion of Dr. — from the Ghorpore lines.

MR. E. F. LAUTOUR.—It is marvellous that a judge like Mr. E. F. Lautoir should have been appointed to so important a station as Patna. Mr. Macnaghten, the Joint Magistrate, sentenced some peasants, under the Cattle Trespass Act, to a fine of Rs. 25 each, or one month's imprisonment, and again punished them under the Penal Code for violently rescuing the cattle when the prosecutor's servants were driving them to the pound. From the sentence there was no appeal, but this judge, with that scrupulous regard for the purity of the subordinate courts which has distinguished him in the case of the aged Mussulman, Abdool Azeed, submitted the record of the case for the opinion of the High Court. Mr. Macnaghten defended his decision on the ground that two distinct offences had been committed. The Honourable Justices Steer and L. Jackson declared the judge's opinion to be unfounded in law. If the prisoners committed mischief by driving their cattle into the prosecutor's indigo, and afterwards violently rescued the same cattle when the prosecutor's servants were driving them to the pound, there can be no reason why they should not be punished under the provisions of the laws applicable to those offences respectively, and Mr. Lautoir's gratuitous sneer at the Joint Magistrate's limited knowledge of the Procedure Code rebounds on himself.

A SHOCKING ACCIDENT that happened at Chandernagore may well serve as a warning to those who are ever in such haste to alight from a train before it has come to a perfect standstill. On the evening above-mentioned, a lady, whose name it is unnecessary to publish, attempted to get out of the carriage while it was still in motion, but in so doing missed the step and fell between the train and the platform. In an instant she was twirled round, and her foot coming under the wheel was cut off as clean as with a knife. In England there is a heavy fine imposed for committing the offence of which this unhappy lady was guilty, but an accident of this dreadful nature may, perhaps, prove more effective than any amount of penalty in deterring people from the folly of gaining half a minute of time at the risk of their lives.

A FRACAS.—The Phoenix contains the following account of another "fracas" upon the railway; so that instead of the old song, "to work upon the Railway," which seamen like so well, we can now have a new version of it in the grand chorus of—"To fight upon the Railway!" "Another Fracas."—The Bengalce tells of another personal rencontre at the Railway Station, between a European gentleman and a Baboo:—Another fracas has occurred, in which a competition-wallah is mixed up, but under circumstances far less creditable to himself than those under which Mr. Clay managed his little 'affair' with Mr. Brett, of the Englishman. It took place on the morning of Saturday last, the 29th Sept., scene, the Sodepore platform, on the Eastern Bengal Railway. A number of individuals assembled were expecting the down seven forty-five from Kanchraparah, which reaches Sodepore eight thirty-two. Among others, Mr. Smallwood, Divisional Civil Engineer, and a Baboo, highly respectable and holding an important office in the Financial Department, were engaged in conversation apart. To them enters the competition, and finds fault with the Baboo for chewing betel nut then and there in the presence of gentlemen. Will it be believed, the Baboo actually replied that he saw no harm in it, that he meant no more disrespect than the 'gentleman' addressing him did by smoking a cheroot in the face of them all, and said other things in the same free and easy strain of impudence inspired by that foolish 'equality theory.' Fancy such language addressed to a future judge of the High Court, or mayhap a Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. It was folly, audacity. Young C. S. roared out his will and pleasure that the betel chewing should forthwith cease, and was in the same presumptuous manner told to mind his own business; when Saxon forbearance being fully exhausted, a vigorous blow was planted on the Baboo's cheek, producing the sudden growth of a tumour on that most interesting portion of his physiognomy. It seems, however, that the Bengally race is really getting plucky; for taking up his patent umbrella, the Baboo commenced immediately a hearty belabouring of his courageous antagonist. The scuffle lasted some minutes, until the train drove up, and the combatants were separated by the bystanders. They came down to Calcutta, and that very morning the Baboo, after securing his assailant's name and address, proceeded straight to a lawyer's for advice. This happened to be the Advocate-general himself, who has, we are told, recommended an action in the court of the magistrate in whose jurisdiction the assault was committed. The Baboo has likewise been advised to submit a statement of the above case for the information and orders of the Lieut.-governor. We consider it just as well to wait until we have heard "both sides," before venturing an opinion as to who was to blame in this case.

MILITARY MOVEMENTS.—The wing of the 3rd Sikh's (Renny's), which left Meen Meer for Rawul Pindee on the 10th, were ordered back again after they had gone five marches. But on the night of the 25th a telegram was received, directing them to go up by forced marches to rejoin the head-quarters' wing at Rawul Pindee. Accordingly they were marched on the morning of the 27th. This corps will no doubt be employed on the Sattana frontier. We are informed, by a correspondent from Nusseerabad, that H.M.'s 28th Regiment, which was under orders for Mhow, has been ordered to Bombay, it is supposed on account of sickness, there being at present three hundred men unfit for duty (chiefly cases of fever, this being an annual epidemic in the months of September and October).—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 1.

BHOOTAN.—The papers and other correspondence connected with the affairs of Bhootan from the year 1854 to 1862, which have been in course of preparation for some time past to assist Mr. Eden in his forthcoming mission, are now ready, and that officer will probably leave Calcutta early in November. In that case, Mr. Chapman, of the Board of Revenue, is talked of as likely to be appointed to officiate as Secretary to the Government of Bengal, during the temporary absence of Mr. Eden.

ACCIDENT TO MR. J. HEALY.—We regret extremely to hear of an accident which happened to Mr. John Healy, the manager of the Mussoorie branch of the Delhi Bank. He was out riding when his horse fell with him, and he received very severe injuries, including the fracture of some of his ribs. All those who have come in contact with Mr. Healy, either as a mere man of business or as a private gentleman will share in our regret. We learn also that his brother, Mr. Henry Patrick Healy, has proceeded to Mussoorie, to take charge of the office pending the recovery of Mr. John Healy.—Mofussilite, Sept. 22.

DISTURBANCE IN FUTTEGHUR.—A private letter from Futteghur makes mention of a serious disturbance that had occurred in that district, in consequence of the ryots refusing to allow their plant to be cut according to contract. One life was lost and several persons were severely wounded, but our informant gives no further particulars. Had there been a contract law this deplorable riot could never have occurred, and we trust that the case may be fully laid before her Majesty's Secretary of State for India. The writer thus concludes his somewhat doleful budget of news:—"We have the cold weather regularly set in here, morning and evening, but, sad to say, we have had no rain for a month. Grain is becoming very dear, and is nearly up to famine prices already."—Hurkaru.

HON. MR. DRUMMOND.—An up-country paper informs its readers that the Hon. Mr. Drummond will start from Bareilly on the 1st December on his tour of inspection through the North-West Provinces. On the 4th his Honour will be at Shahjehanpore, where he will remain two days; on the 10th at Futteghur, where a three days' halt will be made; on the 16th at Mynpoory, for one day; and on the 24th at Agra, where he will stay a whole week.

AN UNSEEMLY DISPUTE.—We have heard of a case in which an unseemly dispute has taken place in a station in the N. W. P., owing to the disregard by the chaplain of the General Order which distinctly directs chaplains about to leave a station to report their intended departure to the officer commanding, in order that he may make arrangements for the performance of such of the chaplain's duties as can be performed by a layman during his absence. In this instance the chaplain having left without reporting, the station orders announced that there would in consequence be no service. But it seems that the chaplain appointed or requested an officer of the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel in the station to officiate for him. The officer commanding the station, however, also a Lieut.-Col., objected to the service being read by the other officer, they having had some differences of opinion—(tell it not in Gath!—all along of the Burney case!) At this stage of the proceedings an American Missionary—how often these gentlemen turn up at the right moment to relieve the overburdened chaplains of some little of their mountain load of labour—the American Missionary says he will perform service. Upon hearing which Lieut.-Colonel No. 1 writes to say he needn't trouble himself, as he was going to perform it. When down comes Lieut.-Colonel No. 2, like "a deus ex machina" in station orders, and shuts up the church, so that, at any rate, Lieut.-Colonel No. 1 shall not make a parson of himself! We solicit the attention of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief to the affair. There can be no question about it. The chaplain's duty was to report his departure, and the duty of the officer commanding the station to make arrangements.—Delhi Gazette.

A HORSE CARRIAGE DAKH has been established between Lucknow and Fyzabad.

SIMLA, Sept. 17.—Lord Elgin leaves for Kangra on the 26th of this month, and Sir Hugh Rose starts for Mussoorie on the 1st of October. Gaiety will, however, by no means disappear with the departure of the ruling powers; indeed, as a general rule, it bursts out with redoubled vigour when the restraint caused by the presence of the G. G. and the Chief has been removed. I forgot in my last letter to mention the extraordinary conduct of a rajah who endeavoured to force himself, without invitation, on a select party assembled for the purpose of enjoying some private theatricals. In spite of hints the intruding rajah retained his seat, and it was not till a gentleman, at the request of the lady who gave the theatricals, spoke to him in rather a peremptory manner that he could be induced to leave the room. Lord George Paget is to command the cavalry division at the Lahore camp; he has been "mugging up" his drill. All who recollect the feats of Paget and his irregulars in the Crimea will wonder how on earth he again succeeds in getting a cavalry command. Interest, however, obtains what capacity fails in procuring; and the Horse Guards are apt to reply to the rash enquirer into their mysterious selections, "There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio, than are dreamed of in your philosophy." The ball last night given by the staff of the Governor-general at Inverarm, the residence of the Hon. William M. Thurlow, was a most brilliant affair. There were about one hundred and sixty guests, fully one-third of whom were ladies. The Governor-General's band was in attendance, and played till supper time. After supper Mr. Cochrane, the great pianist, presided at his favourite instrument, and performed till the party broke up, about 4 A.M. Captain Peterson, commandant of the Simla Volunteers, has issued cards for a ball on Tuesday evening next, the 22nd inst. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and staff are invited. His Excellency will be received by the Simla Volunteers, about sixty in number, in full uniform, and the ball will be opened by a performance, in which two of the prettiest and most accomplished of our merchants' wives will play the female characters. Captain (Mr.) Peterson is the secretary of our local bank. He has managed, with exquisite tact and skill, to keep the Simla Volunteers together; he is extremely popular with them, and in recognition of their loyalty and attachment he gives them this ball. There can be no doubt that it will be a first-rate affair. His Excellency, the Viceroy, would also have been solicited to honor the party by his presence, only that his Lordship and Lady Elgin have not been out anywhere in public yet since their late bereavement. I forgot to tell you in my last that Sir Hugh Rose nearly came to grief during his late excursion into the interior. His Excellency was thrown head foremost from his horse, whilst riding quietly along the base of a hill overlooking an immense precipice; but, wonderful to say, he escaped almost unhurt—a piece of fortune which seems always to attend him on such occasions—for how many such accidents has not his Excellency met with during the last two years? Captain Moore, who accompanied the Commander-in-Chief, had likewise a most narrow escape. He had no less than two "spills," in one of which he was chucked right down the khud; and only that his fall was broken by a tree not very far from the surface, he might have gone thousands of feet below, perhaps never to be seen or heard of again. He is a Bombay officer, and this may be a source of gratification to you. Talking about accidents, the news of the death of the postmaster of Rawul Pindee, Mr. Talbot, has just reached us. It appears that Mr. Talbot was driving, while his wife was inside the carriage; they were on their way to Lahore; it was at night, and he drove over a high stone, which caused the carriage to capsize. He was thrown on his head, and died shortly afterwards from a concussion of the brain. Mrs. Talbot received some injuries, but her two children providentially escaped unhurt. It was a most sad occurrence, and I believe Mrs. Talbot and her children are left totally unprovided for. The fatal malady which has carried off so many of the soldiers of the 10th at Umritsur, I am sorry to say, is still rampant there; nineteen or twenty deaths have been reported up to to-day. A military, rather than a medical, committee, with General Cunningham as president, has been held, but its deliberations, it would appear, have not resulted in the suggestion of any cause or remedy for the evil, of which the effect only continues to be apparent.

SIMLA, Sept. 10.—The 23rd Punjab Pioneers arrived here from the interior a day or two ago. They are to form the Viceroy's escort from Kulka, whence they move down with his Excellency's camp on the 25th instant. The Commander-in-Chief took advantage of their presence to have their band playing out on the grounds at Barnes Court last evening. There was a large assemblage of ladies and gentlemen, who, in addition to the music, likewise enjoyed the luxury of ice-cream, which the liberality of Sir Hugh Rose afforded. The 23rd are to be inspected this evening by his Excellency, and with them the Simla Volunteers. Naughty Mrs. T. is in Simla, living in a bungalow with Colonel Burke. They are only waiting the acceptance of the colonel's papers by the Commander-in-Chief, when they mean to go straight home. How very daring of them, above all other places, to come to Simla, in immediate proximity to the Governor-General and the Commander-in-Chief! Verily the world is becoming hardened daily to sin of every kind.

MILITARY SCANDAL.—We have been furnished with the particulars of what is called "one of those petty instances of persecution on the part of the military authorities towards a subordinate which so frequently of late tend to lower the character of the service, and which, if practised in any place but India, would not only bring down upon the heads of the perpetrators the censure of the press, but the indignation of the public, and the obstruction of the recruiting-sergeant's labours." We allude to the case of a private who has been lately remanded to his corps from the Commissariat Department, for what we have yet to explain. We do not wish to mention names of persons, but Bareilly is the station where he is. This man, who is said to be "the victim now pitched upon to be offered up on the altar of persecution," is to our own knowledge both a scholar and a gentleman. The son of a Colonel and a K. H., with a brother a commissioned officer (to whose regiment he wished as "a local" to volunteer, but would not be allowed) with the highest testimonials as to ability and character from competent persons, he has demanded the reasons for his being remanded, without success. He has asked for a court martial, which, we believe, has been refused, and for a court of inquiry, which has been delayed (till next March we hear). He has had splendid offers of employment, which he cannot accept for want of time; he will not be allowed as a "local" to volunteer to the regiment in which his brother serves as an officer; he will not be granted his discharge, and finally, he has petitioned the Commander-in-Chief, with what result we cannot learn. Founding our remarks upon the particulars which have been sent to us, we trust that this man may be brought before a court of inquiry as he wishes, immediately.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 8.

THE GOOD THINGS OF THIS EARTH.—Coming events cast their shadows before, at Lahore as well as elsewhere. The expected arrival of so many consumers of the good things of this earth has already affected the price of eatables. According to the local journal, turkeys have gone up to 10 and 12 rupees a couple, geese to Rs. 4, and ducks to Rs. 2½. Fowls cost one rupee each, and guinea-fowls from 3 to 3½ rupees a pair. At this rate, what will be charged for these dainties when the demand actually commences?

ACCIDENT TO LIEUTENANT RAINSFORD.—An accident, which it is feared may be fatal, occurred at Kangra the other day, to Lieutenant Rainsford, who, on attempting to clear a hurdle in a race, was thrown forward, fell on his head, and was picked up insensible.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 6.

COLONEL G. V. MAXWELL, C.B., of the 88th Connaught Rangers, will succeed to the command of the Delhi Brigade, on the departure of Lord Mark Kerr, C.B., with his regiment, the 13th L.I., to England.

IMPRISONMENT OF FOUR ITALIANS AT BOKHARA.—We have received authentic information to the effect that the four Italian gentlemen despatched to Bokhara for the purpose of investigating the condition of the silk-worm of that kingdom, and, if found healthy, of purchasing eggs to any amount procurable, have been imprisoned by the Ameer-ool-Momineen, on the pretence of their being spies. It is feared that they may be treated as were our unfortunate countrymen Stoddart and Conolly. The intelligence of this act of violence has been forwarded with the least possible delay to the Government of Turin, and steps will no doubt be taken to obtain the release of the prisoners, should it not be too late.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 6.

DELHI, Sept. 23.—It is rumoured, but I cannot vouch for the truth of it, that Mr. Cooper, C. B., will return to Delhi on the 1st proximo. Colonel Hamilton, our Commissioner, returns about that date, when the courts re-open, and do not close again before the Dusserah, which will be in a very few days.

MADRAS.

DEATH-RATE FROM SMALLPOX.

We (Bengal Hurkaru) notice in a return just presented to the Madras Government by the chief medical officer, that twenty thousand persons die annually in that presidency from smallpox. Nearly one-half of their number are stated to be "males who have passed through the ceremony of the first marriage," and consequently ten thousand females are condemned every year to suffer the life-long degradation which in this country falls to the lot of those women who have become widows. But, independent of the fearful mortality every year from this scourge, it is asserted that "more than half the entire native population of the country is attacked, and those who survive do so at the expense of the most fearful bodily suffering, and a perpetual loss of that manly beauty which their Maker conferred upon them. The Madras Times directs attention to this frightful mortality, and shows that it is preventable to a great extent:—

"Not one," says our contemporary, "of those twenty thousand who have died in this presidency during the past twelve months, but might now have been living a useful member of the community and a support to his wife and children. Not one of those fifty-four who have daily succumbed to this dread enemy who was not the victim of a neglect such as the world has never before seen paralleled; a neglect which has no excuse, nor any palliation."

The primary, and in fact the sole, cause of this high death-rate is directly traced to absence of all attempt at sanitation. The Presidency town itself is most imperfectly drained, but in the suburbs and large towns inland filth of every description is allowed to accumulate, "until the air is rendered pestiferous with death-caused and death-causing exhalations." The Government are urged to interfere promptly, and check this fruitful cause of mortality, by introducing a system of sanitation applicable throughout the Presidency. Our contemporary thus concludes an exhaustive article on this crying evil:—

"If such be the simplest aspects of the case, those which need no proof, and they present so awful a picture of distress on the one hand, and so easy a remedy on the other, surely we are but performing our duty when with all our power we call upon the authorities to take some efficient step to check this rapid mortality? And it is equally certain that unless such measures are taken, and that at the earliest opportunity, the responsibility of this great loss of life will fall upon those who have, but will not employ, the means which Providence has placed in their hands."

MISCELLANEOUS.

A VERY EXTRAORDINARY ACCIDENT occurred at the Presidency last evening. From the accounts received it appears that Captain Hutchinson, while riding over the Government bridge late in the evening, came into collision with a mounted trooper of the Body Guard, and both horses immediately dropped down dead, one falling on one side, and the other on the other side. They were seen shortly after the occurrence took place lying exactly opposite each other. It is providential that neither of the riders were injured. Such is the account as gathered on the spot, where the carcasses of the two animals were lying.—Athenaeum, Sept. 12.

SALARIES TO OFFICIALS IN THE MADRAS HIGH COURT.—It may be remembered that the question of determining the salaries to be paid to certain officials of the Madras High Court was referred by the Chief Justice to the Secretary of State for his final decision. We now learn from a late number of the Times that Sir Charles Wood has decided that "the Chief Justice is at once to give full effect to the orders of the Madras Government in regard to the salaries assigned by the latter to the Registrar and Assistant Registrar on the Original side of the Court. As regards the Sheriff's office, the appointment of Sheriff and Deputy Sheriff are to be united, but on this point the Secretary of State has written to the Government of India, in view to their issuing orders so as to assimilate the salary, nature of the duties, &c., of the appointment throughout the High Courts in the three Presidencies. The salary of the Registrar of the High Court on the Appellate side has been reduced by Sir Charles Wood from Rs. 2,000, the amount assigned by this Government, to Rs. 1,500, which will be the salary to be allowed on the present incumbent vacating the appointment."—Bengal Hurkaru.

FRIEND-IN-NEED SOCIETY.—We are very glad to learn that the urgent applications made to the supreme Government by that of this presidency, on behalf of the Friend-in-Need Society, have induced the former to authorize the increase of the present State grant to the charity, to the extent of Rs. 400 per mensem:—"The President in Council, although opposed to the principle involved in grants of this description, will no longer withhold his assent from a request so repeatedly and so warmly advocated by the Government of Madras." The grant, as now increased, however, is sanctioned, subject to the condition that the aid from public funds is in no year to exceed one-half the amount of the current subscriptions contributed by the community.

Order thereon, 17th September, 1863. No. 1,037. A copy of this letter will be furnished to the Committee of the Friend-in-Need Society, who will be requested to report what has been the amount contributed to the society in the shape of current subscriptions and donations during the past months of the official year commencing on the 1st May last. Under the head of current subscriptions and donations the Committee are at liberty to include Church collection."

—Overland Athenaeum, Sept. 28.

SAUGOR, CENTRAL INDIA, Oct. 1.—I have very little local news to give you. Some officers of the Madras Cavalry here have got into a scrape, and I hear the Brigadier has handed the matter up to Head Quarters. Four Companies of the 97th are at Nowgong, and Colonel Turner, commanding the regiment at present, expects to get the Delhi Brigade on Lord Mark Kerr's having to join his regiment. Colonel Elliott on his return will relieve Mr. Temple from his present appointment of Chief Commissioner, and the latter gentleman goes home, if not otherwise provided for. During the short time he has been Chief Commissioner he has administered the province in a most able, judicious manner, but retrenchment seems to have been his great aim.

COIMBATORE, a rapidly increasing town, and blessed with a Collector of remarkable energy of character, has petitioned Government for permission to form itself into a municipality, and of course Government, upon the recommendation of the Collector, has considered the application in the most favourable manner. Cochin, also, it is said, desires a similar privilege; and Calicut will not be behind hand in ascertaining its position as the capital of Malabar. Cannanore may then follow, and Trichinopoly possibly will come forward also. Municipal councils are desirable for many reasons, provided they are presided over by men really alive to the wants and best interests of the township; but they are causes of much annoyance, and retard much good, when controlled by men of an inferior stamp. Calicut is to have a branch of the Bank of Madras established in her midst, within a few days, and Bepore is to have a pier which is to cost only Rs. 50,000, a very inadequate sum to erect any thing substantial and extensively useful. Our pier cost us 12 lacs of rupees, and it is, substantial as it is, speaking generally, useless.

TWO OR THREE COURTS-MARTIAL are about to assemble for the trial of a medical officer and two privates of H.M.'s 105th Regiment, stationed at Wellington. Major Shakespeare, the Deputy Judge Advocate-General, has arrived at the Neilgherries, and will act as president. The charge against the officer is not publicly known at present. That against the men is insubordination, which they appear to have deliberately committed in order to join some comrades comfortably provided for in the Ootacamund jail. Wellington, or, as it was formerly called, Jackatalla, enjoys a marvellously pleasant climate, but the neighbourhood is intensely dull, I fancy, in the estimation of the private soldiers, as Coonor, which is the nearest town, is, after all, but a larger kind of fashionable village, not a little similar to, though much much smaller than, Tunbridge-wells. Picturesque cottages and elegant invalids, however charming in the eyes of other people, are infinitely inferior to a small snug "public" in the imagination of most private soldiers. Gardens occupy the attention of some of the men, and athletic sports that of others; but, for all this, the regiments stationed at Wellington complain, as a rule, of the weary dullness and monotony of their life; and the gaol is even thought preferable to the barracks by some ill-conditioned men, who are led to anticipate better food and less work in the former than they enjoy in the latter. A court-martial assembled lately at Trichinopoly to try an officer, arraigned, among other charges, for refusal to attend mess when frequently ordered to do so, and for drunkenness. He was found guilty, and reduced to the bottom of the list of lieutenants, and severely reprimanded. Several courts-martial have been sitting here lately, but their proceedings call for no remark.

THE HON. W. S. ELLIS, C.B., the Madras member of the Imperial Council at Calcutta, and now collector of Madras is, it is said, about to retire temporarily from this district, as his health has broken down, and he requires quiet and leisure for the preparation of two or three really important bills which he is now drafting. His post here will, it is thought, be occupied during his absence by Mr. Banbury, late acting collector and magistrate of Kurwood, and now sub-Collector of Madras, a very rising man in this presidency, his service being of only about 11 years. Mr. A. P. Hodgson, late acting collector of Mangalore, went home on sick certificate by the steamer Indiana, thoroughly knocked up by the climate of the Western Coast, which is damp and enervating, whereas that on this side of the hills is dry and healthy, generally speaking. Most probably Mr. Hodgson will not be able to return to this country. The vacancy at Chittoor, caused by the removal of the fortunate Mr. Harris to the new judgeship at Ootacamund, has been filled up by the appointment of Mr. C. Roberts, our Tea Customs Collector, a post which has been granted to Mr. Blair, late sub-Collector and Joint Magistrate of North Arcot. Mr. T. Onslow, in succession to Mr. O'Donnell, has been appointed Collector and Magistrate of South Canara. Col. Ludlow, late R. E., has been gazetted consulting engineer of the Irrigation and Canal Company.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SUICIDE OF SERGEANT-MAJOR McMAHON.—KURRACHEE, Sept. 28.—I have a painful case of suicide to relate. At five o'clock on the morning of Friday, the 25th instant, after being called for drill, Sergeant-major W. McMahon, of the Local Artillery, took a small penknife, and going into another room, closed the door. His wife seeing that he remained in a long time, and fearing he might be late for parade, went to seek him, and to her horror found him lying on the floor bathed in his own blood. The unfortunate man had opened the jugular vein with the penknife, which was extremely sharp, and had already expired. Two reasons are assigned why he committed this act. The first is, that he felt confident his time of servitude, owing to the two years' service boon, had elapsed, and had applied accordingly to be discharged on pension. Through something or other, it turned out this made no difference with him. Are not the "locals" excluded from sharing in the boon in question? As he had set his heart upon going home it seems he grew dejected in consequence of this disappointment, and that he destroyed himself after a fit of despondency; although the hour at which he did the deed, if there be any truth in the idea that sleep is "nature's sweet restorer"—would tend to show that it was no time at which his spirits could have been a prey to depression. It seems besides that he slept as well as usual. The other reason assigned for the act is probably the correct one. It is said that he felt particularly galled that he, an old soldier of nineteen years' service, and a sergeant-major as well, should have to attend parades to acquire some new description of drill. If we take the state of his mind, as influenced by the disappointment I have already mentioned, together with attendance at drill, it is possible to conjecture that on waking up to go through a duty which was irksome to him, and actually made his desire to abandon the service keener, he rashly determined to put an end to all his troubles in the tragic manner in which he has done. The sergeant-major leaves a wife and several children. The court of inquest returned a verdict of suicide, committed while labouring under temporary insanity, and the same evening the deceased was buried with military honours, a large concourse of friends attending the funeral. He was very much liked by both officers and men.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 8.

A ROBBERY AND ASSAULT ON THE QUEEN'S HIGHWAY IN INDIA.—News has reached Bombay that

Mr. Robertson, of the Bank of Bombay, was attacked by robbers near Hyderabad (Deccan), while on his way to that city to establish a branch of the bank there, and that he narrowly escaped with his life. Mr. Robertson was travelling without any guard but one sepoy, whom, on the night before he entered Hyderabad, he told to march by the side of the bullock cart in which he himself slept. The sepoy, however, feeling sleepy, lay down to rest in another banghy, and Mr. Robertson only awoke to find himself lying on the ground in the midst of a dozen men armed with sticks and swords, who had dragged him out of the cart in his sleep, and who now demanded his money or his life. Mr. Robertson made an effort to reach the cart, in which he had a double-barrelled gun, but one of the robbers struck him with a stick and another aimed a blow at him with a sword, which cut his left arm to the bone as he raised it to protect his head. Seeing that resistance was useless, Mr. Robertson made a sudden dash through the midst of his assailants and took to his heels. Being a capital runner, and having the advantage of a bright moonlight night to show him the face of the country, he outstripped his pursuers after a race of some miles, and found shelter in a village. Salar Jung is now using every effort to discover the robbers, who carried off all Mr. Robertson's personal property, including several hundred rupees.—Bombay Saturday Review, Oct. 3.

CASTE OR NO CASTE.—Mr. Karsandass Mooljee, the defendant in the celebrated Maharaj libel case, has returned from England, whither he went after the trial for the express purpose of seeing if he would be turned out of caste on his return. It was a hardly experiment for a man already unpopular to attempt, and its failure would put a stop to all communication between the Hindus of Western India and England for years. But it is too late to criticise. Mr. Karsandass Mooljee has gone and returned, and what is more, Mr. Karsandass Madhavadas has at once come forward and dined with him. He, too, may thus become an out-caste if others do not follow his example. There is no real fear of excommunication, however. If it were attempted, the Messrs. Karsandass would become political martyrs, whom Government would be forced to support and to load with honours, and the Maharaj party are at least too wise to bring such retribution on themselves. They are too respectable, we would also fain hope, to indulge in tactics of an obsolete bigotry. The Messrs. Karsandass are sure also to be supported by all their castemen interested in the progress of native society, provided party feeling be not exerted, and improper pressure exerted to force a consummation that should be left to develop itself. The next logical step of course is for reformers of all castes to dine together.—Bombay Saturday Review, Oct. 10.

THE REV. F. GELL begs to acknowledge the receipt of Rs. 1,000 toward St. Paul's, Poona, as "an offering, the fulfilment of a vow," from an anonymous donor. This is the second thousand rupees anonymously subscribed towards this church, which it is pleasing to notice has enlisted so much sympathy. We are also informed that Sir Bartle Frere and Mr. Arthur have signified their intention of putting in a memorial window to the late Sir George Arthur; another window is also to be put in by Major Holland, in memory of his late wife, and we doubt not others will follow this example of commemorating their friends or relations in painted glass, beautifying the house of God, rather than in doleful and seldom seen monumental stones in a grass grown grave-yard.

ABOLITION OF THE OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF MARINE.—We understand that in pursuance of orders from the Supreme Government, the office of Superintendent of Marine will shortly be abolished, and the whole of the marine establishment at the presidency placed under the control and management of one officer, to be designated "Controller of Marine Affairs," with a salary of Rs. 1,600 per mensem. We learn also that this appointment will be conferred on Mr. H. E. Dalrymple, the present master attendant, who will be succeeded in the latter office by Mr. J. B. Crowther.

JUBBULPORE, Sept. 13.—Yesterday's telegram will have informed you of locusts having alighted at this station. I hasten to inform you, by post, that they made their exit this morning S.E., having come in from the north-west, and to add a few more interesting particulars in connection with their visit. In the first place, I am happy to be able to state, so far as I am at present informed, that no material damage has been done to the crops; they seem to have confined their havoc to foliage. Your readers are doubtless aware that a locust is in appearance much like a superannuated grasshopper, with a copper-coloured body and legs, and having wings of an ashy hue spotted with black. They made their appearance from the north-west first in the form of a column, and on nearing the station spread out. In five minutes every tree and common in the station was covered so thickly as to give to the foliage and grass the colour of brickdust. Half an hour or so after alighting, branches of trees thicker than a man's arm, began to snap off with their weight, and the feathered tribe in consternation, flew off to the hills skirting the station. I had the curiosity to experimentalise on one or two, to ascertain if they were tenacious of life. One, which I beheaded and completely gutted, moved for fifteen hours after; another, which I pinned to a door, has survived twenty-four hours, and is still alive.

PARSEE LIBERALITY AGAIN.—The Hon. Mr. Jugonath Sunkersett has expressed his intention of contributing Rs. 5,000 worth of botanical, geological, and other works on natural history to the Bombay branch of the Royal Asiatic Society. Rs. 5,000 worth of books on history and political economy are also expected from another native gentleman. Cowasjee Jehangheer's presentation (Rs. 5,000) of oriental works will, it is hoped, arrive in a month or two. We trust the rich Setts to whose munificence the transformation Bombay is undergoing is due will commemorate their day and generation by each one contributing a class to the Asiatic Society's library after the examples cited. The medical graduates who have succeeded in life should make it a point of honour, we think, to make the Grant College Library a first class medical one. Some time ago we proposed a road from Poona to Parbuttee, and we have just learned that the Hon. Jugonath Sunkersett at once offered to construct it, and that he has actually commenced it. The collector of Poona has resolved to erect a tablet on the road with an inscription stating by whom it was made. We must congratulate the residents of our gay Decan suburb on the promptness with which their want has been responded to, and compliment Mr. Sunkersett for this liberality, in which he has also shown his usual sagacity.

HONORE, Sept. 22.—Sir Hope and Lady Grant and staff are expected to arrive in a few days on a visit to the "Falls," which about this season of the year are in all their glory. The approaches to them, however, are at present crowded with heeches, which attack and cover the pedestrians, unless some means of protection be used. Long thick leather boots or leggings are the best, but if a good look out be not kept they will crawl over these, and reach even the neck. A composition of oil and assafetida rubbed over the boots will, it is said, prevent their passage over them. In two or three months more, however, these pests will have totally disappeared, until the setting in of the next monsoon. A rumour is going about that the Manchester Cotton Company, disgusted with the treatment they have experienced regarding the works at Beitoul, or Carwar, as I suppose we must now call it, intend selling off their stock and breaking up the company. It is further said that Messrs. Nicol and Co. intend purchasing the cotton press and other machinery, the value of which is very considerable. If this rumour have any foundation in truth, all who feel interested in the future of Carwar will regret it, for the more firms that settle in it in its infancy the greater will be the impetus given to its development. Besides, the Manchester Company wield a power to which the works about Carwar owe a good deal of their rapid progress.

RAJPOOTANA, Sept. 28.—The country is now very quiet, but the natives have rumours that many of the old Pandey sepoys, who were in hiding at Bikaner, Jeyulmeer, and other northern districts, have left and gone towards Afghanistan, with the avowed intention of joining in any raid on British territory. It will be well for those about Peshawar to keep a sharp look-out, and arrest all suspicious characters proceeding from the south. It is stated in the Central India Times that General Lawrence, the present Agent for the Governor General for Rajpootana, leaves in January, and is to be succeeded by Mr. Elliott. Others, again, mention Mr. A. R. Forbes, of Bombay, as the coming man. These, however, are mere rumours, and cannot be depended upon. Indeed, the probability is, General Lawrence will not be permitted to depart at present from the post he now occupies. Government will, doubtless, desire to retain as long as possible the services of an officer of his lengthened political experience, and whose practical knowledge of this part of India is, perhaps, greater than that of any man living.

KURRACHEE, Sept. 27.—We have been unusually dull here this season. Our Commissioner, Mr. Mansfield, is at present absent, either at Bombay or Poona. If report speaks truly, he prefers being at the head of his regiment, and in the wilds, to the council chamber of his desk. It is rumoured that Mr. Mansfield, our Commissioner, is not likely to return; but it is to be hoped that it is incorrect, for his administration has been a success, and his exertions in introducing many reforms, both in this port and the province generally have made him highly popular. It is said that we are to have a double line of telegraph to the Persian Gulf, one submarine and the other by land. I cannot vouch for the truth of this report, but it would be a great desideratum.

RAJCOOTE, Sept. 21.—A curious feature, at least to the natives, has attracted notice for some time, in the shape of a gentleman who, contrary to all Asiatic experiences in this province, does not think it beneath his dignity to handle a plough, drive a dray, and so set an example of English, or rather Scotch, energy to the natives. Lately he has been introducing exotic cotton plants, and the manufacture of American tobacco, with partial success. Government have been suddenly deprived of the valuable services of one of the ornaments of the civil service by the death of Mr. G. B. Coulson, first assistant in this agency. The premature removal of so promising a gentleman, in the springtime of life and usefulness, may well be deemed a national calamity. He was highly respected by his brother officials, and esteemed by the public for his many excellent virtues.

THE BANK OF BOMBAY on the 5th Oct. increased its rates of interest to two per cent. all round.

MR. ROBERT G. OXENHAM has been appointed to the Professorship of English Literature in the Poona College.

MR. C. JONES is appointed to act as foreman of the Mint, during the absence of Mr. Hodgart, who proceeded to England by the last mail.

H. I. F. MAJESTY'S STEAMER "GARONNE" sailed on the 1st Oct. for Europe.

H.M.'s 33RD REGIMENT.—We learn that H.M.'s 33rd Regiment at Poona have received orders to hold themselves in readiness to proceed to New Zealand. They will probably leave some time in November.

OOMROWTEE, Sept. 26.—The mortality amongst railway officials here during the last two years has been something very considerable. The other day Mr. Waterworth, a civil engineer of Montyapoor, died on returning from Oomrowtee. His corpse was interred in the Akola cemetery. A Mr. Johnston, railway inspector, has also died at Akola. Cotton is looking up, and the weather fine.

MR. H. L. ANDERSON.—The Bombay Gazette hears "that Mr. H. L. Anderson, Chief Secretary to Government, has been offered the appointment of a Member in the Legislative Council of India during the Session."

APPOINTMENTS.—The following appointments are made, with effect from the day on which Lieutenant Colonel Barr shall leave for England: Lieutenant Col. Vincent to act as Controller of Military Finance, vice Barr; Major W. Grey to act as Military Accountant, vice Vincent; Major H. W. Holland to act as Examiner of Commissariat Accounts and Superintendent of Army Clothing, during the absence of Lieutenant Col. Shaw, vice Gray; Major A. W. Lucas to act as Deputy Commissary General, vice Holland; Captain C. S. Mignon to act as Assistant Commissary General, vice Lucas; Lieutenant A. Phelps to act as Deputy Assistant Commissary General, vice Mignon.

CEYLON.

THE CEYLON REVENUE.

Our readers would naturally expect that we, who deal so largely in figures, should express our judgment as to the difference of opinion between the chairman of the Planters' Association and his Excellency the Governor, relative to the cause of the surplus balances exhibited in the annual accounts of the colony. The former maintains that these surpluses are owing chiefly to "a strict economy in expenditure," while Sir Charles MacCarthy confidently assures the public that they are "due mainly to increased productiveness of revenue, and not to a reduction of expenditure."

While we admit that the figures given by the chairman in his letter to the Duke of Newcastle are strictly correct, we cannot understand what is intended to be conveyed by the assertion that the export duty has been omitted from the accounts. Although the receipts from this source, as we all know, are made a separate fund, they are, nevertheless, included in the annual accounts of the colony, with a foot-note, to the effect that "the amount shown as excess of revenue over the expenditure includes the sum collected under the head of export duty." We think, therefore, there has been some misapprehension on this point which would appear to require explanation.

We have on a previous occasion distinctly pointed out that our revenue has been steadily and satisfactorily progressing: and in making this assertion, we remarked that the receipts from the Pearl Fishery should be considered as a casual and incidental occurrence, and that the comparison of revenue for any particular period should not include this item.

The following figures, distinguishing the ordinary Revenue from that derived from the Pearl Fishery, will show the correctness of our views :—

Ordinary Revenue.			Pearl Fishery.			Total.
1859...	698,735	3 1	48,301	11 4	698,735	3 1	11	16
1860...	729,587	14 9	37,512	18 4	767,100	13 1	14	13
1861...	751,850	5 2	146 16	3	751,850	5 2	16	3
1862...	759,073	6 5	62 4	6	759,073	6 5	4	9

Now, these figures clearly indicate that in the ordinary revenue there has been a progressive increase, amounting in 1862 to £128,232 as compared with 1858. This would appear to contradict what the Planters' Association maintain, "that the revenue of this colony is not progressively productive."

The association is, however, perfectly correct in stating that there has been a decrease in expenditure, and consequently a corresponding increase in the surplus. We believe it has been admitted that the unexpended votes were chiefly owing to the scarcity of labourers, and the sad disappointment in obtaining them. The following figures will show how the expenditure of the colony has decreased:—

		Ordinary		Surplus
		Expenditure.		Fund.		Total.
		£		£		£
1859	...	698,268	...	53,825	...	752,093
1860	...	705,440	...	78,125	...	783,865
1861	...	635,230	...	19,759	...	654,989
1862	...	626,654	...	3,483	...	630,137

It will thus be seen that both in the ordinary and surplus fund expenditure there has been a progressive decrease, except in 1860, when the late Sir Henry Ward rendered an account of his stewardship by stating that this was "the largest amount spent or received in any one year." The total expenditure in 1862, compared with 1859, shows a decrease of £121,956. So we come to the conclusion that the surplus balances are partly owing to productiveness of revenue, and partly to a strict economy in expenditure: and not mainly, as asserted on each side.—Colombo Observer, September 24.

THE BISHOP OF COLOMBO.

As was explained, his Lordship the Bishop of Colombo and his lady reached Point-Pedro by the steamer Pearl early on Saturday morning last.

He proceeded to the Wesleyan Mission-house, where he stayed a short time, and after refreshment, started with Rev. Mr. Pargiter by coach for Jaffna. He stayed a few minutes at the Rev. Mr. Smith's Oodopitty. The Rev. Mr. McArthur met them at Puttoor, where the Bishop alighted and inspected the Wesleyan church and school of that place. He then changed coaches, taking a seat in the Rev. Mr. McArthur's carriage, and drove on to Chundicooly, calling at the Nellore Mission-house. Here he stayed for a short time, and proceeded to the house on the esplanade, now rented by Government as Queen's-house. On the following Sabbath the Bishop preached at Chundicooly two excellent sermons, one in the morning, at the ordination service of Mr. Hensman, and another in the evening on behalf of the Church Missionary Society. The Wesleyans closed their church in the evening. The Bishop's discourses were both full of rich evangelical sentiments. His views are evidently broad and liberal. We should like to see both these discourses in print. They would do a great deal of good where sectarianism still cramps the heart. On Monday and Tuesday the Bishop was busily engaged in the confirmation of several groups of young people, European, Burgher, and native. But the most striking event of his visit, as we hear, was his meeting some thirty missionary and lay friends at the house of the Rev. Mr. McArthur, at Nellore, on Tuesday evening. After tea his lordship gave a deeply interesting address touching the unity of all good men in one common Christianity. He also adverted to the new marriage ordinance. All the senior missionaries present were called on to respond, and there was a very gratifying expression of oneness of feeling on these great topics. Such an event Jaffna scarcely witnessed before, and the good effect of that meeting will not soon die away.

On Wednesday the Bishop met a few friends before breakfast at the Wesleyan Mission-house, and afterwards inspected the boys' and girls' school belonging to that mission.

We understand that his lordship is highly delighted with all he has seen in Jaffna. Surely the Jaffna Christians are delighted with the Bishop.—Ceylon Patriot, Sept. 25.

THE STEAM SHIP "HIMALAYA."—The above noble vessel, with the second battalion 25th Regiment on board, anchored here this forenoon, after a passage of fifty-seven days from Portsmouth, having called at the Cape on the way. She is likely to remain here some eight or nine days, and it is said will go to Galle to coal ere shipping the 50th Regiment. Two companies of the "King's Own Borderers," intended for Kandy and Newera Ellis, land this evening, the rest to-morrow morning. The above companies will march for their destination on or about the 26th instant. Two companies more under Major Wallace will embark in the Pearl for Trincomalee and the detachment of the 50th there will return in that steamer. Another company of the 25th will also proceed to relieve the 50th detachment at Galle.—Colombo Observer, Sept. 24.

THE GALLE COACH.—We (Examiner) have just been informed that a box containing specie to the value of £1,000, forwarded by the Mercantile Bank by last night's coach, has been lost in the coach-office at Galle. The particulars of the alleged robbery have not reached us as yet. It is reported that £1,000 in bank notes and £1,000 in promissory notes were sent down by Friday night's coach to Galle, from the Colombo office,—and the fare (3s.) paid upon this consignment as a common parcel—that this parcel was taken from the coach and put into the coach-office at Galle, and shortly afterwards could not be found! If this be the true story, the Chartered Mercantile Bank may have to write off a loss, for the coach proprietors will scarcely hold themselves liable. An investigation takes place to-day, we hear.—Colombo Observer, September. 24.

THE GOVERNOR OF CEYLON.—We (Bengal Hurkuru) have received Ceylon papers to the 10th inst. by the Erymanthe. Arrangements had been made for the departure of Sir Charles MacCarthy for England by the French steamer of November 12. Sir Charles will probably be absent for nine months, during which time Major-general O'Brien, commanding the forces, will act as lieutenant-governor. The health of his Excellency had considerably improved by his late trip round the island in the Government steamer Pearl, but his medical advisers consider an immediate change of climate necessary to the complete restoration of his health. Mr. Justice Thomson, junior puisne judge, whilst at Trincomalie in August last, was subjected to very considerable annoyance in consequence of the neglect of the proper authorities to provide suitable accommodation. The matter has formed the subject of inquiry in the Legislative Council, and the conduct of Mr. Mitford, the official stationed at Trincomalie, whose especial duty it was to attend to all matters connected with the reception of the circuit judge, has been much censured. The Planters' Association had addressed a memorial to the Government, recommending the introduction of Chinese Coolies in large numbers to meet the urgent demand for labourers.

THE "ALABAMA" IN THE INDIAN SEAS.—The Confederate steamer Alabama, which has been doing so much mischief to the Federal shipping, and which was last heard of at the Cape of Good Hope, has made her appearance in the Indian seas. It is reported that the steamer Shunlee, which arrived here yesterday, was sighted by her and chased till British colours were exhibited. As there is a good deal of American shipping employed between this and Calcutta, great inconvenience will arise from the presence of this vessel, which, it is reported, is not alone, but supported by other Confederate steamers in her wanton destruction of property.—Colombo Observer.

BY THE COMMANDER IN CHIEF.

SERVICES OF LIEUT. C. A. GOODFELLOW, ROYAL ENGINEERS.—THE VICTORIA CROSS.

Adj. Gen.'s Office, Poona, Sept. 26.—No. 792.—Adverting to the extract from the London Gazette, dated April 17, 1863, republished in G.C.O. No. 328, of June 23 last, the C. in C. has much pleasure in notifying to the army that Lieut. C. A. Goodfellow, of the royal engineers, has been decorated with the "Victoria Cross," which Her Majesty the Queen has been pleased to confer on him, to commemorate an individual act of bravery, as recorded in the Gazette above mentioned.

Considering the distance at which Lieut. Goodfellow was from army head quarters, the season of the year, and the appointment he held in the Public Works Department, near Mhow, rendering his absence inconvenient to the public service, Sir W. Maunsfield was unable to have the gratification of presenting in person the decoration to Lieut. Goodfellow.

The important duty was therefore delegated to Maj. Gen. Green, C.B., commanding the Mhow div. of the army.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

THURSDAY, November 5, 1863.

THE GAGGING MINUTE.

THE DUKE OF NEWCASTLE has sent a circular despatch to the colonies, in which he warns all paid officers of Government from taking part in the editorship of newspapers, or even contributing to them. They are not to express their opinions publicly on any political question or upon any measures of Government! If they contribute articles to papers on other subjects, they are to append their genuine signatures as "the best security against abuse of the privilege;" and if any anonymous article is brought home to them, or any article under their signature enters upon forbidden topics, they will be removed from Government employ. Why, this is going back to the olden time, when every notice in the papers of India of Government measures was condemned as "pernicious publicity." The document is dated Downing-street, 20th of August, 1863. The date looks like a mistake for 1823.

A JAIL DELIVERY.

WE are glad to see that the British Indian judges have a proper respect for the liberty of the subject, and will not allow poor men to rot in jail until people in high places find it convenient to bring them to trial. John Mara was committed to jail at Rajmahal, on a charge of theft, brought against him by the railway authorities at that station. After he had been upwards of two months in jail—and where he would still have remained if Mr. Justice Norman had not come to his rescue, or "jail delivery"—Mr. Eglinton, the standing counsel, appeared on the part of the prosecution, and stated that the authorities at Rajmahal desired that the case might be postponed, virtually sine die—for no proposed period was named for the trial—on the ground that it was "inconvenient" for the said authorities to allow the witnesses, who were railway servants, to be absent from their duty. Was it not still more inconvenient for the prisoner to remain in jail? If it was "inconvenient" to the prosecutors to justify their charge, they should not have made it at all, or they should have immediately withdrawn it on the discovery of that inconvenience, and have given the prisoner his liberty again. They had no right to keep him waiting in jail an indefinite period until they could bring him to trial without any trouble to themselves. It seems that the witnesses were bound over to prosecute, but no particular time was named, so that as far as their recognizances were concerned, they might consult their own pleasure. All the convenience, like the Irish notion of reciprocity, was to be on one side only. The judge indignantly refused his sanction to the proposed arrangement, and remarked that the prisoner had already been more than two months in close custody, in itself no slight punishment for a European in such a climate as that of India, and, indeed, a more than adequate punishment for slight offences. The man was set free; but has he no redress for the deprivation of his liberty for two months—for punishment before trial? Can he not prosecute his persecutors for false imprisonment? If he can, we hope he will do so, for there is something peculiarly barefaced and cold-blooded in the manner in which it was proposed that a poor European should lie from session to session in an Indian jail until it was perfectly "convenient" to the prosecutors to prove or attempt to prove their charge against him.

NATIVE CRIM. CON. CASE.

WE have fallen in with another rather noticeable case in the Indian Law Courts. Respectable natives have been hitherto so reluctant to allow the names of their female connections to be the subject of comment even in private circles, and have exhibited such a horror of appearing in courts of law in any way connected with criminal cases, even as witnesses, that it is something of a novelty and a matter of wonderment to find a native crim. con. case pass from the Session Court to the High Court, and thence into all the Indian papers. Most of the parties concerned may be called Anglicised Indians, and yet of the Brahmin caste. The men are in respectable Government employ. The scene of this legal drama is Pannihutty, a village not far from Barrackpore. The prosecutor, Hurry Mohun Mookerjee, having been nominated to an appointment at Lucknow, left his wife (Soudaminee) and family at Pannihutty. The defendant, Juddoonath Chatterjee, was charged with having taken advantage of Hurry Mohun's absence to seduce his wife. The curious part of the case is that no less than four witnesses, all men of liberal education and filling posts of respectability under Government, and who gave their evidence with great clearness and without hesitation, and with no attempt to fence with questions that might seem to throw a doubt upon their statements, and upon whose testimony against him the prisoner was unhesitatingly sentenced by the Session Judge to one year's rigorous imprisonment, had their veracity questioned by the higher court, which utterly reversed the decision of the lower one. The four male witnesses all swore that at the suggestion of the wife's head female servant they placed themselves at the crevices of a window and actually saw the crime committed. Juddoonath, the defendant, bore the character of a rake, and the lady's reputation had been sometime previously in the condition which was not to be tolerated in the wife of Cæsar. She had even proved that a Hindoo lady could be as "potent in potting" as any Christian inhabitant of Billingsgate. She ran away from her husband's house and was seen in the prisoner's company in a state of intoxication. And yet with all this, the High Court, though there was no proof of conspiracy or malice, decided that the evidence given by the alleged eyewitnesses as to the specific act of criminal intercourse between the prisoner and the wife of the prosecutor was "so utterly repugnant to probability and so utterly at variance with what might be expected would be the conduct of respectable and credible members of native society that it would not be safe to sustain a conviction based on such evidence." The native community of Calcutta have exhibited the most lively interest in this remarkable case, and the courts were crowded with natives of respectability, who watched the proceedings with great anxiety. We are bound to respect the decision of the Appellate Court; though we confess that we cannot help being somewhat puzzled and perplexed by it; and doubt not that the natives generally will be disposed to question, in this instance, the sagacity of British judges.

AN INVASION OF THE ISLAND OF ST. HELENA.

HIS EXCELLENCY SIR CHARLES ELLIOT, Governor of St. Helena, is in a state of extreme alarm at the rapidly increasing destructive powers of an enemy from the coast of Africa, very insignificant individually, but very formidable in large bodies. We are reminded that a combination of Lilliputians can perplex a Gulliver or a governor, as flies can trouble or torture an elephant or a lion, the monarch of Oriental forests. "I regard the subject," says Sir Charles Elliot, "with anxiety," and "I apply to all the sources of good guidance upon the subject which suggest themselves to my mind." He has sent a circular epistle to his brother governors of other colonies soliciting assistance and advice. Amongst others, the Governor of Ceylon has been applied to, and that authority has published the circular in the local papers. The circular is accompanied with the copy of a minute, also published, which speaks of "wide-spread ruin, painfully striking." "Let us hope," he says (with solemn earnestness improving the occasion) "that it may be attended with salutary instruction. Man must eat his bread in the sweat of his brow, and even in regions blessed with a temperate climate, a fruitful soil, and coasts teeming with fish, the great law will still exact of us steady forethought and strenuous exertions, not only that we may secure any part in the advancing comfort and civilisation of other and less favoured positions (so far as natural conditions are considered), but literally that we may be able to hold our own against an invasion of the industrious mites." What does the reader suppose to be the nature of the terrible enemies so sarcastically termed industrious mites? WHITE ANTS! His Excellency, in his despair and horror at the increase of the enemy, who he thinks found their way from Africa—he does not say how—some twenty years ago, invites "naturalists, chemists, or intelligent and experienced persons of all friendly nations to give their earnest and immediate attention to the subject, and to communicate with the Colonial Secretary at St. Helena. "To stimulate" all endeavours to assist him, the Governor, with a princely munificence, offers the sum of fifty pounds to any person who shall devise successful modes of tracing the white ants to their nests or strongholds, and thoroughly disstroying "these receptacles." "It may be a useful indication in this respect," says the Governor, who gives advice while he is asking for it, "to remark that the ant cannot easily find its way across a small trench filled with boiling water, and the process which was subsequently pursued in the places where I witnessed it, was to stifle the insect within that circle of hot water by a plentiful supply of water and mud jammed down with stampers." The reader will hardly believe that this pompous proclamation—this mountain in labour producing a ridiculous mouse—is a genuine Government document. But so it really is, and it will serve as an additional illustration of the little wisdom with which the world is governed.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

The half-yearly meeting of this company was held on Friday last, at the London Tavern; Mr. R. W. Crawford, M.P., in the chair.

The report was taken as read.

The Chairman, in moving its adoption, hoped the proprietors considered it satisfactory. The progress made with the works had been so considerable that it was only necessary to mention those that remained uncompleted. There was a portion of the main line fifty-two miles in length, from Mirzapore to the great bridge over the Jumna, that was in course of construction, and another portion of seventy-eight miles in length, near the Delhi end of the line, making together 130 miles in course of construction. They had been informed by their engineers that the two portions would be completed by February next; and in about six months from the present time he hoped that a passenger would be enabled to start from Calcutta and travel the whole distance over their line to Delhi, with the exception of the great bridge over the Jumna at Allahabad, which would be finished by the end of next year. Of the other works to be completed they expected that the Barrackur or coal line extension, about twenty miles in length, would be opened from Raneeunge to the Barrackur river by the end of the present year. It passed through the best portion of the Raneeunge coalfields from the old terminus there. The Jubbulpore line also remained to be finished. This contractors were progressing with the works, and the chief engineer, Mr. Le Mesurier, had reported that their progress was very satisfactory. The line branched from the main line near Allahabad to Jubbulpore, where it formed a junction with the Great Indian Peninsular Railway, completing a railway communication from Calcutta to Bombay. So far as the construction of the line was concerned it might be considered very satisfactory, and would be completed by the time specified in the contract. The traffic during the past half-year showed considerable improvement. The increase in the gross receipts on the two divisions amounted to £232,000, and the increase in the net receipts to £139,500. The traffic had been carried at a charge of 50 per cent. of the gross receipts against 56½ per cent. on the Bengal division, and 59½ per cent. on the Upper Provinces division during the same period last year. The traffic returns in every item were most favourable. They might reasonably expect to see those anticipations realised which were held out by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. That the railway in a short time would not only become independent of the guarantee and yield a profit in excess of 5 per cent. to the shareholders, but might conduce, beyond all former expectations to the wealth and improvement of the country, and to the strength and financial prosperity of the Government. In the first page of the report they would see the name of Mr. Roberts as the chief auditor in Calcutta. In regard to the expense of the audit it would be upon their present takings of £1,100,000 a year about half per cent., but when the lines were completed, and they were in full traffic, it would not exceed one-quarter per cent. on the gross earnings. They had now the good fortune to have the affairs of the company under the special cognizance in India of a gentleman whose Indian experience and large administrative knowledge constituted him, perhaps, the best man under whom they could possibly have acted—he meant Sir C. Trevelyan—(hear, hear). He had lent the company the most effective assistance, and they were now enjoying the confidence and cordial co-operation of the Government, instead of being, as formerly, thwarted by doubts and suspicions. He therefore felt that they were justified in looking forward to a very successful future—(hear). After much consideration it had been determined, with the consent of Government, to charge the revenue half-yearly with a sum which he hoped would in time accumulate to such an amount that the interest upon it would cover what might be regarded as a fair premium of insurance against local and stationary risks from fire, as well as damage from the same cause to property in transitu. As to the Barrackur extension or loop line to the coal fields and Luckieserai, on the main line, he mentioned at the last meeting that they had discovered a very valuable deposit of coal at Kurhabalee, in that district, to which they would look for their supplies of fuel. The Board had had a correspondence with Sir C. Wood on the subject. At first the Government refused to allow the line even to be surveyed at the expense of the company, but satisfied of the very great importance of the project, the directors determined, if it could not be made in connection with this company under a guarantee from the Government, that they would endeavour to form a company which should be part of the East Indian Railway Company in effect, though not in its legal existence, and carry it out without a guarantee, satisfied that the traffic would pay far more than any guarantee Government would grant to any railway. While they were engaged in the preliminary proceedings an intimation was conveyed to them from the Government that as the proposed loop line would compete with the main line, they could not allow it to be made as a separate undertaking. He (the chairman) pointed out to the Secretary of State for India that it was necessary that the line should be constructed for several reasons—that, in the first place, it would give the company the command of the coal-fields; secondly, that it would save the expense of doubling the main line 300 miles, which would be absolutely necessary if the view taken of the future traffic by the Government of Bengal was correct; and further, that it would shorten the distance between Calcutta and the north of India by sixty miles. Thereupon Sir C. Wood referred the matter to the Government of India, who had ordered the surveys to be made; and no doubt if the Government decided that the line should be carried out, it would be as part of the East Indian Railway. Should the decision of the Indian Government be that the line was to be made, it would be necessary to call the shareholders together to make the necessary arrangements for raising the capital, and in the mean time the requisite notices would be given in November for obtaining the sanction of Parliament to raise further capital. They had now power to raise £23,000,000, of which they had raised 18,700,000 in stock and debentures convertible into stock, and 3,000,000 in unconvertible debentures, consequently they had not a large margin left. He concluded by moving the adoption of the report.

Mr. De Vitre seconded the motion.

The Chairman said that statements in Indian papers were often exaggerated. They might be sure the directors would not ask the proprietors to find capital for doubling the line unless they were perfectly satisfied of its necessity, and that they were working the single line to the full extent. The bridges and other works were constructed for a double line, but it would cost about £1,000 a mile to lay down a second line of rails. The expense of laying down additional rails and altering the stations between Burdawan and Monghyr would probably be about £1,200,000. The present receipts were about £25 a mile per week, but it would require £35 a mile per week to pay 5 per cent. on the capital. From what he had seen of single lines on the Continent he was convinced that a vast deal of traffic could be carried on their single line in India before it would be necessary to double it.

Mr. W. Dent confirmed the statements of the chairman as to the value and great advantage of the coal line to the company, and the necessity for making it.

The report was unanimously adopted, and the proceedings concluded with a vote of thanks to the chairman and directors.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CAPTAIN SPEKE, who, along with Captain Grant, discovered the source of the Nile, returns to Somersetshire, his native county, on Friday (to-morrow). A public dinner is to be given at Ilminster on the 11th inst. to the gallant captain.

THE CRAWLEY COURT-MARTIAL.—Mr. Coningham, M.P., who works himself up into a towering state of indignation concerning military matters and pictures, which prevents his exercising any judicial power nature may have given him to distinguish right from wrong, absolutely bubbles over in froth and lava in angry volcanic writing against the Horse Guards and the War-office, for having removed the Crawley court-martial from London to Aldershot, and accuses them, more suo, of all sorts of baseness, meanness, cowardice, &c. Now, in the first place, it is as well to let Mr. Coningham know, now that he is in a calm moment—for he cannot always be so furious—that it never was intended to hold the court-martial in London, and that it never was for a moment suggested or promised that the trial should take place in the metropolis. Mr. Coningham will therefore perceive that he is not quite correct in his charge against the authorities of removing the locus. But he would have it in London! May we ask him where he would lodge the men, and how he would keep them in order? It has transpired, unfortunately, that they require some control. Aldershot being a camp, with a fixed military establishment, and easily accessible, was naturally, and we think very properly, selected as the place where the trial ought to take place, as it was the most suitable spot for the witnesses, some sixty or seventy soldiers, to be quartered in. They do duty with the 13th, and are kept out of idleness and mischief. If Mr. Coningham had his will, they would be living in laziness and in ruinous indiscipline in the metropolis.—Army and Navy Gazette.

THE WITNESSES FROM INDIA FOR THE CRAWLEY COURT-MARTIAL.—There are great difficulties about the Crawley court-martial. Many of the soldiers "don't recollect, it's so long ago." The non mi ricordo is a very embarrassing answer, and Mr. Denison can, we fear, make little out of the case so far as these witnesses are concerned. It is not likely he will be ready before the end of this month. We regret to hear of the gross misconduct of some of the last batch of witnesses, who arrived at Aldershot in a most unseemly condition, and were only restored to order by a large guard from camp. If Mr. Coningham had been there he might have seen reason to modify his opinions respecting the most eligible quarter for the lodging of witnesses.—Army and Navy Gazette.

THE CRAWLEY COURT-MARTIAL.—Preparations for the court-martial on Lieutenant-Colonel Crawley continue to be actively made at Aldershot. No official notification has yet been issued fixing the opening day of the trial; but, as several officers of the Enniskillens have leave of absence until the 10th inst., it is not probable that the court-martial will commence its proceedings until after that date. The following is a complete list of the officers who have already arrived at the camp for examination on the trial:—Capt. Curtis, Lieut. Snell, Dr. Turnbull, Quartermaster Charles Wooden, V.C., Capt. Renshaw, Lieuts. Davies and Wallace, Capt. Weir, and Cornet Davis. The non-commissioned officers and men consist of twenty sergeants, sixteen corporals, and eighty-seven privates, which, with the above-named officers, make a total of 132 witnesses.

BILLS ON INDIA.—The biddings for £400,000 in bills on India took place yesterday (Wednesday) at the Bank of England; subjoined are the official particulars:—"The proportions allotted were—To Calcutta, 22,00,000 rupees; to Bombay, 16,00,000 rupees; and to Madras, 2,00,000 rupees. The minimum price declared was, as before, 1s. 11½d. per rupee on Calcutta and Madras, and 1s. 11½d. on Bombay. The applications within the limits amounted to 283 lacs. Tenders on Calcutta, at 1s. 11½d., will receive about 90 per cent.; on Bombay, at 2s. 0½d., about 28 per cent.; and on Madras, at 1s. 11½d., all."

MURDER OF AN ENGLISH CREW BY CHINESE PIRATES.—A telegram has been received in Liverpool, in anticipation of the India and China mail, stating that the ship Panama, Capt. Johns, while on her homeward voyage from Hong Kong, was captured by pirates in the China Sea, the officers and crew murdered, and the vessel plundered and burnt. The Panama was a new vessel of 206 tons, owned by Mr. J. Malcome, of Liverpool. She was built expressly for the China trade, and sailed on her first voyage in October last year.

CEYLON RIFLES.—A party of non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the Ceylon Rifle Regiment, who have been in England some months, and attached to the Coldstream Guards for musketry practice, were inspected by her Majesty on Saturday last, previous to their return to Ceylon. Colonel Carleton, Field Officer in Brigade Waiting, attended with them at Windsor Castle.

LIVERPOOL, Nov. 3.—With reference to a paragraph in the Colombo Observer of the steamer from Bombay having been chased by the Alabama in September, the last mail steamer from the Cape of Good Hope reported the Alabama's arrival at Simon's Bay on September 16, and that she was to leave on the 23rd.

EXPORT OF SPECIE.—The Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer Foonah, which sailed yesterday (Wednesday), took out £167,230—£16,250 being silver and £150,980 gold. The proportions are—Madras, £600; China and the Straits, £18,570; Alexandria, £148,000; and Suez, £60.

WRECK OF THE CHINA SHIP "OCEAN MAIL."—The particulars of a heavy loss in the total wreck of the British ship Ocean Mail, the cargo of which is valued at £150,000, has just been reported. This ship was loaded with a rich cargo of tea and silk, and on the 1st of August left Shanghai for London. On the following morning she suddenly struck with a fearful crash, and heeled over six or seven streaks. Her head flew round as she sat upon the rock, and she fell over several more streaks with a crash, as if the whole of her bilge was carried away. The pumps were at once sounded, and it was found that she had already made five feet. All hands were immediately set to them, but of no avail. It was evident that she had sustained a fearful injury in her hull, as the water gradually increased, and the last sounding gave eighteen feet. The ship was working backwards and forwards as on a pivot, and it was certain that she was rapidly going down, the water being up to the deck. The crew were ordered to lower the boats, and after much difficulty they were got away; but unhappily one of the boats upset under the bow of the ship, and the pilot and two apprentices perished. Capt. Linklater, the commander of the vessel, was the last to leave. Both sides of the Yangtze were lined with portions of her wreck and cargo. The Ocean Mail had chiefly been employed in trading between England and China.

LOSS OF THE SHIP "ALICE MAUDE."—Intelligence was received in Bombay yesterday of the loss of the Alice Maude, in lat. 10 deg. N., long. 90 deg. E. The unfortunate vessel had made a voyage from Bombay to Calcutta a short time since, and was returning to this port when she foundered. No particulars of the wreck have been received, beyond the intelligence that all hands were rescued by another vessel, which was attracted to the spot by a flag of distress.—Gazette, Sept. 12.

MR. EPHRAIM MOSELY'S IMPROVEMENT IN THE CONSTRUCTION OF ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES, on an INDIA-RUBBER BASE, are secured by Letters Patent, dated December, 1852, whereby the continual outlay of new teeth is avoided, alterations from the absorption of the gums, or any other cause, being easily remedied, and the first outlay no greater than for ordinary kinds. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted as under:—It consists of one continuous piece of Prepared India-rubber. The Artificial Teeth present an uniformly even surface to the action of the tongue, preventing lodgment of food and all secretions, so much complained of in the present system. No gold or any other metal being required, all springs, wires, and fastenings are wholly unnecessary; sharp edges are avoided, a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity hitherto wholly unobtainable, and a fit perfected with the most unerring accuracy, are secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums. The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the prepared india-rubber; and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may be retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being at the same time provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

MR. HOWARD, Surgeon-Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs, wires, or ligatures. They so perfectly resemble the natural teeth as not to be distinguished from the originals by the closest observer. They will never change colour or decay, and will be found superior to any teeth ever before used. This method does not require the extraction of roots, or any painful operation, will support and preserve teeth that are loose, and is guaranteed to restore articulation and mastication. Decayed teeth stopped, and rendered sound and useful in mastication. 52, Fleet-street. At home from Ten till Five.

TENDER & DECAYED TEETH STOPPED

with ANODYNE CEMENT, which instantly allays the most violent pain, and fills up cavities, however large, and answers where every other kind of stopping has failed. Prepared only by Mr. ALFRED JONES, Surgeon-Dentist to their late R.H. the Princess Augusta and Duchess of Gloucester, the late Louis Philippe, and the ex-Royal Family of France, 64, Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square. At home from 11 till 4. No connection with any person practising in the same profession.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—The Manufacturing

Dentist, being the actual maker throughout, can with certainty insure comfort and satisfaction even where others have failed, and at a much lower charge. Mr. R. BRADSHAW, for several years Manufacturing Dentist to the Profession, 20, Great Portland-street, Oxford-street (Circus).

N.B.—Mr. BRADSHAW begs to say that no charge whatever is made by him unless satisfaction is given.

RUPTURES.—BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER TRUSS is allowed by upwards of two hundred medical gentlemen to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of HERNIA. The use of a steel spring, so hurtful in its effects, is here avoided, a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected, and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the TRUSS (which cannot fail to fit), forwarded by post, on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the manufacturer,

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pontonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Mordan, &c., at half the price of new. any Silks, Cloths, Curtains, or other article of Household Furniture, or Wearing Apparel, the best and most effectual agent for removing it is the BENZINE COLLAS, which will not alter the colour or injure the texture.

Sold by SANGER and SON, 150, Oxford-street, W., and all respectable Chemists. Price 1s. 6d. per Bottle.

IMPORTANT to PEOPLE RETURNED

from INDIA.—The only really effectual relief for torpidity of the liver, bile, and all those weak feelings arising from the change from a hot climate, is SANGER'S TASTELESS ANTIBILIOUS POWDERS, a trial of which will satisfy the most sceptical. They are invaluable for chronic bile, and do not weaken the system by violent purging, or saturate it with mercury, which most remedies for the bile do.

Sold by J. SANGER, 150, Oxford-street, W., in packets, at 1s. 14d. and 2s. 9d., or by post for fifteen or thirty-six stamps.

BLAIR'S GOUT AND RHEUMATIC PILLS.

This preparation is one of the benefits which the science of modern chemistry has conferred upon mankind; for during the first twenty years of the present century to speak of a cure for the Gout was considered a romance; but now the efficacy and safety of this medicine is so fully demonstrated, by unobscured testimonials from persons in every rank of life, that public opinion proclaims this as one of the most important discoveries of the present age. These Pills require no restraint of diet or confinement during their use, and are certain to prevent the disease attacking any vital part. Sold at 1s. 14d. and 2s. 9d. per Box, by all Medicine Vendors.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—

The variable temperature of Autumn is always pregnant with colds, catarrhs, humours, and abscesses; and all scrofulous diseases and glandular affections usually become worse at this season. Holloway's Ointment diligently rubbed upon the skin as near to the affected part as possible will be found the most safe and efficient means of immediately subduing pain, and finally eradicating the seeds of future mischief from the system. Whenever the malady is chronic, constitutional, or dangerous, Holloway's Pills should be taken to quicken and increase the curative power. Scrovy, skin disease, and similar disorders disappear before the cleansing and healing influence of Holloway's remedies, which, for their successful employment, only require moderate time and fair attention.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

SIR WILLIAM DENISON has returned to Madras, in the Bellary district. He is expected to pay an early visit to Trichinopoly.

The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has returned to Calcutta.

Lady and Miss Trevelyan were expected at Madras, on their way back to Calcutta from the Neilgherries.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief leaves Bangalore in the first week of November, to proceed on a tour as far northwards as Dharwar, from whence he will pass down along the Malabar coast, and he expects to be in Trichinopoly by the end of the month, where he will make a short stay, returning to the Presidency about the middle of December. In the beginning of January Sir Hope Grant will leave Madras for the northern ports, from whence he will embark for Rangoon. After a somewhat prolonged tour in that province he will return direct to the Presidency.

The society of British India was perhaps never before so remarkable as it is now for cases of "scandal" of all sorts. It would look as if the whole Anglo-community had little to do but to indulge in petty quarrels, or to dissipate their ennui with forbidden pleasures. A curious case of crim. con. is published at great length in the Calcutta papers, received by this mail. A Dr. Tippetts, attached to the 35th Regiment, has prosecuted a Captain Lloyd, of the same corps, for the seduction of his wife. The doctor caught the captain in his wife's bed-room. There was no attempt to plead not guilty, but the defendant had the meanness to bring a sort of counter charge against the plaintiff, and to justify himself on the ground that the doctor had consented to his own dishonour. The judge of the High Court gave the husband 8,000 rupees damages, which he made heavier than he would have done on account of the defendant's line of defence.

The cotton season in India this year is said to have been, upon the whole, a very profitable one, but we are sorry to hear that the Government prizes, aggregating Rs. 10,000, have not brought a single native candidate into the field.

An extension of the railway system of the Bengal presidency is actively contemplated, and a survey of a proposed line connecting the Cuddapah Railway with Bombay and Hyderabad has been effected. It has many recommendations over that originally proposed to link the Nizam's dominions and the two presidencies together, but the sanction of the Secretary of State to the adoption of the scheme is requisite prior to anything further being done.

The Hon. Mr. Drummond will start from Bareilly on the 1st December, on his tour of inspection through the North-West Provinces. On the 4th his Honour will be at Shahjehanpore, where he will remain two days; on the 10th at Futtehghur, where a three days' halt will be made; on the 16th at Mynpoory for one day; and on the 24th at Agra, where he will stay a whole week.

The navigation of the Mutlah is not without its dangers. The ship Essex, a Prussian vessel, went down at the mouth of this river while in charge of the pilot. The passengers were saved, but the ship and cargo were totally lost.

The inundation of the Indus has been so severe this year that in the Church District the town of Hamas has been washed away.

Baboo Sutttyendro Nath Tagore, the successful Native candidate for the Civil Service, has been posted to Bombay. This is in accordance with the principle of the order which prevents covenanted officers from holding appointments in a presidency in which their personal interests are concerned. Had this order, however, not existed, the Baboo was too low in the list to have had any expectation of seeing service in Bengal, the prize presidency.

The Royal Bank of India, one of the new banks lately projected at Bombay, has held its first meeting of shareholders. The bank was opened on Aug. 6 last. Mr. H. B. MacCulloch has been sent to open an agency in London, and a branch is about to be established in Calcutta, as well as at Ahmedabad, Surat, and Belgaum. The six directors of the bank, of whom three are English and three Parsees, receive Rs. 780 a month each. Mr. Andrew Grant is chairman.

According to the Englishman the Military Fund of the Bengal Army has still a surplus income of Rs. 40,000; but it is steadily declining. The number of widows incumbent upon the fund is almost 800; and for their maintenance the enormous sum of £150,000 is annually disbursed.

The Madras Times of Oct. 7th alludes to some unpleasant misunderstanding amongst the military at Bangalore. It appears that six officers, members of the Cricket Club, have been placed under arrest for joining in a resolution at a meeting of the club reflecting indirectly on a commanding officer—Col. Pattle, of the King's Dragoon Guards.

The financial state of Ceylon is said to be highly satisfactory, and Sir Charles MacCarthy will be able shortly to congratulate the colony upon the steady increase of trade and commerce. The amount of the receipts for 1863, including the Pearl Fishery, is £765,650. The increase upon last year is about £150,000.

The Colombo Observer of Oct. 8th states that the captain of the Hiawatha reports having met the American steamer Alabama in the Bay of Bengal.

BENGAL.

THE LIBEL ON MR. JENNINGS.

The directors of the Bengal Hurkaru Press Company (Limited), acting on the totally unexpected advice of their counsel, have thought proper to apologise for certain articles which appeared in their paper reflecting on Mr. Jennings' conduct as chairman of the Bengal Printing Company. Mr. Newmarch, in his great anxiety to do the handsome thing, went so far as to say that the imputations cast upon Messrs. Osler and Co.'s managing man were "wholly unjustifiable." It, therefore, concerns the character of the editor of this journal to protest against an apology which brands him with being a common slanderer. Notwithstanding his distinct assertion, made more than once in these columns, that he alone is answerable for whatever belongs to the editorial department, and that no proprietor or editor would be permitted, for any consideration, to insert a single line in support of his personal loves or enmities, he is informed that certain low-born individuals, who cannot appreciate the value of a gentleman's word, have ascribed the aforesaid articles to any one rather than to the real writer, who was the editor himself. The counsel for the plaintiff, in opening his case, also talked in a wild, foolish way about the evident malice and venom that permeated the attacks upon his client, and of course used the epithet "ribald," which, since it was applied to the press by Lord Russell, has been considered de rigueur. There was no malice whatever in any one of the articles which gave Mr. Jennings and his co-directors so much offence. The editor is not conscious of ever having entertained such a complimentary feeling towards even his equals, and certainly not towards a tradesman's assistant. Moved solely by a sense of public duty, he commented freely, but impartially, upon the mismanagement exhibited by the directors of the Bengal Printing Company, as proved before Mr. Justice Morgan, and condemned by that learned judge. It is true he went too far, though in perfect good faith, and charged Mr. Jennings with having been privy to an act of deception of which he was entirely innocent. Naturally indignant at being unjustly accused, and perhaps not unwilling to divert attention from the laches of which, in common with his associates on the direction, he had been really guilty, Mr. Jennings wrote an angry and would be dignified letter to the editor, in which he clearly enough demonstrated that he had nothing whatever to do with the very ugly errors in the balance-sheet. By this time the editor had obtained what he believed to be trustworthy information in reference to the sale of some forty shares or thereabouts which he understood Mr. Jennings had sold in October. In this he was mistaken. The shares in question, though not transferred till (he thinks) November, had been actually disposed of some time previously. Still, he bore not the slightest feeling of malice towards Mr. Jennings, but acted simply and entirely from a sense of duty to the public. Mr. Doyne, indeed, pretended that the fact of these charges being repeated in the Overland Summary implied a malicious motive, but this is pure nonsense, for how would that Summary have been complete had no allusion been made to a subject which was then very generally canvassed among the shopocracy of Calcutta, and even in the more aristocratic Chowringhee? Had the case been allowed to go on, abundant evidence would have been adduced to show that the Bengal Printing Company was grossly mismanaged under its former direction, and that dividends were paid though no profits had been realised. Mr. Jennings might not have been cognisant of the real state of affairs in that concern; but, if so, why did he occupy the chair? Or, what is the meaning of being a director? To that extent, the editor of the Hurkaru, or of any other journal, was fully justified in criticising and condemning his conduct. How, then, can those articles be said to have been "wholly unjustifiable?"—Bengal Hurkaru, Oct. 8.

NATIVE JUDICIAL OFFICERS.

One of the cases which has recently attracted considerable attention in the Mofussil is that of Abdool Azeez v. Tayler, for defamation, to try which the Lieut.-governor of Bengal has appointed a special judge. The circumstances connected with the case have appeared from time to time in our daily columns, and are briefly as follows:—Mr. Tayler, formerly Commissioner of Patna, and a member of the Civil Service, has, since he left that service, practised as a pleader in the Mofussil Courts, and has his head-quarters at Patna, under the title of "The Patna Law Agency." In his capacity as a pleader he has had, like all conscientious men who are compelled to have anything to do with Mofussil Courts, to contend against the monstrous iniquities of the amlah, increased by the latitude allowed to those gentry by incompetent judges, and against these iniquities he has consistently and perseveringly waged a war which entitles him to the thanks of every suitor in Bengal, or rather throughout all India. Prominent among the spots where such ill weeds as these amlah grow apace is the Court of the Principal Sudder Ameen of Patna, Abdool Azeez, a Mussulman, who, to use his defender, Mr. Lautour's, own words, is an old man worn out. Of the proceedings in this old gentleman's den—for the court-room in which he sits is more like that than anything else—Mr. Tayler, in several graphic letters to a local journal, drew a certainly not over flattering picture, in which the foreground features were, an old man dozing, crosslegged, on a platform, and a witness gabbling over his evidence in a corner a long way too far off from the judge for that official to catch even a word. The incapacity of this wretched old man has been admitted by his employers; but, for all that, he has not been without his defenders, the chief thereof being Mr. Lautour, present Sessions Judge of Patna, the voluntary adviser of the High Court on matters of procedure, and the rebuked of the same Court for needlessly censuring the conduct of a subordinate officer. Excited, possibly, by the fact that he was not without his backers, Abdool Azeez determined to show that he was not quite so helpless as Mr. Tayler imagined him, and the result is the action against the latter now pending. But Mr. Lautour, in his defence of the "incapable"—from a feeling of sympathy, perhaps—is not satisfied with this; and we are sorry, for the credit of so high a judicial authority, to have to record that every possible difficulty has been thrown in Mr. Tayler's way; that his communications have been treated with a levity almost amounting to rudeness; and that the evidence of partiality on the part of the sessions judge has been such as to shock all righteous men; partiality, too, carried to such an extent as to induce him to bestow public praise upon two vakeels whose character for ordinary honesty had been quite as publicly impugned by his predecessor, Mr. Scott. All these facts have been boldly brought before the public by Mr. Tayler, and not one has been denied. In fact, denial would be useless, for out of his own mouth comes Mr. Lautour's conviction—a conviction showing beyond all doubt that he has been so carried away by his partiality as to allow it to induce him to throw the Aegis of his protection over an old man, every action of whose official life tells against him.—Englishman, Oct. 8.

OVERLAND TRIPS.

A short time since we (Friend of India) mentioned the near realisation of the project for a railway from Bussorah to Belgrade. It is a quarter of a century since the enterprising Waghorn crossed the Suez desert with a carpet bag containing the first despatch of overland letters; and it is only since 1840 that the Peninsular has been really the Oriental Company also. But the flow of Indian trade will return, like water, to the easiest and oldest channel by the valley of the Tigris. Since Venice was in all its glory this route has never been entirely disused, in spite of the Cape passage. The Levantine trade of the English succeeded, in the seventeenth century, to the commerce of the Venetians; and at Alleppe with its great population and its port, Scanderoon, there were no less than sixty English firms in the reign of Charles II., which exchanged our cloth for the airy fabrics of India and China. Even now, before the railway is begun, no route offers so many attractions to the Anglo-Indian traveller, who has health, time and money, as this. The British India Steam Navigation Company's vessels, which leave Bombay every six weeks, will place him at Bussorah for £33 in ten days. Thence the Euphrates and Tigris Steam Navigation Company's little steamers will take him for £8 in five days to Baghdad. With the exception of the ruins of Ctesiphon and Seleucia the trip up the Tigris to Baghdad is not interesting. From Baghdad to the coasts of the Mediterranean or Black Sea the traveller has the choice of three routes all more or less attractive, by Damascus and Beirout, by Aleppo and Alexandretta on the Mediterranean, and by Samsoun on the Black Sea to Constantinople. The whole distance from Baghdad to Damascus, about 500 miles, has to be travelled on camel back; the route lies through a desert and is somewhat dangerous, as caravans are always liable to attacks from Bedouins. Sometimes the Camelleers will consent to take travellers to Palmyra, which lies a little out of the road, but more frequently they object to do so, as the ruins are infested with thieves. The time occupied to Damascus is from ten to fifteen days, and from Damascus to Beirout three or four.

The steamers of the Messageries Imperiales pass Beirout weekly, one week going down by Jaffa to Alexandria and thence to Malta and Marseilles, and the next going up by Messina, the port of Tarsus, and Rhodes to Smyrna, and thence through the Greek islands to Malta and Marseilles. Camels to Damascus cost £50, thence to Beirout £15, and the steamer thence to Marseilles £30. Thus the whole journey from Bombay to Marseilles will cost £136. But taking into account servants, provisions and extraordinary expenses, a correspondent who knows the route well and considers it the least interesting of the three, estimates the outlay at £170. But the Holy Land is most accessible from Damascus, and this with the chance of visiting Palmyra, the city of Zenobia, which the Indian trade created in the desert, will tempt many. A traveller taking the Baghdad-Aleppe or Baghdad-Samsoun routes should be prepared to travel with the smallest possible amount of baggage, as the journey is performed on post horses, and every pound weight is a consideration. The post road passing through Arbil (Arbela), Mosul (Nineveh), Diarbekir (Amida), Orfa (Roha), Aleppo and Antioch, arrives at Alexandretta where the steamers touch. The road to Samsoun from Baghdad passes through Arbil, Mosul, and, diverging from the Baghdad-Aleppe road at Diarbekir, takes a northerly direction through Armenia, to Samsoun on the Black Sea. Steamers leave Samsoun twice or three times a week for Constantinople. From Constantinople there is a choice of three routes to England, by steamer to Syria, the Pirelus, Messina, and Marseilles; by steamer to Syria the Pirelus and Trieste, or by Rustendjee, Varna, &c. The Danube is only open in the spring and summer, when the last is by far the speediest route.

ANOTHER LITTLE WAR.

A "Little War" is germinating on the upper Indus, on the Huzara frontier. Forty years ago a Bareilly Syad, Ahmud Sha, obtained a wonderful ascendancy over the whole of the Eusufzye clans in the Peshawar valley. After an extraordinary career he fell in battle with the Sikhs, in 1830, at Balakot, in Huzara, and his surviving followers, all Hindoostanee fanatics, were permitted by the Sikh conquerors to proceed on pilgrimage to Mecca. Arrived at Attock they turned sharp up the right bank of the Indus, and established themselves at a place called Sitana, nearly opposite Torbeyla, in the country of the Othmanzye clan. Their incessant hostility and intrigues against the British Government during the mutiny in 1857 led to an expedition for the purpose of expelling them from Sitana in the year 1858. This expedition was so far successful that the Hindoostanee fanatics were compelled to fall back further inland, and to quit the banks of the Indus. They removed to a place called Mulkah, situated in one of the southern spurs of the great Mahabun Mountain, and the Othmanzye and Gudoon tribes entered into an agreement with the British Government not to permit them to resettle at Sitana. To Mulkah, some months ago, repaired the son of the late titular king of Swat, Syud Akbar, who claims an ancestral right in the Sitana lands. At his persuasion some hundreds of the Hindoostanees have lately returned to Sitana, and re-instated him and themselves at that place. The Gudoon and Othmanzye tribes, when called on by the British Government to fulfil their contract and to prevent the re-occupation of Sitana, have refused to do so. A "blockade" has therefore been instituted on our part, and all communications between the British territory and the Gudoon and Othmanzye tribes stopped. The exasperation thus caused is fed by the Hindoostanee fanatics, who are liberal in their offers of money to the tribes affected by the blockade, as well as to the adjoining tribes on the condition of support and assistance. They have been sufficiently successful to make it probable that they will attack Umb on the Indus, a place some miles above Sitana, and which, though not within the British territory, from which it is divided by the Indus, is owned by a feudatory of ours, the principal part of whose lands are situated in Huzara. As a precautionary measure the 101st Royal Bengal Fusiliers have been moved from Rawul Pindee to Abbottabad, and the troops of the Punjab irregular force ordinarily quartered at Abbottabad have been pushed on towards the Indus. Such is the present situation of affairs, and it can hardly eventuate otherwise than in a second expedition for the expulsion of these troublesome fanatics from Sitana, and for the chastisement of those tribes which have refused to perform an engagement voluntarily entered into with the British Government. It is premature to connect this with the state of Afghanistan, though the withdrawal of Mahommed Azim Khan with his troops from the frontier district which he governed, to make an attempt on the Cabul guddee, has doubtless given these fanatics some confidence.—Friend of India, Oct. 1.

TESTIMONIAL TO SIR JOHN PETER GRANT.

We insert below the memorial of the inhabitants of Berhampore to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, requesting his honour to make a free gift of a piece of land to enable the memorialists to erect thereon a public hall, which is to bear the name of his predecessor, Sir John Peter Grant:—

To the Hon. CECIL BEADON, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal.

HON. SIR,—On the occasion of the departure from this country for Europe of the Hon. Sir John Peter Grant, the late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, the native inhabitants of Moorsheedabad, at a public meeting held at Berhampore, determined, as a token of their respect and gratitude for the benefits conferred on the country by his administration, to erect a memorial, which, while it should keep alive his name in the minds of the people, would at the same time tend to benefit them materially. With this view subscriptions have been set on foot.

The meeting unanimously resolved that the most suitable form of the memorial would be "a public hall," to be built at Berhampore, in a conspicuous locality, which is to bear the name of Sir John Peter Grant, and to afford accommodation to a library and reading-rooms, and to public meetings of the European and native community for purposes connected with the social, moral, and political improvement of the country.

We find that the most convenient and suitable site for such a building would be a spot at the north-western extremity of the cantonments, on the bank of the river, bounded on the north by a temple and Hingun's house, on the south by Juggunath's temple, on the east by Kotwalee, and on the west by the bank of the Bhageerutty and the road leading to Khagra, measuring about ten cuttahs of land; the proprietary right in which is vested in the Government, and as we feel sure that the object we have in view is one which will not fail to meet the approval of your honour, we most respectfully solicit the favour of your honour's bestowing the spot on the native community free from payment of rent, an act for which we shall be greatly indebted to your honour. We have the honour to be, Hon. Sir, your most obedient servants.

We have no doubt that the Lieutenant-Governor will cordially comply with the above request of the Berhampore people.—Ryot's Friend.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE NAVIGATION OF THE MUTLAH is, after all, not entirely free from danger. The Prussian ship Essex, Captain Klatt, has gone down at the mouth of that river, while still in charge of the pilot. The crew were fortunately saved, but both ship and cargo are irrecoverably lost. This disaster is of a nature to damp the ardent expectations of the projectors of Canning Town, especially after all that has been said about there being no necessity to employ a pilot either in ascending or descending the Mutlah.—Bengal Hurkaru, Oct. 5.

DECISIONS OF COURTS-MARTIAL.—Schoolboys will be delighted to learn that they need no longer employ the dreadfully trite anecdote of Bruce and the spider to illustrate the equally thread-bare thesis that perseverance overcometh all difficulties. Major Mansergh, formerly of H.M.'s 6th Regiment, who was dismissed her Majesty's service in 1858 for writing a letter, described as insubordinate, to Colonel Barnes, has at last been restored to his former rank, and placed on half-pay, with a view to receiving the full price of his commission. Some of our readers may still remember how unjustly Major Mansergh was treated by Lord Clyde. The offence imputed to him was that of writing an unbecoming letter to his commanding officer, Colonel Barnes, whereas the Major at that time had already been posted to the 15th Foot, then stationed in England, and was consequently no longer under Colonel Barnes' command. The court-martial was nevertheless convened and held, and Major Mansergh sentenced to be cashiered. It was an unfortunate proceeding, so far as the repose of H.R.H. the General Commanding-in-Chief was concerned. What with pamphlets, remonstrances, petitions, and cases in point, H.R.H. has had but a sorry time of it during the last five years. It was in vain that letter after letter, signed W. F. Forster, was sent to the Major expressing H.R.H.'s determination not to reopen the matter, and declining any further correspondence on the subject. A man with a grievance is the most pertinacious of all living animals. Major Mansergh had read somewhere that by dint of much knocking you will get the door opened at last. So he went on hammering at the portals of the Horse Guards, until at last the Duke was compelled to succumb, and all obstructions were removed from between the injured soldier and his sovereign. Major Mansergh's character as an officer and a gentleman is thus cleared from all taint, and a grievous wrong has been tardily expiated. But what are we to think of the court-martial that condemned him, or of the knowledge of military law and sense of justice exhibited by the military authorities then in India? Trial by Court Martial is doomed. It cannot possibly be much longer endured. Day by day we read of fresh instances of abject servility to the ruling powers, of crass stupidity, and utter recklessness of right or wrong, and therefore we again say that the days of such an unjust and ludicrous tribunal are numbered, and that it will ere long be classed with trial by fire, the pene forte et aure, and other such barbarous institutions.—Bengal Hurkaru, Oct. 7.

STAR OF INDIA.—We learn from a private source that the vacant Star of India is to be conferred on the Maharajah of Jeypore.

THE SONTHALS.—If there be any mischief brewing or apprehended in the Sonthal Pergunnahs, it must have been collecting very quietly and imperceptibly indeed, as the first that the public have heard of any military changes in those districts being requisite, is the announcement of the Bengal Government having applied to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief for the services of a Native infantry regiment, to be quartered in that part of the country, and his Excellency's compliance with the request. The 17th N. I., now at Bareilly, and destined in the relief for Dorundah, has had its movements altered, and is now ordered to march on the 15th of October for the Sonthal country, there to be stationed at a place called Soory, about a hundred and twenty miles from Calcutta, near the East Indian Railway line, and a few miles from the Synthia station. We can hardly believe that this arrangement could be made by the Bengal Government without some good political or military reasons, as the change of station and the position assigned to the 17th N.I. cannot but be most disadvantageous and unwelcome to the officers and men. The officers will be on half-batta, and as there are no houses or military buildings of any kind at Soory, the officers and men will be obliged to hut and shelter themselves as best they can in the midst of the jungle, which will be anything but agreeable. When it is considered that Soory is but five hours' railway distance from the station of Barrackpore, where there are always native infantry regiments available at an hour's notice, the reason for permanently cantoning a corps at the former station is still more unintelligible; but we suppose that the utility of railways as regards military movements, and their power of multiplying our resources, of which we used to hear so much before any railways were constructed in India, must no longer be taken into consideration. Officers, men of business, travellers for pleasure or amusement, even ladies, and children, can travel direct, and without halting between Calcutta and Benares, at all seasons of the year; but the Government has discovered that the British soldier cannot perform the same journey in the midst of the cold weather, without sleeping three or four nights on the road. It is also considered better to bring a Native Infantry regiment into the Soory jungles than to place it in some civilised and comfortable cantonment, within five hours run of the part of the country in which it may be required to act. We shall soon come to the days of eau-de-Cologne and pate-de-foie gras for the British soldier; just as we have now arrived at the time when Native regiments are not to be warned to remain in permanent readiness to move by rail at a moment's notice. With reference to the military occupation of the Sonthal Pergunnahs, on which we made some remarks yesterday, we now learn that the first request of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief was, for the services of a Sikh corps, to be stationed at Soory; but that Sir Hugh Rose politely declined to comply with his Honour's wishes, and gave him a Poorneah regiment instead. This was, in our opinion, a wise move in the matter, as the Sikhs are fitted for something better than rotting in the jungle; whereas a regiment which is a kind of hotch-potch of the remnant 'pandies' of different mutinied and disbanded regiments, will do quite well enough for the delights of Soory, and the occupation of keeping the Sonthals in order; if indeed these people have any intention of breaking the peace.—Englishman, Oct. 2.

DIVORCE COURT FOR INDIA.—The Blind contains the following on dit:—"A Divorce Court.—Dame Rumour has it that a Court of Divorce is immediately to be established here. The Jade addeth that the first judge of the new court is to be the worshipful magistrate who lately delivered judgment in an affiliation case."

ADDITIONAL MEMBER OF COUNCIL.—We perceive from the Calcutta Government Gazette, that His Highness, Nuwab Mahomed Yusef Ali Khan, Bahadur, Nuwab of Rampore, Knight of the Most Exalted Star of India has been appointed an additional member of Council.

AN AEROLITE.—An aerolite has fallen lately a few miles north of Dacca. The following is from the Dacca News:—"The statement of Doyal Bungshee, ryot, of Bahoo Kally Narain Roy, of Snythal.—On a day in Srabun (said to be the 11th August), between the hours of eleven and twelve in the afternoon, he heard a noise like thunder; he then saw a round body coming from the east towards the west; it fell at a distance of about half a mile from where he stood. As the body was moving there was a strong smell, like that of burning gunpowder. He went to the spot about an hour afterwards. There was a hole in the ground no more than nine inches in diameter. He was curious to know what it was that had fallen; on digging down to a depth of about seven inches he found a stone—the one now sent. It was not warmer than the ordinary soil of the place. The earth in which it was imbedded was sandy and moist. The stone when dug up had no smell of sulphur or gunpowder. As directed by his zemindar, Baboo Kally Narain Roy, he searched the place for other fragments of the stone, but could find none. There was no report of any other fragment having fallen in the neighbourhood. Its colour when in motion was red, something of the appearance of the sun at rising. It was not accompanied by sparks. The people of the place were very much frightened. He was not himself frightened. When the stone was dug up, the villagers supposed it to be a supernatural being; they bathed it, and anointed it with oil; they did not, however, make poojah to it. Baboo Kally Narain Roy, the zemindar of the place, sent the stone to Dacca to Dr. Simpson, accompanied by a letter, in which he says that on the 11th of August, about noon, the people of the place heard, three or four times, a sound in the sky like the report of a cannon. The sound proceeded from the north. A few days after he was informed by the people of Snythal that similar sounds had been heard there, and that something like fire fell near the house of one of his ryots. The place was examined, and the aerolite was found embedded in the soil, three-fourths of a cubit below the surface. Mr. Brennand, of the Dacca College, undertook to analyse the stone, and his report, courteously placed at our disposal by Dr. Simpson, is as follows:—"I have examined the stone which you sent to me yesterday, and believe it to be a real aerolite. It possesses all the characteristics of one. I subjected a portion of it to a rough analysis. A quantity was pulverised and digested in nitric acid. The filtrate contained iron, manganese, and cobalt; the insoluble part was then boiled in hydrochloric acid, and in the filtrate I found nickel. There may be other metals in small quantities, but the bulk of the residue I suspect to be silica. Another portion of the stone was pulverised, and on applying the magnet I separated the magnetic from the non-magnetic particles. In the non-magnetic I found the iron; this makes me think that the iron is in the form of a sulphide, and a protosulphide, for, on the first application of the nitric acid to the powder large quantities of hydrosulphuric acid were given off. The magnetic part of the powder contained nickel, but not much iron. I suspect this to be merely in a state of aggregation with the magnetic nickel. The stone does not contain silver, lead, or mercury; at least, I can find none. Numerous questions were put to the native who witnessed the phenomenon, and all that he can tell has been elicited, and is embodied in the statement we have given above. This statement and Mr. Brennand's analysis at once fix the character of the stone. It is large, and weighs a little more than five pounds. The stone is to be forwarded to the Government by Dr. Simpson. The Government has, we believe, been recently asking for information regarding meteoric stones."

INDIAN ROYALTY.—The youngest son of the late ex-King of Delhi has been married to the daughter of a respectable Mussulman merchant. The ceremony took place at Rangoon, and a few days before the mail left the lady had had her nose bored—a necessary preliminary, we suppose. So the dynasty propagates itself within a few hundred miles of Moslem intrigue, and we do—nothing. Is the Vellore mutiny forgotten?

ATHEISM IN INDIA.—There is an editorial article in the Bengalee of the 30th Sept., headed "Faith and Ironsides," which we recommend to the notice of the newly-appointed censor of the native press. If not quite blasphemous, it is inaugurating such a system of utter atheism, that we are surprised it has not been nipped ere it had time to appear. We would not have been surprised to have seen such an article in any of the native dialects, but when such "leaders" as this are promulgated in what is meant to be the English language, it is full time to put a stop to it by some means, and counteract the atheistical tendencies which the universities have inaugurated. These university bare-legged "Bachelors of Arts" are neither Hindoo, Christian, nor Mahomedan. Better to have been left as they were.—Delhi Gazette.—[The secular education of Hindoos often aids in deism but not in atheism. Does the writer confound the two?—Ed.]

INDIAN CARRYING COMPANY.—We (Delhi Gazette) are given to understand that the Indian Carrying Company, which was alluded to by a recent correspondent, is working slowly but surely along the line of the Grand Trunk-road, and will soon reach Lahore. It was hinted in the letter we published that the company was the only one likely to succeed the Government as general carriers. We have reason to believe the surmise correct, and that the bullock train established by Dr. Hutton, Post-master General, some thirty-five years ago, will pass about the 1st January from the hands of Government to those of a private company. We trust that these arrangements will be such as to afford satisfaction to the public.

CORONER'S INQUEST IN CALCUTTA.—The coroner's inquest on the body of the unfortunate dealer in poultry who was beaten to death by an East Indian named Lewis Jonathan Newbond, has returned a verdict which, if read literally, charges the deceased with having committed culpable homicide. Here are the very words of the verdict:—"That Shaikh Punnoollah came to his death from the effects of injuries caused by Lewis Jonathan Newbond, which injuries were likely to cause death from the nature of the violence which caused the injuries, and has committed the offence of homicide, not amounting to murder." It is so far fortunate for Newbond that he was not examined before a coroner's inquest in England, for a much more serious offence would have been charged against him. As it is, it is not at all impossible that the grand jury may bring in a true bill, which may place him on his trial for murder.—Hurkaru.

REDUCTION OF PASSAGE RATES OVERLAND.—It has been generally decided by the home authorities that all reliefs of the Indian army shall be sent to India and back again by the overland route, but that invalids shall, as hitherto, be sent home by the Cape. This is a great step in advance, but we believe it will not be carried out till next year. The Peninsular and Oriental Company are in communication with the home authorities on the subject, and it is doubtful whether their steamers will be employed, or Admiralty transports be sent round to the Red Sea. In any case the sending of troops overland must reduce the rates at which officers and their families will be conveyed, for one large Steam Company is willing to undertake the overland transit at £25 per man and £50 per officer.

COLOMBO AND KANDY RAILWAY.—The Colombo Observer says the first section of twenty miles of the Colombo and Kandy Railway will be open in six months. The earthwork for that distance is nearly ready.

BENGAL TEA COMPANY (LIMITED).—At a meeting of the above company, held on the 30th Sept., a dividend for the past half-year of 6 per cent. was declared.

AGRICULTURAL EXHIBITION PRIZES.—Dr. J. B. Barry has offered extra prizes to the amount of upwards of Rs. 1,500, to be competed for at the forthcoming Agricultural Exhibition. Considerably more than a third of this sum is to be appropriated to rewarding improvements in the machinery connected with tea-planting and manufacture, in which Dr. Barry has taken much interest.

THE LIEUT.-GOVERNOR OF BENGAL returned to Calcutta on Saturday forenoon, Oct. 3, when a salute of seventeen guns greeted his Honour's return to the bosom of his loving subjects.

HIMALAYAN PRODUCE FOR THE LAHORE EXHIBITION.—At Simla an interesting collection of Himalayan produce is displayed in the Cutcherry, consisting of about 400 articles contributed to the approaching Exhibition at Lahore by sixteen Hill Chiefs, including the Rajas of Sirmoor and Bilaspur. The specimens of mineral ores and various fibres are an important series, which must attract attention and lead to useful results.

OPENING OF THE ALEXANDRA HOTEL AT PENANG.—Sir Benson Maxwell, the Recorder of Penang, lately presided at the opening in the island of the Alexandra Hotel, the chief feature of which is a suite of baths. They consist of three lady's baths; one family bath, measuring 15 feet in length, 10 feet in breadth and 4½ in depth; one swimming bath, measuring 60 feet by 30 feet and 7 feet deep, and two baths for natives; all built of solid granite. The establishment contains a library, dressing and refreshment rooms. Sir B. Maxwell expressed cordial wishes for its success, because he looked upon it as supplying a great want in Penang, and as partaking of the character of a public institution.

THE FRENCH STEAMERS.—Great inconvenience has been experienced in Colombo on the two last occasions of the departure of the mails, by the Messageries Imperiales steamers, in consequence of their being closed in Colombo a day earlier than advertised. In the present instance the Calcutta and China steamers arrived at Galle on the forenoon of Friday, the 9th, and between 4 and 5 P.M. on the same day a postal notice was issued in Colombo announcing that the Alphee would leave for Suez at 5 P.M. on the 10th, the very time at which the mail for Europe was advertised to close here. A number who had prepared letters to forward by this opportunity were disappointed; and certainly it would be more advisable that a day earlier, instead of one later, than the probable mail day for the French steamers should be stated to our postal authorities here.—Colombo Observer, Oct. 12.

THE JYNTIA REBELS.—Dacca, Oct. 3.—The only news from Cherra is that the patient waiting of the Cossya police has been rewarded by the capture of eight or ten of the few Jyntia rebels who steadfastly refuse to surrender under the conviction that it is better to die than to live. There cannot be more than fifteen or twenty of them altogether, starved and suffering every conceivable privation, yet still desperate. They are not likely to form the nucleus of any new revolt, inasmuch as the Jyntias, that is, those of them who took up arms against us but were afterwards glad to avail themselves of the amnesty, relish the restored quiet all the more for their recent fears and sufferings. The forlorn hope that still holds out in the jungles may, accordingly, be regarded as nothing more than a dacoit band, mischievously disposed, but not near so dangerous as are many of the larger bands of robbers that populate the Sunderbuns or do business among the swamps of Sylhet. This rebellious remnant, however, have it in their power to trouble their own local and peaceable brethren; they are a public nuisance, and must be suppressed.

A JOB.—Another Horse Guards job has just been perpetrated. In the General Orders of the Commander-in-Chief of the 23rd ult. we observe the appointment of the Hon. J. D. Drummond, of the 11th Hussars, as aide-de camp to the Major-general commanding the Oudh Division, subject to examination hereafter in native languages. The appointment is stated to be made "under instructions" from the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief.

THE SIKHS.—According to the Colombo Observer, the letter which appeared in the Mefussilite, purporting to be from a gentleman in Ceylon to a friend in India, describing the treatment of the Sikhs, is likely to get Major O'Brien, son of the Major-General commanding there,—who has avowed himself to be the author—into trouble. The Government have taken up the matter.

MADRAS.

MADRAS REVENUE.

A correspondent, dating from the Madras Club, successfully defends the Southern Presidency from the charge brought against it by the Times, of yielding a surplus of only £19,000 to the imperial revenue, while Bengal gives £9,000,000, and even the Punjab £1,400,000. The Times is misled by the accounts annually presented to Parliament, which do not charge Northern India with the cost of its army, while Madras is burdened with the military expenditure in Burmah and the Straits Settlement. But our correspondent is equally wrong in denying Northern India and Bombay all credit for a crop like the poppy, which occupies so much of the land and labour of the former, and so jumping to the conclusion that Madras yields proportionally as large a surplus as any other province. If it does, then the ryotwari settlement must squeeze every drop of blood out of the people, for only one thirty-third of the province is cultivated, and by peasants without capital. But that it does not, Sir Bartle Frere clearly showed in the financial resolution, published in the Calcutta Gazette, on 13th November, 1861. Each province, after paying all local charges, military and civil, should contribute 30½ per cent. to meet the purely imperial expenditure of £12,700,700. On this principle, and it is as perfect as is practicable, Madras yields a surplus of £224,355, while Bombay gives £732,402, and Bengal, £1,409,200. All other provinces show a deficit. This we believe to be very near the truth. Of course, now that the apathy of the Government with which Madras is so unfortunate as to be saddled has lost North Canara, the surplus will be still less proportionally. In all these comparisons, which are valuable as incentives to economy and improved administration, two errors should be avoided. Provinces like the Punjab, and, in a much lower degree, Madras, suffer by the representation that they are extravagant, when they are really doing the important duty of guarding the frontier, and garrisoning outlying districts. And it is justly the boast of a province like Bengal proper that while, with a fixed land assessment, it yields a proportionally larger surplus of taxation than any other, the actual wealth of its people is greater than even the increased taxation can gauge.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CARWAR NOT SHEDASHEGHUR.—Sir Charles Wood has done a service by causing it to be notified that the new capital of North Canara is in future to be known by the name of "Carwar." He appointed Mr. C. R. Markham to "consider the question of changing the name of the new port on the west coast of India from Sedashighur to a more convenient and pronounceable one," and hence the new name Carwar, which was for many years one of the principal factories of the East India Company on the west coast. Beitelul (composed of two Arabic words, meaning "A home for all") is the name of an insignificant little village in the bay. The East India Company had a large stone-built factory at Carwar (or Cadovaud) as long ago as 1663. The factory was on the south side of the Kalanudee river, and about three miles from its mouth, where its ruins may still be seen. The modern name of Seda-Sheva ghur comes from the fact of a rajah of Soonda, named Seda-Shiva-Rao, having built a fort (ghur) on the north side of the Kalanudee river, opposite the Carwar factory. Some of the names of our railway stations, such as Ghazeeood-deen-Nuggur, might now be taken in hand. The last is sometimes abbreviated into Ghazeeabad, but even that is objectionable. Rhythimical oriental names might be found for many places whose titles are now unpronounceable, as easily as Carwar for Sedashighur.

THE MINT MASTER.—The vexed question of "who is to be next Mint Master," has at length, we learn, been definitively solved; it being determined that Colonel Carpendale, as was all along expected, should succeed to the post; but he will continue to act in his present appointment of chief engineer of Mysore, until the return, from sick leave, of Colonel E. Lawford. In the meantime Lieutenant-colonel C. V. Wilkieson will be nominated to act at the mint; Captain Tulloch doing duty for the latter as controller of public works accounts. This last-mentioned appointment will, we doubt not, take many by surprise.

H.M.'s 69TH FOOT have received the necessary instructions, to the effect that their services will be required at the Presidency for one year longer.

MR. HARDINGE, an engineer, arrived from England by the last steamer, with instructions to examine and select a line from the railway station at Arconum to Conjeeveram, with the view of immediately commencing the construction of a tramway between the two stations. A meeting was held at Messrs. Arbuthnot and Co.'s last Monday, for the purpose of determining upon the necessary arrangements.

THE CHURCH AT CUDDAPAH.—The Madras Government are to contribute Rs. 3,034 towards re-building the church at Cuddapah.

FROM VIZAGAPATAM we learn that the fall of rain in that quarter between the 8th and 10th Oct. has been so severe and unusual that considerable damage is said to have been done in consequence to the Government Irrigation Works. Within the short space of three days the rain-fall in the Nursapatam district is reported to have exceeded no less than fourteen inches.

STOCK AND SHARE MARKET.—Our Money Market remains in an easy condition, but the animated demand for money in Bombay on account of cotton advances, and employment in the new joint-stock companies, resulting in the advance of 2 per cent. in the Bank rate of discount, justifies the anticipation that an improved demand for money will soon be manifested here. Government Securities have been neglected in favour of other investments, and may now be quoted at a decline all round. Five and a-half per Cents. stand at $16\frac{1}{2}$ to $17\frac{1}{2}$ premium; Five per Cents. at $7\frac{1}{2}$ to $7\frac{3}{4}$ premium; and Four per Cents. at $1\frac{1}{2}$ to $2\frac{1}{2}$ discount. The Madras Bank's rate of discount is unchanged. Its shares have not fluctuated in value during the fortnight and may be still quoted nominally at Rs. 119 to Rs. 122 per cent. premium. Exchange: The commencement of the cotton season in Bombay and other causes resulting in the rise of Exchange in that Presidency have also influenced our rates, and the last sales of First Class Credit Bills six months' sight have been effected at 2s. $\frac{3}{4}$ d. to 15 16ths and Document Bills at 2s. 1d. to 2-1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. THE LAYING OF THE FOUNDATION STONE OF THE DAVID SASSOON HOSPITAL AT POONA.—According to announcement, the foundation stone of the David Sassoon Hospital was laid on the 8th of October, with great pomp and ceremony, by his Excellency Sir Bartle Frere. The arrangements were perfect, and reflected the highest credit upon the gentlemen of the managing committee. The spectacle was a most impressive one; and the venerable appearance of the exiled patriarch of the House of Israel, as he read the touching address, which he had prepared for the occasion, must have carried the minds of all present away, down the stream of time, to that grand historical period when Abraham, the loftiest of all the Patriarchs, stood in plain and unpretending simplicity amongst the princes of Palestine. All the orators spoke well, and there was not a superfluous word uttered. Punctual to time, his Excellency, the Governor, arrived on the ground, and was shortly afterwards joined by Mr. Sassoon. He was received with the usual honours which are accorded on such occasions. The salute was fired, the band struck up, and the hum of eager expectation announced that the great business of the day would soon be performed. All the mechanical arrangements were perfect, and at the conclusion of a very effective address, Mr. David Sassoon, in the language of the Hebrews, requested the Governor to confer upon him the honour of placing the stone in the position which it would ever afterwards occupy, at the basis of the building. Sir Bartle Frere's speech was, as is usual with his addresses, earnest and eloquent. He seemed fully sensible of the position which his name would afterwards occupy in the pages of Indian history—in connection with the noble, monumental, and useful, structure which he had been called upon to inaugurate, in his official capacity. True, however, to his genius and antecedents, he readily accepted the position; and with his usual serene aspect permitted no symptom of that which was passing in his own mind at the moment to disturb a feature of his face. Probably, he thought of many high hearts, who were laid low, who would have rejoiced to have seen him justifying the high anticipations which they had formed respecting him, in another land. But before we reach the zenith of our fame it too often happens that those in whose eyes we would have loved best to compete and to excel are no longer with us.

GOOZERAT STEAM COMPANY.—Another new company, the Goozerat Steam Company (Limited), has issued its prospectus. It proposes to purchase or build steamers of a class suitable for working the coast trade between Bombay, Surat, and Gogo, and also to provide suitable steamers for the navigation of the Indian rivers. To enable the company to commence operations at once, arrangements have been made for the purchase of the Johnstone Castle, Telegraph and Maharaj, and a fourth steamer of about the same character and class as the Johnstone Castle now being built in England. The whole four are to be handed over to the company in Bombay for four lacs and 30,000 rupees.

THE COTTON CROP.—The produce of the cotton crop in the central provinces in 1862 was estimated at forty-seven millions of lbs. The area under cultivation, measured field by field, was 628,021 acres, or 41,371 more than in the previous year, and at the rate of 328 lbs. of cotton, or 82 lbs. when cleaned, to the acre, the produce ought to have been fifty one and a half millions of lbs. Yet the actual return was only thirty-seven millions, owing to the superabundance of rain, and fourteen and a-half millions of lbs. at the rate of eighteen pence each in Lancashire, represents the serious loss caused by inclement weather. This season, it is gratifying to be informed by the authorities, the prospects are most encouraging. A larger area than ever has been sown, the weather has been most favourable, and cotton is selling in Nagpore at sixteen pence a pound retail. On the whole crop of 1862, it is said that thirty and a half millions of lbs., or 13,616 tons, have been exported, valued at £1,164,120. The export took the railway route from Mulkapore in Berar, and that by Mirzapore to Calcutta may be considered as for ever abandoned. In 1862 the experiments with American seed from Dharwar failed entirely, owing to a mistake in the time of sowing. This year the seed was not put in the ground till August, and the best results are expected. Even last year experiments on a small scale succeeded so well, that the plants which survived the heavy rain far exceeded the indigenous crop in height and produce.

THE CIRCULAR OF THE PUNJAB DIRECTOR OF EDUCATION.—The Bombay Guardian, holding up for imitation this document, mentions an instance in Bombay in which a long-established Mission School, supported by the residents of the station, had to be shut up in consequence of the planting of a Government School by its side. Some of the pupils were native Christians. They presented themselves at the Government School, and were refused admission, not because they were of low-caste origin, but because they associated with some that were! The statement may seem incredible, but it rests upon the clearest evidence. Sir Bartle Frere will surely investigate the truth of this.

BOMBAY LIBRARIES.—Bombay is fortunate, if not in granite fortifications and the shoe question, in its libraries at least. The papers of that ilk say, that according to the Reader of the 22nd August, the University of Bombay is about to receive by way of addition, the entire valuable and extensive library of Hailebury College.

PUBLICATION OF OFFICIAL PAPERS.

The Gov. in Council resolves to draw the attention of public officers to the subjoined notification:—

Fort St. George, Feb. 1, 1859.—The following letter from the Secy. to the Govt. of India, dated Jan. 11, 1859, is published for the information of all public officers, and they are required strictly to conform to the orders conveyed in it:—

Home Dept.—No. 74.—From C. Beadon, Esq., Secy. to the Govt. of India, to the Secy. to the Govt. of Fort St. George.

Dated Jan. 11, 1859.

SIR,—It has become the practice in many of the public offices in the several presidencies and at the seat of the Supreme Govt. to print official letters and papers instead of copying them in manuscript.

Persons seeing an official document in print are apt to suppose that it has been published, and that they are at liberty to use it accordingly; or at any rate to be careless whether its contents become generally known or not. This is a mistake.

Official papers, whether printed or copied by hand, are of a confidential character, and are not to be published except by order of competent authority and under the prescribed rules. The same precautions are to be taken in either case against their publication; and in either case the infraction of the existing prohibition is equally culpable.

I am directed by the Hon. the President in Council to request that instructions to this effect may be generally circulated.

I have, &c.,

Mungul dass Nathobhoy, who set the example of endowing the University by founding a travelling scholarship last year, has also intimated his intention of presenting the University with a pair of silver maces.

THE SOLANO OUTRAGE CASE.

MR. SOLANO is a European indigo planter, who has made a very large fortune, and who had magnificent houses, plantations, and gardens in Tirhoot, which were all greatly injured or totally destroyed by the mutineers in 1857. The Government of India most munificently repaired his loss, and, perhaps, put him in a better position than he held before. We had heard two or three years ago that he had gone down to Calcutta with the full intention of leaving his property in the hands of trustworthy agents, and quitting India for ever. But he seems to have altered his mind. He is still at the village of Beyruth, where, by rather harsh treatment of his ryots, "who to a man are in open hostility with him," he has, perhaps, run the risk of a repetition of that frightful treatment of himself which he experienced in the famous mutiny, when he was left for dead by the rebels, with unnumbered spear wounds in his body, and did not recover his physical health and strength, or even his sanity of mind for more than half a year. At the commencement of the present year the greater part of the crops of the ryots at Beyruth had been distrained, and collectorate piadahs were given to assist the distraint. The ryots had all come to a resolution to withhold their rent. At last one man, Beechun Roy, gave in, and was going to Mr. Solano's Amlah, at the Beyruth cutcherry, to pay his rent, when the villagers assembled tumultuously and rushed to the cutcherry to prevent him. But the man was before them, and had paid in his money. Two bags of rupees had just been emptied on the floor to be weighed or counted. The heap amounted to about 1,350 rupees. The rioters, catching sight of these, in the excitement of the moment, took violent possession of them in open day, in spite of the cowardly police and the servants of the establishment, and made off with the money. They then burnt down the house or hut of Beechun Roy. It was fortunate, perhaps, for Mr. Solano that he was absent, or he might have lost his life as well as his money. Some of the ringleaders of the riot and dacoity have been sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment. This affair took place on the 28th of February last. The final decision of the Courts, for it was carried by appeal from one court to another, was only settled by the High Court of Calcutta on the 23rd of September.

DR. DUFF AND LA MAISON CARRÉE.

SIR CHARLES TREVELYAN and the catholic-minded Bishop of Calcutta, with a generous zeal, are heading a movement for raising subscriptions, not from all parts of India only, but from all parts of the world, for the erection of a grand building in Calcutta in honour of the most eminent of our Eastern missionaries, who is now leaving for ever the scene of his useful labours, being compelled by an illness so severe as to threaten a fatal termination in a tropical climate, to relinquish his favourite idea of making India—so long his adopted country—his last earthly habitat. Dr. Duff, who is hardly yet an old man, though he has devoted so many years to his sacred task, will in all probability quite recover his health and strength in the bracing air of his native land, and take a new lease of life, with a new sphere of action. We heartily hope it may prove to be so, and that he will be able to do as much good for his own countrymen as he has done for Hindoos and Mahomedans. He has not to be taught that there are now many more heathens in Christendom than Christians in Heathendom, and his long habit of preparing himself to meet all objections, however plausible and strongly urged, and to explain difficulties, apparently insuperable, in mixed assemblies of subtle and courteous Hindoos and shrewd and arrogant Mahomedans—who never for a moment, by the way, shook his own faith as the Zulu did Colenso's—will peculiarly fit him to contend against that rapidly-advancing spirit of scepticism in Europe which has even entered within the sacred precincts of the Christian Church itself, and been openly countenanced and supported by such men as the authors of the famous "Essays and Reviews." Dr. Duff, with a well-warranted self-reliance—conscious of his own powers as a reasoner and of the innate strength of his holy cause—has never hesitated to meet the infidel on his own ground or with his own weapons, and has even permitted such productions as Hume's "Essay on Miracles" to be carefully studied and freely discussed in his own admirable school in Calcutta. It is this skill and courage as a polemic, combined with an extraordinary command of language and indefatigable industry and earnest zeal, which has given him so much influence amongst the educated classes of the people of India, especially the Hindoos, who, with great logical acuteness, are intensely fond of metaphysical speculations, and always respect an ingenious and vigorous opponent, who dares to meet them, not with texts of scripture only, but with arguments founded on those universal principles which are recognised by all true reasoners of all religions. The Christian missionary who has to grapple with the Hindu logician should have something more than purity of heart, and strong faith, and earnest zeal. He ought in addition to these good qualities, to possess great force and readiness of mind, and be well accustomed to the handling of the intellectual foils. Every triumph of an acute Hindu reasoner over a pious but slow-minded missionary priest must necessarily have a most injurious effect upon the cause of Christianity in the East. The Christian who fails to give a satisfactory reason for the faith that is in him, and is found tripping in his logic, is regarded by his Hindu antagonist as a weak enthusiast, whose opinions and convictions are not worth a straw. The value, therefore, of so bold and ready a reasoner as Dr. Duff to our missionary interests in India can hardly be overrated; and his brother labourers in the field of Indian conversion will feel most bitterly his irreparable loss. He was unquestionably the ablest man amongst them, and his name all over Europe is identified with the cause of Christianity in India. In the earlier part of his career he was strongly prejudiced against the Government system of Education in India, and joined in the general condemnation of it as "a Godless system;" but his views gradually widened, and he at last openly recognised the advantage, even in a religious point of view, of preparing the Hindu mind for all kinds of truth by enlarging and enriching it with secular knowledge. He gave his ready support to the noble Educational Despatch from the Court of Directors in 1854, and connected himself officially with the Calcutta University. He, too, who once pressed so indiscreetly on the notice of the Hindoos the saying of Jesus Christ, that He came not to send peace on earth but a sword, and to set parents and children at variance with each other, and that a man's foes shall be they of his own household; and entered upon a somewhat ferocious and unseemly battle of pamphlets with the late Longueville Clarke upon the policy or impolicy of the selection of such texts for the benefit of the heathen, in his later years was contented to represent the Christian religion in its more attractive light as a religion of peace and charity and love. He was latterly by no means less zealous nor less courageous, but infinitely more judicious and discreet. It is a sad thing that such a man should be forced to leave so vast and interesting a field of missionary exertion as that of India, just as all his faculties had acquired all the necessary experience and culminated to their fullest development, and he had learnt the best means of turning them to a profitable account in his Master's service. He lived long enough, however, in India to do more good to the people than any other individual missionary amongst his predecessors or companions, and he will leave it with greater public testimonies to his worth than have ever been accorded in the same land to a preacher of the Christian creed.

The proposed Duff Memorial is to be at once useful, substantial, and ornamental. It is to be in the form of an elegant edifice, containing a large hall, in which lectures may be delivered, and it is to be in some way connected, by its locality at least, with the new buildings for the Calcutta University. Sir Charles Trevelyan, who has a taste for classical architecture, has happily suggested that it should be an exact copy of the famous Maison Carrée of Nismes. The idea has been adopted with enthusiasm, and it is proposed to raise about £15,000 for the purpose. It is to be constructed wholly of Carrara marble. La Maison Carrée (or square house) is a misnomer, for the temple is not square but a parallelogram. It would, perhaps, have had a nobler aspect if it had been more in keeping with its name, for the front is hardly broad enough for its depth, and it looks like what perhaps it really was—only the centre of a pile of buildings which have fallen away on either side. In spite of this slight objection, however, it is the richest ornament of a city which has been called "a second Rome." Such a gem of architectural beauty in the heart of the City of Palaces would be an object of just pride to the European inhabitants, and would assuredly "astonish the natives." The latter, indeed, could hardly fail to be delighted with its thirty fluted Corinthian columns, thirty feet in height and three feet in diameter, the lofty flight of steps in front, and the elaborate and exquisitely-worked cornice and frieze which run all round the building. The beautiful Corinthian temple at Nîmes has had very various fortunes—has seen strange changes in its time. Some say that it was erected in honour of Caius and Lucius Cæsar, grandsons of Augustus; but the latest opinions are in favour of its having been dedicated to the adopted sons of Antoninus Pius. It was afterwards used as a Christian Church, then as the Hotel de Ville, and then converted into a stable. In the time of the first Napoleon it was left full of accumulated filth and rubbish as a sort of play-place for ragged and dirty children, and now this most classical and profusely-ornamented structure is at last rescued from neglect and mutilation, and used as a museum for objects of antiquity and virtu. The Americans have anticipated the Anglo-Indians of Bengal in their imitation of this noble specimen of ancient art, for the State House at Richmond, in Virginia, is a copy of the Maison Carrée. In the American State House is a marble statue of Washington, the work of a French artist. If sufficient funds should be collected for the purpose of the building in Calcutta, we suppose we shall see there a statue of Dr. Duff by some Scottish sculptor.

THE MEMORIAL TO LORD CLYDE.

A public meeting was held on Friday afternoon last, at Willis's Rooms, to take into consideration the propriety of erecting a statue to commemorate the signal services of the late Lord Clyde. His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge took the chair, and was supported by Earl De Grey and Ripon, the Duke of Wellington, the Duke of Argyll, the Earl of Lucan, Sir C. Wood, the Earl of Ellenborough, the Earl of Cardigan, the Earl of Malmesbury, Lord Stanley, General Fyfe, Sir Roderick Murchison, Marquis of Hartington, Duke of Rutland, Earl Donoughmore, Sir William Russell, &c.

The Duke of Cambridge, who was cheered on rising to address the meeting, said: I feel that no apology is due for having assembled you together, because I believe there is no person in this room or in the whole empire who will not agree with me in thinking an occasion such as this ought not to be overlooked, and that the loss which the country has so painfully sustained by the death of Lord Clyde ought to be commemorated in such a manner as to do honour and justice to the services of that great and illustrious soldier who has departed from among us. In doing honour to Lord Clyde, believe me, we do honour to ourselves. I cannot but remember that I have the honour, by the favour of my Sovereign, of being at the head of the noble profession of which my late distinguished friend was so great an ornament. I had also the advantage, the gratification, and the pleasure of being, I may say, the intimate friend and associate of the late lamented field-marshal. In both my public and private character I feel, therefore, that I am justified in appearing before you to ask you to join me and the other gentlemen around me in doing honour to that illustrious soldier—(cheers). The feeling that we should do honour to the memory of the great man is universally entertained from the highest to the lowest classes. I am aware that her Majesty, even in that distress and sorrow which has so long surrounded her, was the first to express a strong desire that every honour should be done to the memory of Lord Clyde—(cheers)—the man of all others who had shown such devotion to the service, and who in devoting himself to the service of the Crown has performed such signal duties to the country in general. I believe the feeling which has emanated from the Sovereign is participated in and felt by every one in the country, alike by those who knew him intimately as by those who knew him by reputation as a public officer—(cheers). Lord Clyde was trained as a soldier from his earliest career. He entered the service without any friends or supporters, except his own good right arm, his honest heart, and his noble bearing—(cheers). He had the advantage of joining the army when great Continental wars were being conducted, and at a time when England first entered into that Peninsular contest which terminated so gloriously for this nation. In the first landing of Wellington's army in the Peninsula, my noble friend took an active part, and, following his career, it will be found that he was in the subsequent actions at Vamiera, Corunna, Vittoria, Barossa, and St. Sebastian. Upon the last occasion he received two wounds, and he was again at Bidassoa, where he was also severely wounded. His early career was, therefore, one of war, and he learned that portion of the great art of our profession which can only be learnt in active service, in the great contest to which I have referred, and which tended so much to advance the prosperity and the greatness of this country. With the termination of that contest the military career of my noble friend ceased for awhile, not because there was any desire to keep back that and other distinguished officers, but because of a long peace, which we cannot deplore, however much we may lament that there was not opportunity given for a man like Lord Clyde to distinguish himself. He was again actively employed in the expedition to China in 1842. The services which he rendered there may not be considered very glorious, but they were of a very arduous character, and such as to bring him prominently under the favourable notice of his superior officers—(cheers). I remember, when in Dublin, seeing the 98th Regiment, of which Lord Clyde was then the colonel, depart for China, and it was pointed out to me, then quite a beginner in the art of soldiering, that the 98th was particularly well adapted for service because of the manner in which it was commanded by its colonel. My gallant friend accompanied that regiment. He went from China to India, and had the good fortune to arrive there when a great contest was going on. Though only colonel commanding a regiment, he was solicited to command a division under General, now Lord Gough, and was present at the battles of Chenab, Ramnuggur, Sobraon, and Chillianwallah. When that contest came to a close, my noble friend was again for a while reduced to a state of inactivity, but was afterwards placed in command of an important post on the north-western frontier. He received the highest commendation for the services which he rendered to the country. This brings me to the time when he returned to England in 1853. Up to that period we were perfect strangers. You will find that in 1854 the war with Russia broke out, and one of the first officers ordered to the command of a brigade was Lord Clyde. It is unnecessary to dwell upon the great talents which he displayed, and the great service which he rendered in that campaign. He showed that he possessed the talents and requirements of a great commander. It was not long before my gallant friend had an opportunity of proving in this respect that he would perform all that was expected of him. After the Crimean war had been brought to a close, our difficulties and troubles broke out in India. The Government was called upon to send out a general officer well qualified to assume the command, and I am happy to think that in the post which I now occupy I had the pleasure of being associated with those acting on the part of the Government who recommended that Lord Clyde should be sent out to take the command of the army in India—(cheers). I never for a moment doubted that Lord Clyde would accept that command; but I hardly expected that he would say he would be prepared to start at twenty-four hours' notice, which was an actual fact. Yes, within twenty-four hours of the time that the command was offered him that gallant and lamented soldier departed for India, and there finished that glorious military career in the manner in which you are well aware he performed his duty—(cheers). I do not think it is too much to say that to the intelligence and determination which he evinced during the whole of that command, and the gallantry he was enabled to inspire in all the troops serving under his orders, our great Indian empire has not only been restored to us in all its security, but, I trust, with a greater degree of firmness and attachment to this country than existed even before the mutiny broke out—(cheers). I should, however, do his memory an injustice, if I did not tell you that he invariably stated that he never could have performed what he did, had it not been for the assistance and support which he received from every person with whom he was connected in India, alike from the civil authority and his military assistants. Lord Clyde was one of those modest men who was always desirous to share the advantages of his success with others. I believe he underrated himself in this respect. But even if the results which he achieved were obtained by those around him, it still shows his great ability in selecting for important duties those who were able to accomplish all that he desired; and in this respect he showed that he had a mind capable of dealing with details, as well as with those larger objects with which in later years he was inseparably connected—(cheers). Real service may be rendered to the State by following the example of strict order and regularity such as that set by the late Lord Clyde, and by it he was enabled throughout the whole of his career to do so much honour to himself and such service to his country. His Royal Highness concluded by impressing on the meeting the obligation imposed upon them of doing honour to the illustrious soldier whose loss they all so deeply and so recently deplored—(cheers).

Earl De Grey and Ripon moved the first resolution, which affirmed that, in order to commemorate the services of Lord Clyde, the meeting was of opinion a statue should be erected. Referring to the fact of Lord Clyde being wounded at St. Sebastian, he said he was lying in the hospital there with an open wound, when, hearing that an engagement was likely to take place, he, with a companion similarly circumstanced, left that hospital, without leave, and entered upon the engagement, where he received another wound. It was one of the secrets of Lord Clyde's success that he had a singular power of attaching to himself the men under his command. He was always careful of the lives of his men, never inducing them to rush on to action in order that he might obtain a lofty name for himself, and thus when he called upon his men for any extraordinary exertion they knew that the occasion imperatively demanded it. He was ever ready to give to others the praise due to himself, and to associate his subordinates with himself in all his brilliant deeds. Of all the great qualities which distinguished him he might say that modesty was the first.

The Duke of Wellington, in seconding the resolution, said he would not weaken the effect of the previous addresses by a recapitulation of the services and character of Lord Clyde. He would merely venture to say that he was proud to do honour to the soldier who, owing to his great reputation, had been selected by the Sovereign, with the approbation of the country, as most worthy of confidence at a moment of pinching need, and he performed his duty in a manner to elicit admiration, affection, and respect. He had subdued that mutiny, not in the style which was in vogue, by the utmost cruelty which could excite terror, but with that merciful might which was characteristic of the great country he served.

The resolution was then put and carried unanimously.

The Duke of Argyll moved the next resolution, and said that he had been asked to submit it to the meeting because he was supposed to represent the clan of the country which had the honour of giving Colin Campbell to the British army—(cheers). The country and the clan were proud of him when alive, and are prouder than ever now of his memory and of his name. An erroneous impression had gone abroad that Lord Clyde was a Highlander only through one of his parents. Colin Campbell, like many other individuals in this country, bore the name, not of his father, but of his mother. It is but a few years since I had the pleasure of calling on the venerable father of Sir Colin Campbell, and I can say with perfect sincerity that a finer or more gentlemanlike old Highlander I never saw in my life—(cheers). The old feelings of claniship and attachment which have been so remarkable in the character of the Scottish Highlanders, and which lay so much at the basis of their great military reputation, have been gradually on the decline. Time and change have been operating upon them, as upon other feelings which date from olden times; but with all sincerity he said that he never saw those feelings so strongly developed as in the late Lord Clyde; and he should always look back with pleasure and pride to the unmistakable gratification which was exhibited by Lord Clyde whenever his services were recognised, as they frequently were, by every one of those who were connected with his country and his race—(cheers). The resolution which he had to propose was:—

"That a public subscription be opened, to which all classes of her Majesty's subjects be invited to contribute; and that a committee of noblemen and gentlemen be formed for the purpose of carrying out the foregoing object."

He wished to throw no blame on any Government or party. With respect to the services of Lord Clyde, that if he had retired from the army, or had died no longer ago than ten years, he would have retired or died a comparatively obscure man. This might perhaps be rather too strong an expression; but he recollected with painful distinctness the discussions which took place when the Russian war broke out. The discussions which took place as to the comparative merits of the different officers for the command of the army showed that Colin Campbell was not then a known or an appreciated man. He was astonished that the merits of the great man were not more generally known. No man who heard Colin Campbell relate his experiences of war could have doubted that he was pre-eminently qualified for the highest office in the British army—(cheers). On the evening previous to his departure for India, Lord Clyde, he said, called on him, and in the course of conversation he said that "the Sepoy regiments now under the command of English officers were no better in action than a flock of sheep, and that they never would understand the charge of the British bayonet in the open field, though they might make a stand for a time behind stone walls." In those operations, which appeared to be slow and even cautious to Indian officers accustomed to sudden marches and dashing attacks, Lord Clyde was actuated by an earnest desire not to expose his men to risks that were uncalled for. He felt confident that in future times it would be said we were right in raising a statue to his memory, that we did right to bury him in Westminster Abbey with the most illustrious dead, and that among those whose remains have mingled with its sacred dust, there was no nobler soldier than Sir Colin Campbell—(cheers).

The Earl of Lucan, in seconding the resolution, said he had had the honour of being associated with Lord Clyde for many months in the Crimean war, and he had the sincerest affection for him, and the greatest admiration of his military talents. He hoped the testimonial would be worthy of so great and good a soldier.

Sir J. Maxwell, as a member of the sister profession, and a fellow-countryman of the late Lord Clyde, felt much disappointment at the terms of the resolution. He thought a public subscription was not the best way of doing honour to his memory, but that the memorial ought to be erected by public grant.

The Duke of Cambridge thought it was not competent for the meeting to enter upon the subject of a Parliamentary grant.

The resolution was then adopted.

Sir Charles Wood proposed the next resolution, which was as follows:—

"That, with reference to the more recent services of Lord Clyde in India, the communities of the three Presidencies be invited to co-operate."

I cannot but feel, when so large a portion of the career of Lord Clyde was passed in India—when the last crowning services of his valuable life were rendered in that country—it is becoming that India should take a more prominent part in the record which we are about to raise to his memory than she would if merely included in a general resolution embracing the British Empire—(cheers). The position I have the honour to hold, connecting me with that country, must plead my excuse for venturing to trespass on your attention now. I should be doing injustice to the feelings of all connected with India, and wanting in expression of my own, if I did not rejoice at being invited to take part in the proceedings of this day. The early services of Lord Clyde in the Sikh campaign, and when he was still more prominently brought forward in the command of the North-Western military division of India, pointed him out, at the time of our great need, as the one officer in her Majesty's service who was best qualified to take command of the British and Indian armies. When the mutiny had broke out, the whole of the northern parts of India were in the possession of the mutineers. A more brilliant service than that performed by Lord Clyde, in relieving the beleaguered garrison of Lucknow, in defeating all that came before him, and the general dispersion of the mutineers, I believe never was performed in India. It is not necessary for me to say more on the military achievements of Lord Clyde, which have been so well described; but I may bear testimony to the part he played in support of Lord Canning's conciliatory policy at the conclusion of the mutiny. I know from Lord Canning himself, that from no one did he receive more efficient and able assistance than from Lord Clyde.

The Earl of Ellenborough said: I feel that it would be injurious to the British residents in India if I were to express the slightest doubt that the appeal which it is proposed to make to them would be received other than with the utmost sympathy. They have come forward upon all occasions with the most liberal subscriptions, even when the interest inspired was rather of a domestic than of an imperial character. It is to Lord Clyde, under Providence, that they owe the position which they now hold in India—(cheers). It was to the fortunate usage by Lord Clyde of the most extreme prudence with the most extreme daring in his profession that the war there was carried on with success. I honour his prudence even more than his daring—(cheers). It is a less popular quality; but in a war in which a false step would have lost an army, and with it an empire, it would have been a crime not to take from the domain of fortune everything that could be secured by foresight and preparation—(cheers). By that fortunate union of virtues, Lord Clyde nobly succeeded—(cheers). Let us not, when we look at the great successes which he achieved, do what is but too common, viz., forget the great dangers and the extreme difficulty which he had to overcome. What Lord Clyde was at Plassy, Lord Clyde was at Lucknow. I have always thought, and have more than once said, that, in my opinion, the first of all professions is that of the soldier, and the first of all rewards is military honour. I think so because, unlike the honours which may be achieved by persons who serve in other professions, the honour attained by the soldier is from the first an undisputed reality—(cheers). No matter how lauded may be the services of the statesman by those who agree with him in opinion, they must live far beyond the ordinary life of man before it is in the least degree probable that he will observe anything approaching to general acquiescence in the propriety of the measures upon which he founds his claim to honour. Nay, more, it is most probable that the contest commenced by his contemporaries will be continued after his death in history. There can be no doubt as to the merits of the man who, during the winter of 1854, held possession of that Balaclava which formed the communication of the British army. There can be no doubt as to the military conduct of the man who rescued from such extraordinary difficulty and danger the occupants of the Residency of Lucknow. There can be still less doubt as to the military ability and great powers of combination of the man who took possession by conquest of the city of Lucknow. Those are attained realities which remain for ever in the most romantic history of that most extraordinary man, and which will be retained for ages in the memory of mankind—(cheers). Therefore we do not come here to ask you to contribute to raise a statue to a man of the value of whose services there is any doubt in the mind of any human being. His successes were not of a questionable character. No man can doubt that in Lord Clyde we have lost one of the greatest men we ever possessed—(cheers). I am sure you must all have felt how busy death has lately been with the great men of this country. I know the places of many of them are vacant. I know not how, within a short time, the place of any one of them is to be supplied; I will say, of all the great men whom we have recently lost, and whose place it is most difficult to supply, it is Lord Clyde. He stood in a position different from that of any man in the land—a more varied and extensive experience with war than any general in Europe—(cheers). He had seen the great Peninsular war; had seen war in America, war in India, war in the Crimea. He had served in every capacity. Every military virtue of which we read, every virtue that danger creates or improves, so far as we know, or as I know—for I knew him well—every one of those virtues was concentrated in the mind and heart of that thorough English soldier to whose memory we now ask you to erect a monument—(cheers).

General Sir W. Gomm supported the resolution, and said that he was a young soldier with Colin Campbell at Vimiera and Corunna, and was a subaltern with him in the same company; and it was with feelings of mournful pleasure that he attended the meeting summoned to aid in erecting a monument to the noble soldier and tried servant of the State, Field-Marshal Lord Clyde—(cheers).

The resolution was then put from the chair, and unanimously adopted.

Lord Stanley next proposed a vote of thanks to his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge for his conduct in the chair. In doing so, he took occasion to bear his testimony to the singular simplicity and directness of Lord Clyde's mind, to his remarkable modesty, and to his passionate love for professional honour. He might have said, with Shakespeare's Henry V., "If it be a sin to covet honour, I am the most offending soul alive." Since coming into that room he heard an anecdote of Lord Clyde. It appeared that he had distinguished himself by gallantry at the battle of Barossa, and there attracted the notice of Sir Thomas Graham, afterwards Lord Lynedoch, who said to him, "Lieutenant Campbell, I have seen what you have done; and if there is any service I can render you, you have only to ask me." Lieutenant Campbell was ready with his request, for he said at once, "Then I beg to ask you to let me command the next storming party." He did so, and we know that he served in the storming of St. Sebastian, where, out of 120 men, only one came back un wounded. Referring briefly to Lord Clyde's brilliant service in India, he suggested that the statue should be placed by those of two of his old companions in arms, Napier and Havelock, and that, if a fourth were wanted to complete the series, a niche should be preserved—long, he hoped, to remain vacant—for the honoured name of Lawrence—(cheers).

Sir Roderick Murchison seconded the resolution, and stated that, although now known generally as a man of science, he had commenced his career of life as an English soldier, and had the good fortune to be with Colin Campbell in some of the engagements in the Peninsula, and he, therefore, felt peculiar pleasure in attending a meeting for erecting a monument to his memory. He was proud that Scotland, which had given an Abercrombie and a Moore to the country, had also given it a Campbell.

The resolution, conveying a vote of thanks to the chairman, was adopted, and his Royal Highness briefly acknowledged the compliment, and the proceedings were then brought to a close.

THE COURT-MARTIAL ON COLONEL CRAWLEY.

The court-martial on Colonel Crawley, which it was arranged should commence on Thursday last, has been postponed to Tuesday, the 17th inst. (to-morrow). The military authorities were quite prepared to enter on the inquiry on the day first named, but on Monday an application was made by the legal advisers of Colonel Crawley for further delay, to enable them to complete the evidence for the defence. The matter was at once referred to the Judge-Advocate-General, who at once acceded to the request. The announcement was telegraphed in the course of the evening to the authorities at Aldershot; but so far as they are concerned, their chief duty being to provide the necessary accommodation for the court, and take charge of the witnesses, the inquiry could commence at any moment. In regard to the construction of the court itself, we may state that Colonel Palmer, of the 60th, who was named one of its members, has been seized with illness, and that his place has been supplied by Colonel Hodder, of the 50th. It is impossible to say to what length the trial may extend; but if it were not for the cumbrous procedure of the court, the questions and answers being all written, one would suppose that the issues before it might easily and expeditiously be determined. Divested of technicalities, the charges against Colonel Crawley resolve themselves into the following:—First, that he, by undue severity to Sergeant-major Lilley, when under close arrest, was guilty of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman; and, secondly, that in an address made by him at the Mhow court-martial, he accused Lieutenant and Adjutant Fitzsimons of having of his own accord acted with that undue severity towards Sergeant-major Lilley, he (Colonel Crawley) well knowing that the accusation was false, inasmuch as he himself had given express orders on the subject to Adjutant Fitzsimons, in the presence of many witnesses. These are the charges into which the court will have to inquire, and every effort, it is said, will be made strictly to limit it to those issues.

The following is a complete list of the officers who are to compose the general court-martial ordered to assemble at Aldershot on Tuesday, the 17th inst., for the trial of Lieut.-Colonel Thomas R. Crawley, of the 6th Inniskilling Dragoons:—President: Lieut.-general Sir George Augustus Wetherell, K.C.B. Members: Major-general John Lawrenson; Major-general David Russell, C.B.; Major-general Randal Rumley; Major-general Edward Cooper Hodge, C.B.; Colonel Robert Wardlaw, 1st Dragoons; Colonel Gloucester Gambier, C.B., Royal Artillery; Colonel the Hon. George Talbot Devereux, Royal Artillery; Colonel Thomas George Alexander Oakes, 12th Lancers; Lieut.-colonel Charles Sawyer, 6th Dragoon Guards; Lieut.-colonel William Wynne Loder, 59th Foot; Lieut.-colonel John Neptune Sargent, 3rd Foot; Lieut.-colonel Soame Gambier Jenyns, C.B., 13th Hussars; Lieut.-colonel Hugh Maurice Jones, 73rd Foot; Lieut.-colonel Francis Douglas Grey, 37th Foot. Officiating Judge Advocate: Colonel James Kennard Pilon, Unattached. Prosecutor: Colonel Sir Alfred Horsford, K.C.B. The prisoner will be assisted in his defence by Mr. Vernon Harcourt.

CAPTAIN SPEKE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

Sir,—At our late Michaelmas Quarter Sessions a committee was appointed to consider in what way the merits of Captain Speke could be best recognised by his native country. A meeting took place on the 10th inst., attended by the following members:—Lord Taunton, Sir A. H. Elton, Sir A. B. P. Acland Hood, M.P., Colonel Pinney, M.P., Dr. Prior, Messrs. R. T. Combe, E. A. Sanford, E. J. Esdaile, J. Halliday, W. H. Gore Langton, M.P., and J. Hamilton; Sir William Miles in the chair; and it was resolved that a dinner be given on the 22nd of December, and a piece of plate be presented to Captain Speke. It was further resolved that the county should be canvassed for subscriptions, to be paid into Messrs. Stuckey's bank to the credit of the Speke Memorial Fund, with as little delay as possible. A sub-committee will meet in ten days to decide on the memorial.

Now, sir, by the insertion of this letter you will greatly oblige us, and convey to all absent Somersetshire men, with a rapidity which is only possible through your medium, notice of our proceedings, and our earnest request that they will assist us in this matter. Our wish is to be in a position to present a memorial worthy of this enterprising traveller and of the county to which he belongs. £165 were subscribed on the spot in sums varying from £5 to £20.—Your obedient servant,

JOHN HAMILTON, Hon. Sec. pro tem.
Fyne-court, near Bridgwater.

LORD CANNING'S STATUE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

Sir,—With reference to the following extract from your paper of the 20th October,—"Not even Lord Canning's statue has yet been subscribed for,"—I beg to assure you that your Calcutta correspondent is in error, for I have good reason to know that nearly £5,000 were subscribed for an equestrian statue prior to the late Earl Canning's departure from India.

Yours very faithfully,
C. V. BOWIE, Lieutenant-Colonel, R.A.,
Late Military Secy. to the late Viceroy of India.
Nov. 7.

COURT OF PROBATE AND DIVORCE, Nov. 10.

(Before Sir J. P. WILDE, Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN, and Mr. Baron CHANNELL.)

STONE V. STONE AND APPLETON.

This was a petition by Captain Stone against his wife, on the ground of adultery with the co-respondent, who was acting as the respondent's medical man during the absence of the petitioner in India. The case occupied the attention of the Court for several days, and resulted in a verdict in favour of the petitioner—damages, £2,300.

Mr. Karlsake, Q.C. (with whom was Dr. Spinks and Mr. Searle), having obtained a rule for a new trial,

The Queen's Advocate (with whom was Mr. Lopes) showed cause against it, when

The Court took time to consider their judgment; but in consequence of the late Judge Ordinary (Sir Cresswell Cresswell) having met with his accident, the opinion of the Court was not given till this morning, when

Mr. Justice Wightman delivered the following judgment: In this case my brother Channell and myself have with much care read and considered the evidence, parol as well as documentary, and we are of opinion that the evidence of adultery by Mrs. Stone is not sufficiently strong to make the present verdict wholly satisfactory; and considering the effect it must have upon Mrs. Stone's future condition and happiness, we think that the case should be submitted to another jury, and that the rule for a new trial should be made absolute. We do not think it necessary, or indeed proper, to say more than that the case ought to undergo further investigation. Our opinion is entirely founded on what we consider the very insufficient evidence to make out the adultery; and we cannot conclude without expressing our regret that we differ in opinion from the late lamented Judge Ordinary, Sir Cresswell Cresswell, whose loss we, in common with the rest of the country, most sincerely deplore, and whose learning and talents made him a very able judge. But notwithstanding the opinion expressed by him, we consider that the case should be re-heard. And I may add that before the unfortunate accident which deprived the court and the public of an admirable judge, and ourselves of a truly kind friend as well as colleague, he knew of the opinion we had then formed, and that we were disposed to think there should be a new trial in this case.

Sir J. P. Wilde: The order of the Court, therefore, will be that the rule for a new trial should be made absolute.

IMPORTS FROM BRITISH INDIA.

From British India—not including Singapore and Ceylon—the merchandise imported into the United Kingdom last year amounted in value to thirty-four millions. In comparison with the returns for 1861 this aggregate is more by twelve millions, and with those for 1860 by nineteen millions sterling. Since the commencement of the war in America, British India has become the most important country whence our supplies of raw material are received, and thus added greatly to the flood of prosperity in that region, and which is almost unparalleled. Prominent among the chief products are coffee, cotton, gum, hemp, hides, indigo, oil, pepper, rice, saltpetre, seeds, silk, skins, sugar, tea, tin, wood, and wool. The subjoined table furnishes the value of the more important articles imported into the United Kingdom in the years 1860 and 1861, the latest completed annual accounts, together with the increase or decrease therein respectively. By this it appears that in the latter year the increase on raw cotton was, in round numbers, six millions sterling; on indigo, £385,515; on rice, £1,165,911; and on silk, £194,236. Castor oil, pepper, rice, safflower, saltpetre, seeds, silk manufactures, skins, sugar, tea, tin, teakwood, and sheep's wool are the commodities which exhibit a diminution. The total increment in 1861 was £8,304,481, and the total decrement £1,442,326, leaving a net balance of £6,862,155.

MADRAS RAILWAY COMPANY.

The half-yearly meeting of the shareholders of this company was held at the London Tavern, on Friday last. The report, of which the following is an abstract, was taken as read:—

The report of the directors states that no further opening of the railway took place during the past half-year, but the increase of traffic and receipts, both on the South-West and North-West lines, has been very considerable. The passengers, 633,460 in number, have been carried during the past six months without injury to life or limb, making since the opening of the railway more than 4,500,000 of passengers conveyed on it in safety. On the South-West line the way and works have been maintained in good order. The substitution of iron sleepers for wood has proceeded systematically, and the proportion of the former now laid in the divisions of the line where they are introduced is equal to about 70 per cent. of the whole number. The iron sleepers continue to give every satisfaction, and wherever they have been laid continuously, the expense of maintaining the way is much diminished. The works on the Bangalore branch, including the ghat, are so far completed, that engines with material trains are now running to the Coppum station, 22 miles from the junction with the main line. Some delay in completing the permanent way has been incurred in lowering a rock cutting in order to reduce the ruling gradient between Coppum and Bangalore to 1 in 100. The early part of next year is the probable time of opening the branch throughout to Bangalore. The fares of the first and second classes of passengers were raised in February last to 12 and 5 pice respectively. The fares of the three classes are now 12, 5, and 3 pice, or $1\frac{1}{4}$ d., $0\frac{3}{4}$ d., and $0\frac{1}{2}$ d. The immediate result of the change has been favourable as regards the receipts from the first class, but in the second class the receipts, as well as the numbers, exhibit a falling off. The total receipts for passengers during the half-year amounted on 406 miles to £11,291, against £30,111 on 319 miles for the corresponding half of the year; and the goods traffic, exclusive of railway materials, amounted to £38,017, against £20,542, showing an increase in the receipts for passengers of £11,180, and of those for goods to £17,475. The total receipts for the half-year ending the 30th of June amounted on 406 miles to £100,738, against £67,289 on 319 miles for the corresponding half of last year, and the expenses to £76,359, or 75.80 per cent., including £36,279 for maintenance, against £52,612 or 78.18 per cent. for the corresponding period, including £22,415 for maintenance, leaving the net receipts for the past half-year £24,379, against £14,678. The receipts for carriage of railway materials were 12½ per cent. of the gross receipts. The results of the half-year as regards traffic must be considered satisfactory. The cost of maintaining the permanent way must remain high, in spite of every care and economy, until the substitution of iron for decayed wooden sleepers has been carried through. The receipts per train mile amounted to 5s. 6d., and the expenses to 4s. 2½d., against 5s. 0½d. and 3s. 11½d., in the corresponding half of 1862. The cost of maintenance for the six months, apart from expenditure due to the renewals with iron sleepers, was £68 per mile. On the north-west line the permanent way and the works of the open portion being entirely laid with iron sleepers are in excellent order. The cost of maintenance is stated to have lately averaged not more than about £78 per mile per annum. It is hoped the line will be opened as far as Co-door, 66 miles from the Arcunum Junction, early next year. The traffic receipts on the open portion amounted to £5,029, against £2,319 for the corresponding period, and the expenses to £3,434, against £2,032, leaving the net receipts for the past half-year £3,195, against £287 for the corresponding period last year. Although no addition was made during the half-year to the 41 miles open for traffic, the receipts show a very large increase. The Indian Tramway Company are engaged in the construction of a short line to connect the town and temples of Conjeveram with the company's main line at Arcunum Junction.

The chair was taken by General Sim, who, in moving the adoption of the report, said the line consisted of two separate ones, the south-west and the north-west. The south-west trunk line was 406 miles in length, and by the branch to Bangalore the distance traversed would be increased to 490 miles. A substantial and durable permanent way had been formed with iron sleepers, and this would greatly reduce the cost of maintenance. The progress made during the half-year in the construction of the Bangalore branch was satisfactory. It would connect Madras by railway with the large and important city of Mysore. The north-west line had been intended to join the Great Indian Peninsula, but a change had been made in the route of the latter, which awaited the approval of the Government. The great obstacle in the north-west trunk was the ascent from the Carnatic, but the difficulties were being surmounted. By the early part of next year sixty miles would have been completed. The increase in the passenger traffic on the south-west line in the six months, as compared with the corresponding six months of the previous year, amounted to 12 per cent.; and that in the goods traffic to 24 per cent. The increase in money receipts was £16,400. When the Bangalore branch was completed, the ratio of increase would no doubt be greater. The traffic on the north-west line was till more satisfactory, showing an increase of 96 per cent. over that of the corresponding half-year of 1862. The working expenses had also increased; but the substitution of wood for coal promised a great reduction under the head of fuel—the danger of fire, which had previously prevented the use of wood, having been obviated by the invention of a spark catcher. No coal had hitherto been discovered in the presidency of Madras. There was about £400,000 remaining in the hands of the Government, but more capital would soon be required, and about the end of the year additional shares would be offered to the proprietors rateably. He added that at present no Indian railway was earning the interest guaranteed by the Government. After some discussion the report was adopted.

BOMBAY, BAKODA, AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY COMPANY.

The report of the directors states that the mileage of open line during the half-year ending 30th of June last was, from the 1st to the 19th of January, Bulsar to Mehmoodabad, 167½ miles, and from the 20th of January to the 30th of June, from Bulsar to Ahmedabad, 185½ miles, giving an average of 183½ miles producing revenue for the whole period. This is an increase of 51 miles over the corresponding period of 1862. With regard to the passenger traffic, although there has been a falling off in the numbers carried (especially of the third-class), owing, probably, to the increase in the fares approved by the Government of India, there has been a decided increase in the amount received. The number of passengers carried during the half-year was 409,346, being 2,233 per mile, against 424,801 and 3,212 per mile carried in the corresponding half of 1862. The amount received was £37,787, or £206 per mile open, against £17,709, or £134 per mile, showing a decrease of 15,455 passengers, and an increase in the receipts of £20,078, or £72 per mile. The receipts for goods' traffic amounted to £22,378, or £122 per mile, against £4,086, or £35 per mile, for the corresponding half of 1863, showing an increase of £17,692, or £87 per mile. The gross receipts amounted to £60,353, or £346 per mile, against £25,208, or £191 per mile, showing an increase of £38,145, or £155 per mile. The working expenses amounted to £23,281, or 36.75 per cent. of the gross receipts, against £15,168, or 60.17 per cent. for the corresponding half of last year, showing an increase in the expenses of £8,113, and a decrease in the per centage of 23.42 per cent. The traffic receipts per train mile amounted to 12s. 2d., against 9s. 1d. for the corresponding period; and the expenditure to 4s. 5½d. per train mile, against 5s. 5½d. for the corresponding period. The net revenue paid and payable to the Government from the commencement, in 1860 to the 30th of June last, amounted to £90,980, or 53.05 per cent. of the gross receipts, of which £40,072 was for the past half-year. The amount thus repaid to the Government is equal to 16.05 per cent. of the amount advanced by the Government for guaranteed interest on the capital paid over to them. Out of a gross traffic of £60,353 in the past half-year, £40,072 has been paid over as the net revenue. The rolling-stock is in good working order, and some considerable additions to it are in course of manufacture to meet the large trade in cotton which is expected to flow over the line on the opening to Bombay. The Government in India have determined at once, through the Public Works Department, to make the necessary roads to the various stations of the railway. With regard to the progress made in that portion of the line still under construction—viz., from Bulsar to Bombay, the directors give the following extracts from a report of Lieutenant-Colonel J. P. Kennedy, after making a tour over the whole line during the month of September:—

"The strenuous efforts made prior to and during the present monsoon to secure the opening of the 125 miles from Bulsar to Bombay at the earliest possible date have been so far successful. This district includes the passage of the two widest rivers on the lines, and a very formidable length of swamp districts, requiring high embankments, chiefly erected with tidal intervals.

"The principal effort was to complete the embankments before the rains, in order to secure to them the full monsoon season, an essential requirement to their future stability under their train loads. This having been done, the completion of the ballasting the embankments, so as to permit the passage of trains from Bulsar to Bombay, may be looked for in three or four months—say December or January next."

The importance of the opening to Bombay, not only in its effects upon the revenue and future prospects of this company, but in developing the trade of the country, can scarcely be exaggerated. In the case of the other Indian railways, the construction has naturally been commenced from the principal commercial terminus, and the traffic has therefore, from the first opening, had a fair chance of development. But in the case of this railway the works were begun, under the first agreement with the Government, at a distance of 160 miles from Bombay, the principal port and terminus; and the nearest point of the open line is still 125 miles distant therefrom. This fact must be borne in mind by the proprietors in the consideration of the traffic accounts. The directors are happy to state that arrangements are being made with the Government in India for gaining access to the port of Bombay, and permanent station accommodation there. The Board have taken into consideration the necessity of raising additional capital to complete the line up to its extreme point, Colaba, including the permanent buildings connected with the Bombay terminus there, the Bulsar and Dadur shops, the erection of warehouses at various stations, &c., and the doubling the line from Bombay to Bassein—a measure recently adopted with the sanction of the Bombay Government. The extensions to Deesa and to Indore and Malwa have received the favourable consideration of the Indian Government. The Deesa line has been surveyed and ordered to be staked out, as the Bombay Government are themselves prepared to make a common road on that route at once, capable of being hereafter converted into a railway. A fresh and more careful survey is to be shortly made of the Indore line. The negotiations with the Government on these matters are being principally conducted in India. The capital account to the 30th of June last shows that £4,258,638 had been received, and £3,621,272 expended, leaving a balance of £637,366, of which £501,170 has been expended on works in India. The interest account with the Government of India shows that £566,630 had been paid to the company in the aggregate to the 30th of June. Of this £90,980 had been repaid out of net revenue, leaving a sum balance of £475,650.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MONEY-MARKET AND THE DRAFTS OF THE INDIA COUNCIL ON INDIA.—An increase of heaviness was observable in all the markets on Wednesday, but owing to the Bank having abstained from making any further movement in the rate of discount, the momentary cessation of gold withdrawals, and the receipt of less unsatisfactory accounts from the Paris Bourse, there was ultimately a better tone, and consols closed at an advance of an eighth. The terms in which the letter of the Emperor Napoleon, inviting the Sovereigns of Europe to a congress, is couched, seemed to be favourably regarded; and the market was also strengthened by the augmentation of £200,000 per month now to be made in the draughts of the India Council on India, and which it is understood will continue for five months, if not for a longer period.

DEMONSTRATION IN HONOUR OF CAPTAIN SPEKE.—A demonstration in honour of Captain Speke took place at Taunton on Friday, the 6th inst., on his passing through the town, on his way to his house at Ilminster. The captain was received at the station by a large crowd, and conducted by a procession—comprising the gentry of the town and neighbourhood, the yeomanry cavalry, volunteers, &c.—to the Shire Hall, amid the music of the bands, ringing of church bells, and acclamations of the populace. The town was gaily decorated with banners and evergreens. At the Shire Hall an address was presented to the captain in the name of the inhabitants, to which he returned a suitable reply. He said he had called the lake which he had found to be the source of the Nile the Victoria Nyanza, after her gracious Majesty. He next christened a mountain Somerset, after his native county, and a river Jordan, after his own family. He christened an archipelago Bengal, because he was a Bengal officer, and the falls of the source of the Nile Ripon, in honour of the nobleman who presided over the Royal Geographical Society when he went upon his expedition. He defied the whole world to say otherwise than that the Victoria Nyanza was the source of the Nile. What was of more importance still, he had discovered the fertile zone of Africa—vast regions full of water, and of course, in consequence, with great rain, rendering them very fertile. He was speared out of Africa the first time he went; but he intended to go there again, and use his endeavours to put a stop to the slave trade. A large sum was now expended in sending out cruisers, like a flock of geese, catching at everything. One view he had was this, that the free men of the coast should be enlisted in men-of-war, and marched across from east to west, when they would give such information that they would be enabled to seize the whole of the slaves. A public banquet was given to Captain Speke, at the George Hotel, Ilminster, on Wednesday evening last. About one hundred and twenty magistrates and gentlemen were present, as also a large number of ladies. Captain Speke was accompanied by Mr. G. Langton, M.P., and the Hon. W. Addington, M.P., the former representative observing, in the course of his address, that himself, Sir A. A. Head, Sir W. Miles, and Mr. Knatchbull would bring the claims of the gallant captain before Parliament, if the Government did not previously recognise them. The Captain was greeted with loud applause, and in the course of his address paid a well-merited tribute to Captain Grant and Dr. Livingstone. Mr. Coombe, the chairman, in proposing the health of Captain Speke, mentioned that the Queen had been pleased to signify her approbation of his efforts. Other toasts were given and responded to in the course of the evening, and the proceedings did not terminate until midnight.

EXPORTS OF COTTON GOODS TO THE EAST.—It appears that in the first ten months of 1863 the exports of plain cottons to Calcutta amounted to 120,748,248 yards, against 210,097,413 yards in the corresponding period of 1862, 295,213,518 yards in the corresponding period of 1861, and 326,710,788 in the corresponding period of 1860. To Bombay the exports amounted to 151,640,264 yards in the first ten months of 1863, against 136,579,676 yards in the corresponding period of 1862, 174,820,574 yards in the corresponding period of 1861, and 170,150,242 yards in the corresponding period of 1860. To Madras the exports amounted to 7,107,045 yards in the first ten months of 1863, against 3,638,812 yards in the corresponding period of 1862, 9,123,921 yards in the corresponding period of 1861, and 11,633,945 yards in the corresponding period of 1860. To Ceylon the exports amounted to 10,762,040 yards in the first ten months of 1863, against 13,623,098 yards in the corresponding period of 1862, 13,042,190 yards in the corresponding period of 1861, and 13,000,039 yards in the corresponding period of 1860. To Hong Kong the exports amounted to 11,446,947 yards in the first ten months of 1863, against 20,592,095 yards in the corresponding period of 1862, 61,010,529 yards in the corresponding period of 1861, and 40,421,730 yards in the corresponding period of 1860. To Shanghai the exports amounted to 21,183,288 yards in the first ten months of 1863, against 43,577,449 yards in the corresponding period of 1862, 148,504,835 yards in the corresponding period of 1861, and 84,079,218 yards in the corresponding period of 1860. To Singapore the exports amounted to 16,603,936 yards in the first ten months of 1863, against 20,867,133 yards in the corresponding period of 1862, 29,103,291 yards in the corresponding period of 1861, and 58,815,338 yards in the corresponding period of 1860. To Batavia the exports in the first ten months of 1863 amounted to 6,598,863 yards, against 13,194,691 yards in the corresponding period of 1862, 22,641,841 yards in the corresponding period of 1861, and 28,353,067 yards in the corresponding period of 1860. Finally, to Manila the exports during the first ten months of 1863 amounted to 6,383,081 yards, against 5,398,227 yards in the corresponding period of 1862, 16,682,192 yards in the corresponding period of 1861, and 12,287,887 yards in the corresponding period of 1860. These figures afford startling proofs of the decline in the demand for British cotton manufactured goods in the East, in consequence of the excessively high price of the raw material. Under more favourable circumstances, however, some, at least, of the ground lost will doubtless be recovered.

“London, Nov. 2.

“Dear Sir,—We are desirous of testifying to the advantages afforded by University College to our countrymen in enabling them to obtain a College education without interference with the religious creed inherited by them from their ancestors, and we beg to accompany our acknowledgments of the enlightened and tolerant spirit of the founders and directors of such a noble institution with a donation of £3,000 to the funds of the College, to be applied in such manner as the Council think fit. We have great pleasure in sending our check for the amount through you, knowing the kind interest you have taken in our countrymen, of which we have seen so many proofs since our first establishment in this metropolis in 1855, and we remain, with great respect, yours very faithfully, “CAMA AND CO.”

“To the Right Hon. Sir Edward Ryan.”

It was resolved unanimously—

“That the Council of University College acknowledge with gratitude and respect the generous donation of £3,000 presented to the college by Messrs. Cama and Co. That the value of this magnificent present is further enhanced in the eyes of the Council by Messrs. Cama's letter, intimating that the principle of imparting the best literary and scientific instruction to all students without distinction of religious opinions, which has been proclaimed and followed by University College, has been duly appreciated by intelligent natives of India. That the Council will apply this sum for the promotion of education in the college, according to the enlightened spirit enjoined by Messrs. Cama's letter, with a full sense of the confidence reposed in them by Messrs. Cama as to the best means of accomplishing the object. That the council, at the same time, hope that among the students for whose encouragement this sum will henceforward be applied there may be found an increased number of youthful natives of India, prompted by the liberal proceeding and declaration of Messrs. Cama, to seek the advantage of literary and scientific education in London.” A further vote of thanks was passed to Messrs. Cama and Co. for their recent donation of £1,000 to the hospital. A vote of thanks, to be communicated by Messrs. Morris, Prevost, and Co., was passed for the generous contribution sent through them on the 14th of August of £500 for the hospital by an anonymous benefactress.

THE INDUS STEAM FLOTILLA.—The agent and superintendent of the Indus Steam Flotilla reports, on the 9th October, that the steamers and barges were actively engaged, five of the former, with attendant barges, having left Kotree with freight within eight days, another being ready to follow on the arrival of the English mail.

ARRIVAL OF INVALIDS FROM INDIA.—The Indian transport Morayshire arrived at Portsmouth on Tuesday morning last from Bombay, with about 150 military invalids on board.

THE SCINDE RAILWAY.—It would appear, from recent advices, that the traffic of the Scinde Railway averages nearly £2,300 per week, being about £100 per diem more than it was last year. The chief engineer of the Scinde Railway, with a numerous and efficient staff of engineers and surveyors, left for India by the steamer which sailed from Southampton on Thursday morning last, to survey the Valley of the Indus from Kotree to Mooltan, with the view to connect the Scinde and Punjab Railways, bringing Lahore and Delhi into railway connection with Kurrachee, thus completing the great steam arch of India of 2,200 miles in length, having Calcutta, in the Bay of Bengal, at one extremity, and Kurrachee, on the Arabian Sea, at the other.

THE DELHI RAILWAY.—With regard to the Delhi line, there is reason to believe that the Government of India have decided that the railway from Umritsur to Delhi is to proceed, after bridging the Beas and crossing the Sutlej at Philloor, by Leodianah and Sirhind to Umballah, crossing the Jumna, proceeding to Meerut, and joining the East Indian Railway at Ghazeeabad on the Hindun, opposite Delhi, and distant eleven miles from that city. The routes of the Indus and Ganges having met at Ghazeeabad, will share the expense of the branch line and bridge across the Jumna to Delhi.

THE LE BAS PRIZE.—The examiners have given notice that the subject for the present year is:—“The State and Prospects of Education among the upper classes of natives in India, and the results to be expected from their more general employment in the higher departments of Government.” Candidates for the prize must be graduates of the University who are not of more than three years' standing from their first degrees when the essays are sent in. The essays must be sent in to the Vice-Chancellor before the end of the Easter Term, 1864, each bearing some motto, and accompanied by a sealed paper bearing the same motto, and enclosing the name of the candidate and that of his college. The successful candidate is required to publish the essay at his own expense.

THE STAR OF INDIA.—(India-office, Nov. 11.)—The Queen has been graciously pleased to nominate and appoint his Highness Seramudi Rajahye Hindostan Raj-Rajender Sree Maharajah Dheeraj Sewaee Ram Sing, Bahadoor of Jyepoor, and his Highness Furzund Dilbund Rasekool Itahqad Dowlut-i-Englishia Rajah Surroop Sing, Bahadoor of Jheend, to be Knights of the Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.

EXPORT OF SPECIE.—The P. and O. Company's steamer Ellora, which sailed on Thursday last, took out £656,590, of which £444,300 is silver, and £58,900 gold, for Bombay; and £153,390 gold for Alexandria.

EMBARKATION OF TROOPS FOR INDIA.—The hired sailing troop-ship King Arthur embarked from alongside the dockyard at Portsmouth on Tuesday morning last the remainder of the 55th Regiment of Foot, comprising about 400 officers and men. She went out of harbour on the same afternoon, and brought up at Spithead, from whence she sailed on Wednesday, on her voyage to Madras.

AN OVERDUE EAST INDIAMAN.—At Lloyd's, on Wednesday, twenty guineas premium was paid on the ship Bengallyon, which sailed on the 80th of May from Calcutta for Liverpool. The ship was last spoken on the 13th of October.

APPOINTMENTS.—(Downing-street, Oct. 29.)—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Edward Bowdler, Esq., to be Assistant Surveyor General and Civil Engineer for the island of Mauritius.—(India Office, Nov. 5.)—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Henry Mills, Esq., one of her Majesty's Counsel learned in the Law, to be a Judge of the High Court of Judicature, at Fort William, in Bengal.

This day is published, in 2 vols., 8vo., 32s.,

GERMAN LIFE AND MANNERS, as Seen in SAXONY at the Present Day; with an Account of Village Life—Town Life—Fashionable Life—Domestic Life—Married Life—School and University Life, &c., of Germany at the Present Time. Illustrated with Songs and Pictures of the Student Customs at the University of Jena. By HENRY MAYHEW, Author of "London Labour and London Poor," "Great World of London," &c.

The above book attempts to draw a contrast between the comfort, refinement, and domestic happiness of the several classes in England, and the squalor and misery prevalent among the same grades of society in Saxony; and to point out what is the reason of the extreme difference. The author, having paid some attention to the state of the poor in his own country, was astonished to find even the middle classes of Saxony living harder lives and in the receipt of smaller incomes, as well as being worse housed and worse fed than the ordinary run of mechanics in England, and that the artisans or skilled labourers of the country were in a more wretched condition than even the poorest "bog-trotters" in Ireland—living on potatoes, black bread, and an infusion of burnt carrot powder, as a substitute for coffee, from one year's end to the other. He shows the English reader not only how little the people get in Saxony, but also how much of that little is wasted in unnecessary enjoyments—giving the statistics of beer and spirit drinking, as well as the returns as to the ordinary amount of money squandered upon amusements by both the men and the women of the country, and then setting forth how very small a proportion of the small incomes of the gentry and working classes is left for the maintenance of the comforts of home, and the consequent wretched state of the homes of the people. The book, however, while making the exposition of the state and causes of the misery of the German folk as contrasted with the happiness of those of England, the "burden of its song," does not treat the matter in a mere dry, didactic manner, but seeks to enforce its object by presenting various graphic pictures of the several forms of society, and so allowing the English reader to institute the comparison for himself. Further, it deals not alone with the life of the present time, but treats of the ancient customs and religion of the people, citing many of their strange legends and tales of diablerie, as well as pointing out in an odd chapter upon the paganism of the old inhabitants of Thuringia, the mythical meaning of the interesting feast of "Summer's Victory," still held every year in the Thuringian capital. Again, while dealing with the University customs of the students at Jena, the author quotes the laws of some of the student clubs there, so as to show the effete chivalrous character of such institutions, and explains, when detailing the beer usages of the Jena "boys," how their drinking customs partake more of the character of ancient orgies than mere temperate revelries; though even here we have the scenes of the duels and drinking-bouts (the latter given with all the songs and frolics of the "boys"), at which the writer was present, pictured by the pencil as well as the pen, rather than being set forth in a mere dull description of the University forms and ceremonies. The marriage customs of the country, as well as those at birth and death, are presented to the English public, so as to draw attention to the looseness of the matrimonial contract and family ties in a land where divorces may be had on the most trivial pleas for a matter of thirty shillings, and where, according to the wits of the nation, "an allowance is made if a quantity be taken." Lastly, the author portrays some of the English curiosities to be met with abroad in the form of his own countrymen, and concludes with treating us to a written photograph of an English clown, as well as to an odd picture of the circus performers in a foreign land. In fine, the book has been purposely kept of a thoroughly various and light character—now giving the experiences of the author while living at a small village on the borders of the Thuringian forest—then introducing us to a fashionable ball at the Klemida in Eisenach—next treating us to a chapter on the unsavoury compounds concocted in the German kitchen—after that describing how an Englishman is nearly "worried to death" by the gaucherie of the Saxon servant maids—here contrasting German babies with English ones, and there comparing the treatment of German wives and the conduct of German young ladies with those of his own country—and finally, after describing the rude kind of aquatic and equestrian sports indulged in by the Jena students, letting us see how odd Germany and the Germans appear in the eyes of an English clown abroad.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Mordan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches,

MR. EPHRAIM MOSELEY'S IMPROVE-MENT IN THE CONSTRUCTION OF ARTIFICIAL
TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES, on an INDIA-RUBBER BASE, are secured by Letters Patent, dated December, 1862, whereby the continual outlay of new teeth is avoided, alterations from the absorption of the gums, or any other cause, being easily remedied, and the first outlay no greater than for ordinary kinds. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted as under:—It consists of one continuous piece of Prepared India-rubber. The Artificial Teeth present an uniformly even surface to the action of the tongue, preventing lodgment of food and all secretions, so much complained of in the present system. No gold or any other metal being required, all springs, wires, and fastenings are wholly unnecessary; sharp edges are avoided, a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity hitherto wholly unattainable, and a fit perfected with the most unerring accuracy, are secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums. The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the prepared india-rubber; and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may be retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being at the same time provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

Quintessence of Jamaica Ginger and Camomile.

GINGER has long been deservedly known as an excellent domestic medicine, and, combined with camomile, it is the most efficient stomachic tonic known, for while the ginger relieves the stomach from distension and flatulency, arising from impaired digestion, the camomile strengthens the coats of the stomach, and by that means gives it a healthy and invigorating tone. So highly concentrated is this preparation, it is unimpaired by age or climate, and well adapted for exportation. In Gout, Spasms, Dysentery, Cholera, or those complaints incidental to tropical climates, it is invaluable, as in numerous cases a dose or two has checked and frequently cured most alarming attacks. No family should be without it. Sold in half-pints, quarter-pints, and one-eighth pints.

Agreeable Seidlitz Powder, in one bottle, protected by a case, with measure and spoon included. The advantage of this preparation is the perfect combination of the solid ingredients of the Seidlitz Spring in one compound powder. It is very cooling and refreshing, well adapted for exportation, or travellers by land or sea.

Aromatic Tincture of Quinodine.—For the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria.

No person exposed to the influence or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for if taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria.—Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by THOS. WILKINSON (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Regent-street, London, W.

EXTRAORDINARY CURE of a COUGH.

The following letter has been received:—"Nightingale-hall, Edmonton. Dear Sir,—I have recently suffered much from a most violent cough, proceeding from a tickling in my chest, which no remedy, out of many I resorted to, could allay. My head was constantly aching, and my whole frame entirely shaken. Having seen the good effects of your Balm of Aniseed in several members of my family, I purchased a small bottle, and when going to bed at night took a teaspoonful in two tablespoonful of water, just warm. The effect was immediate; it arrested the tickling in my chest, I slept well, and arose perfectly restored in the morning, with the exception of debility, arising from fatigue by incessant coughing for some days previous. My cough entirely left me, and has never returned. Having since heard of a lady in the neighbourhood who for a long time had laboured under a most distressing cough, and who had resorted to every remedy within her knowledge, I sent the remainder of the bottle to her; and that long-standing, obstinate, and (as she thought) incurable cough was perfectly cured.—I am, my dear Sir, yours very truly, WM. BOARDS. To Mr. Thos. Powell."

BLAIR'S GOUT and RHEUMATIC PILLS.

This preparation is one of the benefits which the science of modern chemistry has conferred upon mankind; for during the first twenty years of the present century to speak of a cure for Gout was considered a romance; but now the efficacy and safety of this medicine is so fully demonstrated, by unsolicited testimonials from persons in every rank of life, that public opinion proclaims this as one of the most important discoveries of the present age. These Pills require no restraint of diet or confinement during their use, and are certain to prevent the disease attacking any vital part. Sold at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per Box, by all Medicine Vendors.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—

ALLEVIATION and CURE.—The most loathsome sores, foullest ulcers, and most hopeless bad legs assume a healthier appearance after a very few applications of Holloway's cleansing and healing unguent. It promptly improves the aspect, and soon reduces the irritability of old sluggish ulcers which have fruitlessly exhausted the surgeon's skill and patient's endurance. By paying attention to the directions folded round each pot, the afflicted may easily and fearlessly guide their own ailments to a happy issue, and remove all further cause of trouble and anxiety. It is gratifying to watch the subsidence of inflammation and the gradual decrease of swelling which occur through the cooling and sedative properties of this inestimable Ointment, aided by Holloway's Pills.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

LORD ELGIN and Sir Hugh Rose have both left Simla on their winter tour, and are now travelling north of Lahore. The Governor-general's and the Commander-in-Chief's offices are to be at Lahore on the 15th December. The Commander-in-Chief intends giving a grand fancy-dress ball at Lahore in December.

The Commander-in-Chief of Madras is expected in Calcutta in December, prior to his departure for Burmah.

It is said the Bishop of Madras will come round to Bombay at the close of the year in company with the Bishop of Calcutta.

His Excellency the Governor of Bombay is still at Poona. On Saturday week last his Excellency laid the first stone of the new church at Kirkee, assisted by the Bishop of Bombay.

Mr. H. L. Anderson, Chief Secretary to the Bombay Government, has been appointed additional member of the Legislative Council of the Governor-general of India.

There was a tremendous gale at Madras on the 19th and 20th of Oct. The barque Punjab, a vessel of 559 tons register, and belonging to Messrs. Arbuthnot and Co., was driven ashore in the surf, and many small craft belonging to natives were wrecked. Only one life was lost.

A Mr. Lewis Jonathan Newbond, for assaulting a poor old native, a dealer in poultry, with such brutality as to cause his death, has been sentenced to fourteen years' transportation.

An embarrassment has occurred to the Finance Department of the Bombay Government, through the Deputy auditor and Accountant-general for the Punjab having made it known that certain public service and privilege transfer receipt forms had been stolen from the office of the Deputy-commissioner of Goojranwalla.

On the 10th Oct. the Bank of Bengal raised its rates of discount 1 per cent. all round.

The Bank of Bombay raised its rates of discount 2 per cent. all round on the 15th Oct., being an advance of 5 per cent. within a few weeks.

India has been complimented in various ways since our Gracious Queen declared herself Empress of Hindoostan, and now her Majesty has graciously endowed the country with a separate and distinctive flag, and when this is unfurled by the Governor-general of India the flag is to be as much honoured as the national banner of England. In its design it is the old Union Jack, having in its centre the Star of India, surmounted by the British Crown.

Four Italians, who had entered Bohkara ostensibly to study the silk cultivation of that country, have been arrested as spies by the Khan. Are they to share the fate of Stoddart and Connolly?

Colonel A. Turner, who was Deputy-judge-advocate-general of Division, and who suppressed or destroyed important documents connected with the Burney trial, and who, on that occasion, with truly un-English servility, declared in open court that he, as it were, lived on the breath of his master, his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, has gained nothing by declaring himself such a slave. The Governor-general, "at the recommendation of the Commander-in-Chief," has removed him from his appointment. We do not believe that the Commander-in-Chief was very earnestly determined to dismiss his too faithful adherent, but from a delicate consideration to his Excellency's position, the Viceroy, who was, no doubt, disgusted with the colonel's outrageous meanness, allowed it to appear to the public that the Commander-in-Chief himself was offended by the gross sycophancy of his servant, and proposed the punishment. The next step should be to restore poor old Gen. Burney to his old post, if it were only to give him an opportunity to resign it under less humiliating conditions than those so harshly forced upon him by Sir Hugh Rose.

The rank of Brigadier-general is to be conferred on all brigadiers commanding brigades. In accordance with this order, the following brigadiers are made Brigadier-generals:—Haley, Rainier, Holdich, Welchman, Errington, Lord Mark Kerr, Tucker, Harris, Travers, Hill, Macpherson, and Tombs.

The additional rank brings no additional pay.

The Delhi Gazette of Oct. 20 quotes from the Oudh Gazette the following paragraph, which wants "confirmation":—

"A rumour, which we trust will turn out to be unfounded, has been in circulation in the station, to the effect that the force sent against the Sittans Fanatics has met with a sad reverse; and that five hundred men of the 101st Regiment have fallen victims to a treacherous ambuscade."

We are glad to see that brave men who fall in battle in India are not easily forgotten, and that the men of H.M.'s 69th Regt. who were killed in the Vellore mutiny more than half a century ago are to have a granite monument erected to their memory at the cost of the Government.

The extraordinary sickness among H.M.'s 19th Regiment at Umritsur was said to have completely disappeared. Such is not the case. It abated in the corps originally attacked, but no sooner was this the case than it passed over to the men of the Artillery, amongst whom several fatal cases have occurred.

We are assured on creditable authority that the mortality per centage of those who have been carried off by dysentery at Umritsur this season is almost as great as, if not equal to, that of deaths from cholera amongst adults last year.

A curious case has been decided in the High Court of Judicature of Fort William. Messrs. Allan and Hayes, the well-known jewellers of Calcutta, sold to Maharajah Deera Mahtal Chundee Bahadoor in one day jewellery to the amount of 45,000 rupees. The Maharajah, it seems, understood that he was to have a credit of three years, but the jewellers insisted that the terms were cash. They, however, offered to take two promissory notes for payment in two portions of the amount at three months and six months. The Maharajah said if the traders bothered him about payment they might take back their goods. This was not consented to, and they prosecuted the Maharajah in one of the lower courts, and obtained a decree in their favour. The Maharajah appealed to the High Court, which gave the following decision:—

The judge below has awarded interest to the plaintiffs on the sum of 30,000 rupees from the expiration of six months' credit from the 18th February, 1861, the date of sale. This, as before stated, is objected to on appeal by the defendant; and we are clearly of opinion that, under all the circumstances of the case, the plaintiffs are not entitled to interest. Interest is not awarded as a matter of right, but is only given by the Court in the nature of damages where the plaintiff shows, by his whole course of dealing and the nature of his contract, that he is entitled to ask the Court to decree to him interest. We, therefore, confirm the judgment of the lower Court in so far as it decrees to the plaintiff the balance of the price of the jewellery, viz., 30,000 rupees; but we reverse so much of the order as decrees the defendant liable to pay any interest whatsoever, and direct each party to pay the costs of suit and this appeal in proportion to the amount decreed.

BENGAL.

MR. JENNINGS.

If our contemporary may be regarded as a fair exponent of public opinion in Calcutta—which we are not in the least disposed to question or gainsay—the readers of certain articles reflecting on Mr. Jennings, and published in the Hurkaru, were much puzzled to account for their paternity. They could not have been written by the Editor, said they, for how could his feelings have been wounded by Mr. Jennings' nomination to a seat in Council? So that a journalist is supposed in this remarkable city to be actuated solely by his private feelings, without reference to public interests! Now, it should rather have occurred to men of generous minds that had any personal quarrel, or difference, existed between the Editor of this paper and Messrs. Osler and Co.'s representative, the former would, for that very reason, have hesitated to attack his enemy from behind the shield of anonymous journalism. The truth lies, as usual, in a nutshell. The Editor, as a staunch Conservative, was naturally concerned to see the democratic element introduced into a Government which he loved to regard as the model of a mild and paternal despotism. His regret was rendered yet more bitter by the selection of Mr. Jennings, with whose innate and ineradicable vulgarity he had been painfully impressed during a conversation that may have lasted five minutes. He was at a loss to understand how the mere fact of a pushing man having thrust himself into a prominent position in a Trades' Protection Society could be held to qualify him for a seat in a Legislative Body, charged with the serious responsibility of framing laws for 30,000,000 of people belonging to an alien race, and having no interests in common with the tradesmen of Calcutta. He therefore said, and still says, that Mr. Beadon had made an unfortunate choice, in that Mr. Jennings was not worthy to be considered the type and representative of the enlightened trading community of such a wealthy seaport, the metropolis of British India. It seemed to him quite as comical an affair as when a well-known Viceroy of Ireland bestowed the honour of knighthood upon one of the "greasy citizens" of Dublin. It may be that the remarks on Mr. Jennings himself were too personal to suit the taste of this polite age, which accounts it mauvais ton to speak out one's thoughts, or evince any sort of emotion but weariness. However, if people of the stamp of the individual thus assailed will thrust themselves into society for which they are unfitted, they must not be surprised if they are taken for an Aunt Sally and shied at for a ha'penny. But this much is very certain, that no director or shareholder of the Hurkaru Press was in any way answerable for those articles, or even aware that the Editor had any intention of writing them. Poenam qui meruit, ferat. So likewise with the reflections on Mr. Jennings' mismanagement of the affairs of the Bengal Printing Company. Mr. Justice Morgan's scathing remarks on the conduct of the former directors of that now promising concern certainly justified very severe editorial comments on a persistent neglect of duty on the part of the individuals entrusted by the other shareholders with the care of their interests. The utter insignificance of the other directors, indeed, saved them from any worse castigation than the exposure of their names in a sort of moral pillory. Mr. Jennings, however, was no longer a grub, but a full-grown cockroach, and down came the editorial heel upon him—though slant-wise. The attack was badly managed. The Editor's impetuosity carried him too far, and he charged Mr. Jennings with having connived at an irregularity with which he could not possibly have been connected. Some two or three months before Christmas he had ceased to be a director, having sold a portion of his shares at an exceedingly high price, and subsequently all the others, save one, at a very fair profit. Men of business say that he was quite right to obtain the highest market-price of the day for his goods, and, as a man of business, very likely he was. All reflections on his character so far are entirely withdrawn, and their author very truly regrets ever having written a line he could not substantiate. But on other points he was quite prepared to prove that Mr. Jennings was either ignorant or neglectful of his duties as chairman and director. He would have shown that on all occasions he supported the secretary, Mr. Roussac, even after the scales had fallen from the eyes of his co-directors; that he had recommended an increase of the secretary's salary, and that the secretary had suggested the presentation of a testimonial to the able chairman; that he had signed reports showing a profit, when no profit had been realised; and that, at a meeting of shareholders, he had stated as a matter coming within his personal knowledge that Roussac's Directory was an advantageous speculation, though at that very time he ought to have known that it had caused a loss of at least seven thousand rupees. Much more evidence to the same effect would have been adduced, and the result would not have been gratifying either to the past or present master of the Trades' Protection Society, with true Calcutta magniloquence dubbed an association. However, all things are for the best in this best of all possible worlds. Mr. Jennings shall be made free of the Hurkaru from this time forth and for evermore. The Editor is quite as tired of him as he can be of the Editor—only, let him not repeat too loudly, or too often, that the attacks made upon his conduct as chairman of the Bengal Printing Company were "wholly" unjustifiable. The flag will not again be struck because a shot has been fired across the bow. One word more. The Englishman laughs at the idea of incredulous persons being "low born." As a general question the theory would certainly not hold water, but it is nevertheless true that a gentleman does not doubt a gentleman's word, simply because he knows himself to be incapable of a falsehood, whereas a snob doubts everybody, because he himself never scruples to tell a lie when it answers his purpose to do so.—Bengal Hurkaru, Oct. 14.

THE APOLOGY TO MR. JENNINGS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "BENGAL HURKARU."

Sir,—I beg to hand you a copy of the apology made to Mr. Jennings on the part of the Hurkaru Press Company (Limited), on the occasion of the action for libel brought by Mr. Jennings against the company being called on for trial in the High Court on the 7th instant, and I shall feel obliged by your giving it publicity in your columns.—Yours faithfully,

H. H. HILL, Secretary.

Calcutta, 10th October, 1863.

"On the part of the Hurkaru Press Company (Limited), I am instructed to withdraw every imputation upon the honour and integrity of Mr. Jennings contained in the articles complained of, and to express their regret that they were ever published."

"At the time when they were published the writer of the articles in good faith believed that the imputations were true. It is only after much investigation, made under great difficulty, owing to our not having access to the books and papers of the company of which Mr. Jennings was a director, that it has been discovered that the imputations were not justified by facts, and ought not to have been made. The circumstances under which the investigation has been made necessitated much delay, but we are now satisfied that the libels complained of were wholly unjustifiable."

THE LAWRENCE MEMORIAL ASYLUM.

The third annual report of the Henry Lawrence Memorial Asylum at Murree is satisfactory enough as far as it goes, but it appears that additional funds are needed to afford increased accommodation. At present there is only space for the eighty-five children (fifty boys and thirty-five girls) who are already in the institution. The annual fete and distribution of prizes, as we learn from the Lahore Chronicle, took place on the 25th of September, in the presence of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab and the leading residents and visitors at Murree. The loss of the late head-master, Mr. Tabernacle, was alluded to in appropriate terms by Colonel Maclean, on the part of the committee of management, and great regret was expressed for his untimely death. "The Yule scholarships" were presented this year for the first time. They are seven in all, four for the boys of 100, 80, 50, and Rs. 40 each, and three for the girls of 60, 50, and 40 rupees. These scholarships, our contemporary explains, "originated in the presentation of an address and the offer of a testimonial gift to Mr. George Yule, Commissioner of Bhaugulpore, by the Indigo planters and other residents, on his leaving that Commissionership for a higher position to which he had been transferred. Mr. Yule, while gratefully accepting the compliment paid to him, begged his kind friends would not take amiss his declining to receive the offered gift. The contributors to the intended testimonial then resolved to collect further subscriptions, and to convert the whole into a fund for commemorating Mr. Yule's name, and the high estimation in which he was held, by endowing a scholarship at the original Lawrence Asylum at Sunawur. On the recommendation of the Director of Public Instruction (Captain Fuller), the Committee of the Yule Testimonial Fund transferred the whole to the Lawrence Memorial Asylum at Murree, for the endowment of scholarships bearing Mr. Yule's name."

During the past year one poor little fellow died of eating poisonous berries, but with that exception the health of the children had been remarkably good. Since Mr. Tabernacle's death the work of education has been carried on by Mr. Westcott, the assistant-master, and Miss Sinclair. The general internal management was, however, temporarily supervised by Dr. R. A. Allen, while Colonel Elliot undertook the financial and secretariat duties—the Rev. J. Kilbee Stuart having also offered his assistance as soon as the departure of visitors from Murree will place his time more at his own disposal. The prizes were distributed by Sir Robert Montgomery, after which a capital dinner was provided by his Honour for the asylum children and the families of the soldiers belonging to the Convalescent Depot.—Hurkaru.

SITTANA.

The fanatic leader of Sittana, Sayud Ahmed, of Bareilly, on being disappointed in his attempt to raise Afghanistan to a Crusade against the unbelievers, who were at the time Hindoo Sikhs, and who had lately crossed the Indus, went down into the Swat and Ensufzai countries, where with his followers he preached effectually to the Hill tribes, and got them to join in a holy war.

They gathered to the number, they say, of a couple of lacs of all arms, and attacked the Sikhs at Akora, a village on the Cabul river near Attock; and as one of the Sikh chiefs said the other day, he would never forget that day as long as he lived, for the Pathans seemed a countless host ready to overwhelm them. The steady discipline of the Sikhs, and their nine-pounder "politicals," however, checked and awed the Mussulman rabble. Sayud Ahmed himself was wounded, and the Pathans retreated. A terrible slaughter then began, for the Sikh horsemen were soon in the midst of the runaway mountaineers, who have a child-like dread of a mounted soldier. They allowed themselves to be cut down in heaps without making scarcely any resistance, so that night alone saved multitudes more from the sword.

They never fought the Sikhs again, but held their own in the Ensufzai, doing battle with and killing one of Dost Mahomed's brothers, who had been sent out from Peshawar to punish them.

In order to feed the numbers of Hindoostanee fanatics who had come with Sayud Ahmed, they were distributed among the Ensufzai villages in small numbers and entertained as guests at the expense of the people. After a time they, the fanatics, thought they could not do better than settle among their Pathan friends, and asked or demanded their daughters in marriage. Now this was interfering with a prejudice that is the strongest a Pathan in those parts has. He will sometimes give his daughter to a real Sayud, a descendant of the prophet, but he will never condescend to give her to an ordinary Mussulman. Not knowing how better to get over the difficulty they determined on massacring all the fanatics at once, and thus ridding themselves of their guests and their unpleasant dilemma, of either refusing their request or offending the strangers.

Just at the close of the afternoon prayer on the appointed day, a circling cloud of smoke rose from the spur of a conspicuous hill, which was the preconcerted signal for the work of slaughter to commence, which it did simultaneously all over the plain. The unprepared fanatics were cut down by the edge of the sword unsparingly in every village, but some contrived to save themselves by flight, and made for the mountains. They were sheltered by the Jedooms and other hill tribes, and allowed to settle at Sittana, where they have been ever since.

Few if any of the original men are there now, but the little band has been unceasingly recruited by fanatics from Hindoostan, or by others who had reason for leaving the land of jails and order. Some say Kitmutgars are to be found amongst them in some numbers, and that their masters' silver spoons keep them from starving. They from time to time send men down to Hindoostan who beg for them, and receive supplies from "the faithful" in all parts of India. Lately they have been recruited by hunted sepoys, who like carrying a musket, and have made British India too hot for them to live in.

Their strong Mussulman fanaticism makes them acceptable to the ignorant Jedooms among whom they live, and the coin they bring from India is a mine of wealth to the poor mountaineers. It is likely we will again hear of their dispersion, but we must retain possession of their refuge, the great Mahobun, if we are to secure our frontier villages from being molested by this nest of hornets.—Lahore Chronicle, Oct. 7.

A PRIZE ESSAY.

A prize of the value of five hundred rupees is offered for the best essay written in colloquial Urdu or Hindustani, in the Persian or Roman character, on the following comprehensive subject:—

"Compare the influence of Greek learning on the Arabs under the Abbasside Caliphs of Bagdad and the Ommyyade Caliphs of Cordova, with the subsequent influence of Arabian learning on the reviving European mind after the dark ages; and from the comparison infer the probable influence which the mature intellect of Europe should exercise in its turn, now that it is once more brought in contact with the Mahomedan mind in India."

It may be inferred from the general tenor of this advertisement that its compiler is disposed to anticipate yet greater and more brilliant results from the spread of the European civilisation of the present day than formerly ensued from the cultivation of Greek literature at the Court of Bagdad. We regret that we cannot share such sanguine anticipations. The abstract philosophy of the Greeks was quite in harmony with the dreamy and unpractical temperament of the Eastern sages of that glorious era in the annals of Islamism. The Mahomedan mind, too, was then in a state of unusual ferment, excited by the marvellous progress of Islam and the resplendent glories of the Caliphate. The Mussulman race was at that time the terror of Europe, and under the exhilarating spell of an almost unchecked career of conquest. Whatever they did they did well, for they believed in themselves and scorned the idea of failure. All that, however, is now changed. The Mussulman, shut out from the profession of arms, is shorn of his vitality. His raison d'être is aggression. He cares little for commerce, and looks down upon agriculture. As for the arts and sciences, they are to him still a sealed book, and one that very few have any curiosity to open. Doubtless, if European civilisation should ever make any progress among the Mussulmans of India, the effect will be very startling, for it will be nothing short of the extinction of Islam; but, for our own part, we have not the slightest belief in any further progress being made than in acquiring a superficial acquaintance with the more ordinary phenomena, of natural philosophy. Lectures will be delivered and popular experiments exhibited in illustration of the great discoveries of modern times, but the effect will be no more permanent, and no more deeply seated, than the reflection of moonbeams upon the water. The glory has departed from Islam. Its votaries are no longer flushed with success, no longer confident in themselves. The Mussulman race was never at any time addicted to literary pursuits, with the exception of a few enlightened men patronised and maintained by the Court. In this respect they have changed but little, whether in Egypt, Turkey, Persia, or India; and of this we may be quite certain, that if European ideas should ever really gain ground among the followers of the Prophet, Mahomedanism will at once be supplanted by simple Deism.

The advertisement itself appears to us to be somewhat incoherent and inconsequential in its clauses. We can understand that a very interesting essay might be written on a comparison of the converse influences of Greek learning on the Arabs and of Arabic learning on Europe; but we confess ourselves quite at a loss to see what analogy there exists between such a comparison and the "probable influence which the mature intellect of Europe should exercise" in the present entirely different position of the Mahomedan world. Besides, there are not above a dozen men in Europe who could write such an essay as it ought to be written; and as to expecting the most advanced native scholar to produce anything worthy of the occasion, it would be just as reasonable to ask for grapes from thorns, or figs from thistles.—Bengal Hurkaru, Oct. 2.

THE TIPPETTS AND LLOYD CRIM. CON. CASE.—THE PROSECUTOR'S EVIDENCE.

Alfred Malpas Tippetts.—I am Assistant-Surgeon in her Majesty's service. I was married at Marylebone Church, February 1, 1861. My wife's name was Ellen Watkins. We arrived in Calcutta in October, 1861. In June, 1862, I was appointed to Gwalior. I was then ordered to Agra. I was absent about six days and left my wife with Colonel Maxwell. That was the first time we had been separated. On the 8th July I took my wife to Agra. Captain Lloyd was then on leave. He joined in October. The regiment left Agra in December, 1862, for Fyzabad. I asked the defendant to dinner first on 13th April. On the night of June 19 I first suspected my wife's infidelity. On my return from mess at half-past eleven I went to the bedroom. The door was open. The Chick was down. On passing through the Chick I saw him sitting on the edge of the bed in his shirt and trousers. My wife was in bed. I staggered back into the verandah and broke open the door of the sitting room. I met defendant and knocked him down. He fell, and getting up ran away through the door by which I entered. My wife got up and ran after defendant crying out "Tom! Tom! has he hurt you?" I told her she must leave the house immediately, and she did so with the defendant. My wife was flighty, but I never had occasion to suspect her of anything criminal before this. I had always lived on affectionate terms with her. I never noticed that defendant was paying too much attention to my wife—not more than I thought my friend should do. Defendant dined frequently with me. He abused my hospitality. There is not the slightest ground for saying that I connived at my wife's dishonour. The letters produced are in Captain Lloyd's handwriting.

Cross-examined: I was married on February 1, 1861. I had known my wife five months previously. I met her at Winchester. She was the daughter of a widow. I did not visit her at her mother's house. I don't know why I did not. I became acquainted with her through a mutual friend. I only saw her once at her mother's. Her friends disapproved of my acquaintance, so they sent her away to Taunton. I next saw her on Christmas Eve. Her mother gave her consent to the marriage, because I ran away with her. I was in no regiment then. I was doing duty with the depot battalion at Winchester. I ran away with her on Christmas Day, and I married her on the 1st of February. I seduced her before marriage, unavoidably. My wife's uncle was a maltster, and churchwarden of his parish, another uncle is a station-master. The mutual friend who introduced me to her was a young lady at a pastrycook's. I had had no previous acquaintance with the young lady at the pastrycook's. I don't know why my wife was sent away, except to prevent any intercourse with me. I lived with her, previous to marriage, near the Waterloo Railway Station in London. I took her about with me to the theatres, the Crystal Palace, and to the Argyle-rooms, but only once to the Argyle-rooms. I had frequently been in London and knew the character of the Argyle-rooms. About a fortnight before marriage I took her there about 9 P.M. I took her there at her request. I do not know how she knew of such a place. Young ladies' brothers generally inform their sisters of such places. I did not take her to Cremorne. I know the 60th Rifles. Captain Biggs spoke to me about marrying Miss Watkins; he knew all the circumstances of the case. He was a friend of mine, and I told him all about it. I don't know why I did not marry her before I seduced her. I lived with her for four or five days alone. I could not marry her during those five days, because I had no money at that time. I took my wife home after the marriage, and introduced her to my friends. Captain Lloyd became intimate with my wife in April. I first suspected my wife on the 19th of June; that was the night I found it out. My wife was fond of fun and flighty, and pretty constant in Captain Lloyd's company. I found his letter, after she had eloped, in her writing-desk. I frequently saw my wife receive letters from Captain Lloyd and others. I never saw the replies. Sometimes I have seen them; one about a dog-cart. I am sure Captain Lloyd never drove my wife in it. My wife did not go out in the day time. I was always at home between 9 A.M. and 5 P.M. My hospital work took me from half-past 6 A.M. to about half-past 8 o'clock. I always accompanied my wife on her visits. When I dined out I always returned from 11 P.M. to one or two o'clock next morning. When at home we generally spent the evening after dinner by going into the compound, and having a song. I won't swear that Captain Paterson did not say anything about lending me a stick to thrash my head with. When I say my wife was fond of fun, I mean she is what you would call a "jolly girl." Lloyd was frequently at our house. There were seven or eight balls whilst we were at Fyzabad, besides pic-nics. I always went with her to the balls. Captain Lloyd took my wife away on the evening of the 19th. He remained in the house with her, in her bedroom, whilst she was dressing to go. I stayed in the sitting room whilst they were dressing. I ordered her to leave my house the same night. I did not see her again until I saw her in Calcutta.

To the Court: I have no reason to suppose my wife acted lightly before marriage, except with me.

"My own Darling,—Is it not too bad that I cannot come over to see you, but I must tell you the reason; it is another case of narrow escape. I had left him at mess and was just starting off to my own pet when something put it into my head to go home first. Just as I was leaving the house, in my lad walks, calling for me. I wondered if he came to see where I had gone to. He is here now. He has just caught me having a long conversation with myself (all about my own darling that's never out of my head for one minute), and was very anxious that I should tell him what I was saying. My own Nellie, I feel so proud of you when I look at you in church, looking fifty times as handsome as the whole of them put together, and its dear mouth did look as if it wanted to be kissed, I knew I wanted one very much. I am not so sure that one would have done—have been I fancy something like our leave taking. I am so fond of a kiss when Nellie gives me one from her very heart. My own darling, it did grieve me so very much last evening at the mess. Seeing you in pain I left. I could have done anything in the world to relieve you, but my pet I had to stand by and try to look as if my very heart was not yearning to do something for you. Oh, I find it very hard to restrain myself sometimes and not burst out with my own darling Nellie. I am afraid to keep this longer in case he might take it into his head to be off. I'll keep him if possible until I get your answer, or perhaps it would be better to send salam and write to me some other time. I know my pet is all alone, but darling you know I should have been with you long ago if he was not here. I wonder who he thinks I am writing to.

"YOUR OWN TOM."

The Court said this was not a case for heavy damages, but they were fixed at 8,000 rupees; less would have been sufficient, but for the defendant's ungenerous defence, which implied the husband's consent to his own dishonour.

TIPPETTS V. LLOYD.

The case of Tippetts v. Lloyd, which has just been tried in the High Court, is one which calls for something more than a mere expression of opinion upon the immorality which has transpired. The facts, as they first appeared, were simple enough. Dr. Tippetts was an assistant-surgeon attached to the 35th Regiment. His wife was what is called an "exceedingly jolly" young woman, but appears to have behaved herself generally with propriety; though it is difficult to believe that she did not occasionally exhibit those characteristics which especially belong to the modern fast young lady. At any rate, she permitted herself to receive "marked" attentions from unmarried men, and especially from Captain Lloyd of the same regiment. The habits and customs of some Mofussil stations, as we intimated a week or two since in dealing with the Dinapore scandals, but too often admit of this sort of thing being carried on to the verge of impropriety. But Captain Lloyd was something more than a mere conventional sinner; for, in addition to the constant visiting by which unoccupied men seek to while away their time in this country, he indulged in clandestine visits to Mrs. Tippetts, without the knowledge of that lady's husband, and evidently with the intention of blinding Dr. Tippetts to the extent which the interview had reached. At length, one evening, Dr. Tippetts, at the suggestion of his wife, went over to the mess to play a game at whist, and having returned rather earlier than usual, he found Captain Lloyd present in Mrs. Tippetts's bedroom under circumstances which left him no doubt that he was dishonoured. A scuffle ensued, but Mrs. Tippetts only exhibited an anxiety that her paramour should not be hurt, and accordingly Dr. Tippetts ordered the pair to leave his house, which they immediately did, and henceforth resided in Captain Lloyd's quarters as man and wife. The usual law proceedings followed. Dr. Tippetts sued Captain Lloyd in the High Court, and procured Rs. 8,000 damages, an amount which was certainly not intended to represent the value of the loss of such a worthless wife, but seems to have been fixed as some sort of punishment upon her still more worthless seducer.

Now, there are two features in the present case which are well worthy of general attention; the first, as showing the selfishness and vulgarity of modern seducers, and the second as showing in the most prominent manner possible, the evils which may arise from a hasty and irregular marriage with a "fast" young lady. The conduct of Captain Lloyd seems to have been wholly wanting in those sentiments and chivalrous feelings which sometimes palliate, though they never can excuse, such illicit attachments. He cared not for the character of the woman who chose to leave her husband in order to gratify the vicious inclinations of herself and her paramour; for, in the course of the trial, Captain Lloyd, or his advisers for him, did their best to cast aspersions upon the character of the ex-Mrs. Tippetts, and to prove it possible that at the time of her marriage with the Assistant-Surgeon, she was more adapted by taste and inclination to be a mistress than a wife. After all, little was proved beyond the imprudence of youth and the growing fastness of the age; whilst it was tolerably plain that, but for the deliberate arts and marked attentions of Captain Lloyd to one whom he knew was the wife of another, and to one who he knew could only be degraded by such arts and attentions, the marriage might have turned out, under the influence of a young family, a tolerably happy one after all.

But whilst there can be only one opinion upon the character in which Captain Lloyd has permitted himself to appear in the High Court, still it may not be out of place to dwell somewhat upon the evils which arise in picking up wives without sufficient consideration, and in treating such wives at any time, whether before or after marriage, as even a man of the world would only treat a mistress. Whilst strongly censuring the production of such evidence in a law court, evidence, too, which excites an indignation calculated, as in the present instance, to swell the amount of damages, and thus to defeat the mercenary object for which it was dragged to light, we see no reason why the facts, having been once published, should be permitted to fall into oblivion, apprehending as we do the important moral lesson which they involve. The story of Dr. Tippetts's courtship is apparently as follows:—He was a young assistant-surgeon attached to the Depot Battalion at Winchester, and likewise attached to a young lady whom he had seen at a pastrycook's at that city. This young lady was apparently a customer at the pastrycook's, and there is reason to believe that she was sensible of the admiration which had been apparently manifested towards her in some sort of way by young Tippetts, of the Depot Battalion. Accordingly, the pair were introduced by a mutual friend, namely, the young lady who officiated behind the counter at the pastrycook's. Now, it turns out that the object of Dr. Tippetts's admiration was respectable. Her mother was a widow, her uncle was a maltster and churchwarden, and her friends generally objected to the addresses of the young doctor. Accordingly, the love-sick pair ran away. In former times runaway marriages used to be the great feature in comedies and romances, and young ladies of the Lydia Languish school pined for the ecclat which attends such elopements. But in the present age such proceedings are very properly regarded with suspicion; and a young lady who can run away with a lover before she is made his wife is sometimes considered to be not altogether faultless or stainless. Be that as it may, the wife, in the present instance, was located, before marriage, as a mistress, and not only consented to be treated as a mistress, but was taken by her husband, at her own request, to a place which only kept mistresses, and characters even worse, ever think of visiting—namely, the Argyle Rooms. A wife who betrayed such tendencies as these required, to say the least, a little more attention and duenna-like watchfulness than appears to have been given by the husband in the present case, and more, it is admitted, than wives who are courted and married in the ordinary humdrum fashion generally require. Romantic love affairs carried on after the irregular fashion of the present case may be very pleasant reading in novels and magazine stories, and occasionally excite a desire for imitation in the minds of those who combine youth and inexperience with a romantic turn; but, on the whole, these runaway matches and Gretna-green elopements, though occasionally turning out very happily, are evidences not only of a fervid attachment, but of a decided weakness of character on the part of the young lady, and consequently have a tendency to come to a similar ending as the present miserable affair. So much for the present case, from which it would at least appear that what are called the guilty pair are, in this instance, extremely well matched. Perhaps the ex-Mrs. Tippetts, in the mere character of an adulteress, would have proved too virtuous for so exemplary an individual as Captain Lloyd; but the latter gentleman has done his best, in the High Court, to blacken her character sufficiently to degrade it to the level of his own, and now stands forth in the unenviable character of the modern seducer, who first debauches another man's wife, and then endeavours to escape the penalty by aspersing that of his victim, and traducing the man whose happiness he has destroyed.

EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.

The Eastern Bengal Railway was completed throughout, a course of 110 miles, and opened to the public for goods and passenger traffic in November last. It is said to be constructed in a very satisfactory and substantial manner, and the traffic, according to Mr. Danver's report, has been steadily improving since the first opening of the line. It was proposed to continue the line to Dacca, and negotiations on this subject went on for some time between the directors of the company and Sir Charles Wood, as to the terms on which the proposed continuation should be carried out.

From the publication, however, by the Government of India in the Calcutta Gazette, of a despatch of Sir Charles Wood, it seems these negotiations have come somewhat prematurely to a close. The Secretary of State for India offered, it appears, the construction of the proposed extension to the Eastern Bengal Company, "as part and parcel of their original undertaking, with a guaranteed interest on the necessary capital of 4½ per cent. per annum." These terms, however, the shareholders of the railway have declined to accept, and so Sir Charles Wood now authorises the Governor-General—in the event of his considering any immediate extension necessary—to make arrangements with some other company, "within the limits already sanctioned for grant of assistance to unguaranteed companies"—or to propose to the Secretary of State, "such other scheme as he may consider desirable for the construction of this, or any other lines of railway in Eastern Bengal." These proceedings show, that although the Secretary of State has thought it necessary to put an end to the guarantee system in its original integrity, he cannot make the companies who have had the benefit of the 5 per cent. agree to anything less—even to the small reduction of a quarter per cent.

The shareholders may have shown a wise discretion in refusing to accept less for the proposed extension, than they were in receipt of for the line already completed; and the Government of India will have difficulty in finding any other company ready and willing to undertake, what the Eastern Bengal Company has just declined.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE DISTURBED DISTRICT.—The up-country papers are, naturally enough, puzzled to account for so large a force being sent into the disturbed district north of the Ensufzai country. The appointment of Sir Neville Chamberlain to the chief command looks as if something more serious was intended than the extermination of the Hindostani rebels in the Sittana territory, or the pacification of the neighbouring tribes. There will not be less than 6,000 men of all arms, including at least a thousand European soldiers, and a very strong force of artillery. What, then, can be the object of such a formidable expedition? Is it intended to occupy in permanence the hill country contiguous to the British frontier? Or has any intelligence been received from Afghanistan which renders it prudent to keep a body of troops together, ready for immediate service, without creating suspicion of jealousy? However this may be, it is certain that a march into the hills will be an agreeable recreation to the force thus employed, and at the same time serve as a practical lesson in the art and science of campaigning.—Hurkaru, Oct. 17.

UMRITSUR AND LAHORE RAILWAY.—We are glad to note a steady increase in the receipts of Umritsur and Lahore section of the Punjab railway, over corresponding periods of last year in the face of a 33 per cent. increase of 3rd class passenger rates. Our conservatives predicted that as soon as the novelty wore off the people would cease to use the rail and return to the antiquated ekka. So far from this being the case it is clear that the number of 3rd class passengers, at present the mainstay of the line, has increased more than 70 per cent. The line has become such a necessity that a day's interruption would create a greater sensation than the advent of the Governor-General.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 20.

CAPTAIN LENDHOLM.—The death of Captain Lendholm, formerly in command of the Niobe, is announced in the Straits Times of the 19th September. It happened under peculiarly painful circumstances. Captain Lendholm was serving out his sentence of six years' penal servitude in the Singapore Jail, for having in a moment of passion fired a loaded pistol at one of his own seamen, and slightly wounded him in the knee. The punishment was more than any man of high spirit could endure. Captain Lendholm felt his position most acutely, and died suddenly while reading a letter from home, just received by the Mail. He was found quite dead with the open letter in his hand, and several unopened lying by his side. He died, if ever man did, of a broken heart.

CURIOUS CASE.—A few days ago we extracted a singular paragraph from the Oudh Gazette, reporting the death of a native under very mysterious circumstances. It stated that Mr. Morrison, the head gardener of the Wingfield Park, observing one of his men in a somewhat comatose state while making believe to be at work, roused him with a shove, which caused him to stagger and fall on all fours. On the following morning Mr. Morrison was informed that the man had died during the night of cholera, but not very long afterwards he was astonished to find himself arrested on the charge of having caused the deceased's death by kicking him. A post mortem examination was accordingly made, which demonstrated the perfect healthiness of the liver, spleen, and lungs, and also of the heart, with the exception of a congestion on the left ventricle, but also discovered in the stomach unmistakable traces of the action of poison. A subsequent chymical analysis proved, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that death was caused by a large dose of arsenic, which would account for the partial congestion of the heart. And what was the motive for this suicide? Simply and solely the belief that Mr. Morrison would ever after be haunted by the ghost of the man whose dignity he had offended by a hasty shove. It is not a little strange that such sensitiveness should be felt about trifles that indicate only the punctiliousness of false pride, while such callousness exists with regard to truth and honour.

SHAJEHANPORE, Oct. 20.—The 17th N. I. marched in yesterday morning and left again today for Futtighur en route to their destination. H.M.'s 88th with head quarters and right wing leave this on the 2nd proximo, for Cawnpore. Colonel G. V. Maxwell, who has commanded them so many years, marches the regiment down, and will then take his farewell of the Rangers for his brigade command at Delhi. All here will regret his departure. The 88th came to Shajehanpore nigh three years ago in a sickly condition, they leave it in the full flush of health. H.M.'s 40th have every reason to congratulate themselves on having been told off to a station which by the untiring skill and judgment of the local authorities, has been made a model of what an Indian cantonment should be.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 22.

THE VICTORIA COLLEGE AT AGRA.—The Delhi Gazette describes at some length the proceedings that took place on the 25th September at the first half-yearly distribution of prizes at the Victoria College at Agra. There were present on the occasion two Sudder judges, the Brigadier, and "other small deer;" Mr. J. H. Batten, c.s., occupying the chair. Twenty one scholarships and eighty prize-books were distributed among the 351 students who attend that useful institution. Of the total number 314 are Hindoos, 25 Mahomedans, and 12 Christians, all of whom, with the exception of 30 really indigent lads, pay a school fee varying from four annas to three rupees per memsem, besides a matriculation fee of one rupee. Instruction is administered through the medium of 35 classes, of which 18 belong to the English department; while the Oriental department is divided into one Arabic, four Persian, seven Oordoo, one Sanscrit, and four Hindee classes. The general progress made by the students during the past half-year is reported to have been satisfactory.—Hurkaru.

LAHORE, Oct. 6.—By a communication just received from Peshawur, I learn that all is peaceful up there, and that Caubul is equally so. Mahomed Azim, the new ruler, has, it is said, received an additional lac of rupees to his jagheer, and is, therefore, satisfied to remain on very friendly terms with us. This is very agreeable to our Government just now, who require all the available troops it can lay its hands on in the disturbed districts lower down. I before told you of the force now congregating towards Sitani, the native portion of which consists of Probyn's Horse, the 14th, 20th, and 32nd N.I. A European light field battery likewise proceeds to the scene of disturbance. Colonel Hope, of H.M.'s 71st Regiment, will command the column. Besides the corps above stated it is thought the 3rd, 5th, and 6th Punjab Irregulars, now on the march from Kohat, will also be pushed on towards Nowshera, which will be the rendezvous of the army. I hear many rumours as to Sir Neville Chamberlain giving up his command at so critical a period as the present. Jealousy is evidently at the bottom of it all, let the authorities put what face upon it they like. It is monstrous, I think, to place Gen. Chamberlain under such a man as Gen. Garvock, which has been done by giving the latter the command of the Peshawur Division.—Oct. 8.—The disaffection existing at Bawalpore, though entirely confined to that place, is exciting some attention just now. It is said the Rajah is hemmed in in one of the forts by his own people, and without the means of extricating himself. The Punjab Government properly refuses to interfere at this stage, though I fear we shall ultimately be compelled to step in and quiet matters. While this state of affairs continues, the Lahore and Mooltan road can scarcely be considered a safe route for travellers. The Sittani business is not at all diminishing, but, on the contrary, daily attracting greater attention. The expedition now being assembled at Nowshera to enter the country is a far more formidable force than that which has hitherto been sent. It will consist of not less than 7,000 men, of which about 1,500 will be Europeans. It is thought everything will be in readiness to commence the march into Kashghar by the 20th inst., and there is no doubt but some hard work is in store for the force. The Commander-in-Chief and staff are reported to have been in Umritsur yesterday; they don't pass through Lahore, but proceed north by a nearer route to Sealkote and other large stations in that direction, and it is probable his Excellency may have an opportunity of formally witnessing frontier goings on.

INDIAN IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.—During the first seven months of this year Great Britain sent to India £9,414,593 worth of goods, or half a million more than in the same period of 1862, and very little less than in the first seven months of 1861. In the first six months of this year India exported to Great Britain £12,917,681 worth of goods, against £7,684,373 in 1862 and only £5,288,925 in 1861. Most of this enormous increase is due to cotton, of which in the first half of 1861 we exported only £1,683,180 worth, in 1862 £3,914,012 worth, and this year £9,193,049 worth. After the great start which we noticed in the piece-goods trade in Calcutta in July last there was a reaction. But the recent news from America has revived activity in the market, and there is every prospect of large sales at high prices after the holidays.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.—A most determined attempt to commit suicide was made about eleven o'clock on Saturday night, by a private in H.M.'s 48th Regiment. The rash act was perpetrated by the unhappy man placing the muzzle of his rifle under his chin, and discharging the contents of the barrel through his mouth, so that they passed out at the nose, causing a terrible wound, and smashing the upper jaw to pieces. It appears from the statements of his comrades, that the unfortunate man was labouring under an attack of delirium tremens. We understand that hopes are entertained of his ultimate recovery; but he will be a fearful looking object for the rest of his days, and totally unfit for the service.—Oudh Gazette, Oct. 14.

CHRISTIANS IN INDIA.—A Scinde paper has the following remarks on Christians in India:—"There is no section of the Indian community, not one of its races, not one of its castes, from the 'Mehtur' to the Brahmin among Hindus; the Parsees, whether 'Kudmee,' or 'Rusmee,' whether Indian, or Persian; the Mahomedans, 'Shea,' as well as 'Soonee,' but assist, foster, and protect one another, the Christian alone having his hand ever raised against his fellow Christian; and therefore it is that Christianity does not thrive in the land. Ask the lady of a household why her maid servant is a Hindu, her butler a Mussulman, her coachman a Parsee, and her other servants heathens, instead of Christians, and she will tell you, archly, that native Christians are a worthless lot; go into her husband's office, and as a reason for your finding there other than Christians, you will be told that the latter are, in this country, a most insolent, untrustworthy, and drunken set. To this prejudice is it owing that everything worth having in the land, in the way of situations or contracts, is bestowed on those of alien faiths; hence Christians are consigned to poverty and obscurity, from which they seldom or never emerge; they, as a natural consequence, degenerate, and wise people declare that it is owing to the enervating and depressing effects of the climate. The Christian of India, obtaining a bad character from those who should be his friends, is despised by all around; the Missionaries find the ears of the people closed to their preachings; because to become a Christian is to become an outcast, spurned by your own kith and kin, and ignored by those whose faith you have embraced. This is a harrowing state of things, and one that may well conjure up reflections far from flattering to the dominant race. Is there no remedy, we ask; cannot the pulpit and press combine, and exert the weight of their influence towards ameliorating the degraded condition of the Christians of India; and cannot government be induced to place the race on a status of which it has been so unjustly deprived? That many Christians in the country are undeserving of consideration, cannot be denied; but then, encourage those who are upright, and inclined to be honest, industrious, and steady; and offer inducements to those who are not, to forsake their evil courses, and adopt modes of life more in consonance with the principles of morality and of their religion."

DISPUTES AMONGST THE AMERICAN MISSIONARIES AT TONGHOO.—At last there is some hope that an end will be put to those sad disputes among the American Missionaries at Tonghoo, which have done so much to injure the great work of Dr. and Mrs. Mason among the Karens. In the course of his cold weather tour the Chief-Commissioner of British Burmah will personally inquire into the whole matter. Meanwhile, the executive committee of the American Baptist Missionary Union have done what, if non-Episcopalian Missions had a decent organisation on the spot, would have been effected long ago. A deputation, consisting of the Rev. Dr. Kincaid and Messrs. Stevens and Haswell, is now at Tonghoo, inquiring into the disputes, and with the earnest desire to bring about such a reconciliation that the good work may not be impeded. Mrs. Mason now publicly states that her god-language theories were in no sense inspired, and that she never pretended they were. She declares—"If I have suggested anything contrary to the Holy Scriptures, or what Evangelical Christians cannot receive, I shall most cheerfully abandon it for ever." Meanwhile, she and Dr. Mason continue to aid the civil administration by inducing the nomadic Karens to settle in the plains, clothed and in their right mind.

A SUBSTITUTE FOR QUININE.—The Englishman tells us of a gentleman who, finding his liberality in the administration of quinine gratuitously to the natives rather imposed upon, substituted Worcestershire sauce. The applications increased from hundreds to thousands, and this wonderful sauce was found to be a cure for "cough, small-pox, old age, bad eyes, and a broken finger." Warburg must see to this, or Lea and Perrins will drive him out of the field.

VOLUNTEER CORPS IN INDIA.—Volunteer corps in India seem to have everywhere died a natural death. According to the Mofussilite, Colonel Rowland Money has, contrary to the wishes of the Lieutenant-Governor, disarmed the Allahabad Regiment, although when he deprived those gallant fellows of their arms many of them had already taken to their heels. "There was much of sound and fury when the corps was first formed, and we have a distinct recollection of a page of the Government Gazette being embellished with a string of aristocratic names. We heard of dashing uniforms being purchased, and of cock's feather plumes waving proudly in the morning air. But tidings reached us of sore dissensions which, we knew too well, would prove internecine to the corps. The commanding officer was not a favourite, albeit as brave as Mars, a god of hunting, and of whatever exercises or amusements which partook of the manly and warlike. But the rifles have wandered back to armament, and the swords of the officers are sheathed in unearned repose. Fuimus, Fumus. We forget how many regiments Lucknow has possessed, but they have not been few; and we recently saw a suggestion in the Oude Gazette that one more attempt be made. In Lahore, Simla, and Nagpore, in Calcutta and Madras, the 'movement' still exists, but we fear in a very weak and sickly condition. Medals should at once be struck off, and presented to the stanch remaining few. The inscription should be the family motto which the Marquis of Aylesbury and the Earl of Elgin possess in common, and the medals which bear it would become heir-looms to generations yet unborn—Fuimus. When a certain regiment we have named was in the zenith of its glory, the col. commandant rode one morning on to the parade-ground in a sour temper and winter uniform. Conceiving that he had not been properly saluted by the drill sergeant, he wheeled his charger towards the N. C.O., and demanded a satisfactory salute. 'This is not the first time you have treated me with disrespect,' shouted the gallant commandant, 'and you know, as well as possible, that I am colonel of the regiment.' There were thirteen volunteers present that morning, five of whom were officers."

ROBBERY OF MEDICAL STORES.—A few weeks ago we (Madras Athenæum) alluded rather mysteriously to the fact that some articles of great value were found missing in a certain medical department at the Presidency, and that the case was then undergoing an investigation; but as, beyond a few changes in the internal working of the department, the matter appeared to have been overlooked by the authorities, in consequence of their inability to bring the charge home to any particular individual, we avoided further allusion to it. On the 12th October, however, we regret to mention, another robbery was detected in the self-same department—which we may now state is the Government Medical Stores at the Presidency—one of the principal employes therein being discovered in the very act of walking off with three cases of pocket instruments. This most unexpected discovery, and the general estimation in which the criminated party has been hitherto held, caused no little sensation in the fort. Constables were immediately summoned, the Commissioner of Police sent for, and all business in the stores suspended for the day. The whole affair is under investigation, but until the decision of the police is known one way or the other, we shall abstain from further particulars.

TAX ON COTTON FABRICS.—It will scarcely be believed that the Government is collecting the tax upon cotton fabrics at the 5 per cent. ad valorem rate as fixed in 1860. As free traders, we are glad to see such a step adopted, but must still entertain the opinion that if the tax was intended to be 5 per cent. on the real value, the rise in cotton, which has trebled the value of the manufactured article, should have necessitated a re-adjustment of the fixed values.—Englishman, Oct. 12.

LAWIS JONATHAN NEWBOND, the East Indian who caused the death of an old poultry-dealer by a series of acts of brutal violence, has been sentenced to fourteen years' transportation.

NANA DHOONDOO PUNT.—The man taken at Ajmere as the rebel Nana Dhoondoo Punt still remains a prisoner in gaol. It is certain that the authorities who captured him, and who recognised him with so much certainty from a descriptive roll which happens to describe no part of his person, would be glad to get out of the ridiculous position in which this affair involves them. The release of the man must follow, sooner or later; and it is his declared determination to sue Government for damages to a large amount for false arrest and false imprisonment; and, with the state of the law as it stands, it is not easy to perceive a loophole for their escape; for "nothing can be said to be done or believed in good faith which is done or believed without due care and attention."

THE MAHARAJAH OF GWALIOR.—We are glad to receive so favourable an account of the Maharajah of Gwalior. He has not an affable manner with those who are intimate with him, and his unfortunate stammering prevents his addressing persons in public, which is put down to dislike of Europeans. He is entitled to eat pawn and have his spittoon carried into the Viceroy's durbar, and he naturally does the same when he entertains company. But he is said to be a clever, determined man, quite aware of the advantages of improving his country and its administration, and alive to the manner in which he is checked by ignorant Mahratta pundits. He has given a twenty years' settlement to the whole country, and has, from the beginning of the present Hindoo official year, divided the duties of collecting revenue and of administering justice heretofore amalgamated in the same persons. This doubles the expense of his administration. He further allots one lakh a-year for roads, of which Government receives half, up to the end of 1866, as his share of the construction of the Agra and Bombay road. He maintains an efficient police on the Agra and Bombay road, and has made it quite safe.

SIR JAMES BROOKE, K.C.B.—The Rajah of Sarawak, Sir James Brooke, K.C.B., being about to proceed to Europe, the subjoined address was presented to him on August 21, signed by all the Sarawak Government officials with the exception of one. In the evening of the same day a ball and supper took place, at which between fifty and sixty of the European inhabitants were present. On the 23rd the Rajah took farewell of the chiefs and people, who expressed their great regret at his departure and their warm attachment to his person and government. The Rajah embarked on board her Majesty's ship Rifleman to proceed to Singapore on the 24th ult., being the twenty-second anniversary of his rule in Sarawak:—"Rajah—Upon the occasion of your approaching departure for England, we, the undersigned officers of Government, desire to convey to your Highness our devotion to your person and our fidelity to the State of Sarawak; we obey your commands as the Rajah of Sarawak, and the commands of your representative administering the affairs of the State by your appointment; and we acknowledge or obey no person whomsoever excepting those having your commission to exercise lawful authority. Accept, Rajah, our assurances of fidelity to the established Constitution, and of attachment to your person and government. Our faithful services are now, as they ever have been, rendered to promote the peace and prosperity of the community, and to maintain your rights as rajah and founder of Sarawak.—Sarawak, Aug. 8."—Singapore Free Press.

THE CAMP AT LAHORE will be formed into two divisions and four brigades. The two divisional commanders will be General Cunningham and Colonel Stisted, H.M.'s 93rd. It is expected that Lieutenant-colonel Thompson, H.M.'s 82nd, will be attached to head-quarters as a temporary Assistant adjutant-general of infantry, and Captain Scotland, 7th Dragoon Guards, of cavalry. Lord G. Paget will command the cavalry, and Brigadier-general Brind, the infantry. The camp will form about the first week in December, and go through all the preliminary drills, &c., till His Excellency joins about the middle or end of December.

MILITARY.—We hear that Colonel Hope, H.M.'s 71st Light Infantry, will command the column now being assembled at Nowshera, intended for the pacification of the Sittana fanatics. It is reported that the 3rd, 5th, and 6th Punjab Irregulars, now on the march from Kohat to Peshawur, will form part of the force now assembling at Nowshera. The following troops have received orders for service:—14th N.I., 20th N.I., 32nd N.I., 11th Bengal Cavalry (wing). The above marched out of Peshawur on the morning of the 4th for the Hazara frontier. A light field battery of European Artillery, under Lieutenant Clarke, marched on the 5th. The 71st Highlanders will march as soon as carriage can be procured, and also the 51st probably. Besides the above, the 3rd, 5th, and 6th Punjab Irregulars, under Col. Vaughan, proceed to the scene of action, where are already stationed the 101st Europeans, De Bude's Battery of Artillery, and other troops.—Lahore Chronicle, Oct. 7. We understand that Lieutenant Boyd, R.A., on whom a Court of Inquiry was assembled not long since, has been offered the option of a court-martial, or the resignation of his commission; and that he has elected the former alternative. The special court of inquiry on Captain Danbuz, R.A., reassembles this day, at the messhouse of H.M.'s 19th Hussars, for further investigation of the charges of violence towards the Government Gomashita, and other natives, when on the march in the early part of the year to Saugor, which we noticed some time ago. We regret to mention that the 15th Regiment N.I., Lodianna Sikhs, will march on the 15th inst. for Dorundah; their destination, as previously announced, having been changed from Peshawur. A round of farewell parties is being given to the officers of this corps, who have rendered themselves such general favourites in the station. We learn that the 36th Regiment N.I., that was to have come here from Lullutpore, is to march to Barrackpore, and that the 33rd N.I. (late Allahabad Levy) is to come here in its stead, from Assam, whence it marched on the 20th ult. These arbitrary and sudden changes are very unfair, and occasion both inconvenience and loss to officers. We know of at least one officer of the 36th N.I. who purchased a house in our cantonments on the faith of the general relief published.—Oude Gazette.

BAREILLY, Oct. 12.—Our worthy chaplain leaves us to-day. All who have read the Delhi Gazette during the past four or five years are familiar with the name of Cowie. In Bareilly it has become a household word. Simply, yet faithfully and earnestly, working in his Master's vineyard—whether in his place in church, or by the bedside of the sick, or encouraging the teachers and the taught in schools, or as the father and friend of the Soldiers' Institute, the hospitable entertainer of soldiers' children, the founder, it may be said, of a well-conducted and hopeful Christian village, and kind chaplain of all, the Rev. W. G. Cowie has established a name which may vie with that of the most hard-working curate in England, and which must go far to raise the reputation of the chaplain in India. Acting upon the Bishop of London's maxim, that a clergyman should never consider himself off duty, Mr. Cowie has, with untiring and unceasing energy, laboured for the good of his parishioners; and carries away with him (in the language of the station-order referring to his departure) "the hearty good wishes of all classes of society." Whilst so much is being written disparaging to the Indian chaplain, it is gratifying to be able to point to individual instances, and I have known several, of true Christian worth and influence such as Mr. Cowie has shown and exercised here. May his mantle fall upon the chaplain who succeeds him!—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 17.

CAPTAIN WROUGHTON, we sincerely regret to say, has been afflicted with an attack of apoplexy and paralysis, and his medical advisers have recommended an immediate departure to Europe. Nothing we could say on the occasion would adequately express the sympathising sorrow that will be felt by the gallant officer's personal friends at this station, to whom his sterling good qualities have endeared him.—Oude Gazette.

THE LATE MAHARAJEE JINDA KOUR.—Some sympathy having been expressed in the English papers, with the late departed and lamented Mesalina of the Punjab, who was buried like a dog, it is as well to inquire what is the family custom of Maharaja Runjeet Singh on this subject. Maharaja Runjeet Singh was burnt outside the Lahore Fort Gate, and with him a couple of wives, and a half dozen of slave girls were also burnt. Any one who doubts this can inspect the Cenotaph raised by the British Government to commemorate the event. Each of the immolated females is commemorated by a little lump of masonry. About five-and-twenty of the Maharaja's widows, and a couple of hundred of his slaves girls declined the honour, and enjoy pensions of the British Government to this day. Maharaja Runjeet Singh killed his own mother with his own hand. The admirers of the Maharaja talk of this as an amiable indiscretion on the part of their hero, and justify it by the astounding fact that Maharaja Runjeet Singh's father also killed Maharaja Runjeet Singh's mother with his own hand also. So the Maharajee Jinda Kour who was placed out of sight after death in the Kensall Green Cemetery has got off very cheap indeed. By the immemorial custom of her race she should have been burnt with her husband when he died. We suppose that it was considered hopeless to make a "suttee," or good woman, of one so deplorably bad. By the well-established custom of his nominal family, Maharaja Dhuleep Singh ought to have killed his mother. She really has no cause to complain; her son has buried her "like a dog," but her husband and her husband's father killed their mothers like dogs.—Lahore Chronicle, Oct. 7.

THE DELHI RAILWAY.—It is satisfactory to us to learn that after the many delays that have taken place in the matter of the Delhi Railway, the home authorities have at last come to a decision. It has been definitively resolved to sanction the line, and the Local Government have issued instructions for its immediate commencement. We may, therefore, soon hear of a day having been fixed for turning the first sod at Umritsur of a new and important line which will connect Mooltan, and ultimately Kurrahee with Calcutta. We wish the line success in proportion to the energy brought to bear on its completion.

MILITARY ORPHAN FUND.—According to a recent number of the Official Gazette, it appears that the management of the Military Orphan Press has already been taken up by Government, but with reference to the assumption of the management of the Orphan Fund, and all the property belonging thereto, the Government of India has written to the Secretary of State, soliciting further instructions on various points connected with that subject.—Hurkaru.

MADAGASCAR.—The overland Sentinel of Maurice of the 5th of September thus refers to the threatening aspect of affairs in Madagascar:—"The rumour continues to spread as to the King being still alive. Another revolution at Tananarivo is reported in the same vague manner. But it seems more certain that the Hovas are fortifying Tamatave to prepare against the attack of the French; and a correspondence which we received by the Bayonian on the 21st of August states that the Hovas will be able to do a good deal of mischief before the tricolour floats upon the Fort of Tamatave."

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—We learn from the Delhi Gazette that the Commander-in-Chief reached Narkunda on the 7th October, after a ride of forty-four miles, without once tumbling off his horse. On the 8th His Excellency and staff proposed to march some twenty miles on the road to Dhurumsala, Chumba, Islamabad, and Srinuggur, whence they will return via Murree, to Peshawur. At that station will probably take place the junction of their Excellencies' camps about the 9th or 10th December.

THE TRIAL OF DR. COLENZO.—The Graaff-Reinet Advertiser says that "Dr. Cotterill, the Anglican Bishop of Graham's Town, has been appointed assessor to his metropolitan, Dr. Gray, in examining the charge of heresy to which Dr. Colenzo is to answer."

HOOGHLY.—By private letters from the interior of Hooghly and Burdwan we learn that in consequence of the embankment of the river Damoodah having given way, several of the adjacent villages have been flooded. Travellers have been detained for several days, waiting to cross the river, which had there assumed a formidable aspect. It is also apprehended that the waters which stood on low lands for several days consecutively will have greatly injured the standing cereal crops.

CAPTAIN SMITH, OF THE 3RD N.I., is under arrest at Lucknow, pending a court of inquiry into some circumstances connected with a recent prosecution of his against a billiard marker for stealing billiard balls. The arrest followed immediately after the marker was convicted by Mr. Lane, Officiating Deputy Commissioner, and sentenced to a year's rigorous imprisonment. It is believed there is diversity of opinion in the regiment about these billiard balls.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 17.

THE SILKWORM IN KASHMIR.—The Delhi Gazette states that "Dr. Orto, who was deputed by the Italian Government to inquire into the condition of the silkworm in Kashmir, was, during his sojourn in the valley this season, so entirely satisfied with their freedom from the European epidemic, that he has purchased 26,000 ounces of eggs, and is now on his way with them to Kurrahee and Europe."

DEATH OF MR. G. W. COLLEDGE.—The Mofussilite announces the death from brain fever of Mr. George Wellstead Colledge, c.s., officiating magistrate and collector of Boolundshuhur. "Mr. Colledge," says our contemporary, "entered the service ten years ago; he was a very hard working and zealous officer, and an honest and single-minded gentleman."—Hurkaru, Oct. 13.

THE LATE EX-KING OF DELHI.—We hear that a petition on behalf of the son of the late ex-King of Delhi has been presented to the Secretary of State, praying that as he was a minor when the mutiny broke out in the N. W. Provinces, and as he himself is not a convict, some consideration should be shown to him and to his widowed mother.

CHOLERA AT LUCKNOW.—We regret to learn that cholera has again broken out in the European cantonments at Lucknow. Four fatal cases have occurred in H.M.'s 48th Regiment, and one in H.M.'s 107th in camp at Murriao. Dr. Shelton has been summoned by telegraph from Simla.

A JOINT-STOCK COMPANY is being formed on the limited liability principle for the conveyance of passengers and goods between Calcutta and Darjeeling, and for providing suitable hotel accommodation at that Sanitarium.

THE 33RD R.N.I., under command of major E. Longmore, is expected at the Presidency this day from Assam, en route to Lucknow. This corps is to be relieved by the 30th R. N. I., which has already commenced its march from that city for its new destination.—Hurkaru, Oct. 16.

LUCKNOW, Oct. 19.—On Wednesday next we are to have grand doings on the occasion of the marriage of Colonel Le Geyt Bruce, Commanding Royal Artillery, to Miss Chalmers, sister of Capt. Chalmers, of the Commissariat.

DR. WYLIE, officiating superintendent of the Meerut Central Prison, has been appointed residency surgeon at Mewar, and will be succeeded by Dr. Pilcher, from Bolundshuhur.

THE 35TH R.N.I., under command of Major Dennyss, now quartered at Doorundah, will march for Lucknow on the 15th Oct., and relieve the 13th R.N.I. at that station.

AN INDIAN "BRADSHAW" has been started by Mr. Copley, the Secretary of the Royal Printing Company.

THE BANK OF BENGAL raised its rates of discount one per cent. all round on the 10th October.

MADRAS.

WRECKS IN THE MADRAS ROADS.

Yesterday was a sad occasion for the shipping in the Madras Roads, and may be recorded as one of those rare but disastrous visitations which we are at intervals called upon to chronicle in connection with the North-east Monsoon. The wind, which had from about midnight of Sunday preserved a north-westerly tendency, suddenly changed about daylight of yesterday to a decided north-easter; at which it continued the whole day. Early in the morning the "High Surf" flag was hoisted at the Master Attendant's, and was kept flying till about ten o'clock. The vessels in the roads were then signalled to "strike top-gallant masts," followed shortly afterwards by the order to "cut and slip," which was kept hoisted for the remainder of the day. At about ten o'clock the barque Adelaide intimated that she had parted her cable, and shortly afterwards made to sea. By this time most of the other large vessels and some of the native craft had begun to follow her example. At about noon the barque Punjab began to show signs of uneasiness, and after parting anchor commenced drifting ashore. She was specially signalled to make to sea, but in trying to do so she became unmanageable, and straightway bore along for the shore. All that could possibly be done was tried to put her about, but at this very hour the surf had risen terribly, and the wind was setting in with renewed force. The vessel tried the effect of her canvas, but that was of little aid, for she was now rolling about very heavily, and, as we have stated, was fast gaining the surf. In a few minutes she touched the sand opposite the north-east corner of the fort, and soon became a hopeless fixture. It is impossible to describe the intensity of interest which her condition excited on shore. Multitudes were collected along the beach, notwithstanding the heavy rain, which kept pouring down at intervals. There was, also, a great number of Europeans and East Indians, who afterwards helped in rendering such aid as was required. The Governor, attended by his aid-de-camp, Dr. Chipperfield, Mr. Dalrymple, Captain Crowther, and Mr. Marshall (the master attendant and his two assistants), were present at the scene of disaster throughout the day, and were untiring in their efforts to afford relief. The surf was absolutely impassable by boats of any description, so that after the Punjab had dropped anchor within the surf, at a little distance from the shore, a rocket with a cradle attached was thrown across from the shore, by means of which the passengers and crew began to disembark. The Punjab is a vessel of 559 tons register, and was consigned to Messrs. Arbuthnot and Co., having just come from Calcutta, with a cargo of piece goods. This unfortunate wreck was but the first of a continuation of "driftings" in quick succession, which terminated late last evening, with a scene of no less than nine native dhonies, all stranded high and dry on the beach; only one solitary barque, the Uncas, being left in the Roads. One dhony, we are informed, after drifting to beyond the South Beach Promenade, was capsized and sunk, while another met with a similar fate late in the evening. As far as we have yet ascertained, there was but one life lost. One native crew having abandoned their vessel in a jolly boat, had a very narrow escape from a watery grave. Just as the boat got within the third surf it was smashed to pieces by the waves, and the struggling occupants had to cling for succour to the shattered pieces of raft, which were soon floating about in all directions. One of the lascars, whose two sons were among the number of the crew, swam a great distance with some of the boys on his back, dragging the other along side of him. The effort quite overpowered him, and the party was rescued near the pier, just as exhaustion had begun to show itself. The lads were taken in a state of insensibility to the Master Attendant's office, where it was found that animation was completely suspended in one of them; while the other with a good deal of assistance rallied sufficiently to be taken to the General Hospital, where he died shortly afterwards. The Cornelia Henrietta and the Maritzburg both had a very narrow chance of sharing in the fate of the others by running very close to the pier, after they had both parted anchor; but setting all available sail, they managed to clear a course and quickly stood out to sea. Two of the dhonies were driven alongside the pier with such force that the wonder is they were not both smashed to pieces. The others, at various distances, now line the length of the coast from the south beach to near the railway terminus. Of the two pier boats which used to ply towards the shipping, the Pioneer, belonging to Mr. Davies, drifted off to the southward, no one knows how far; while Mr. Thomas's life-boat, the Jemima, was shattered to atoms, as she lay fastened alongside the pier. The gale had very little abated when we went to press this morning.—Daily News, Oct. 20.

MILITARY RETIREMENTS.—The Madras Examiner has reason to believe that Lieutenant-colonel Wade, of the artillery, who is now in England, proposes to retire from the service almost immediately. It is also reported that Colonels Orr and Briggs of the same service intend to accept the £200 a year offered by Sir Charles Wood.

THE DIRECTORS OF THE AGRA AND UNITED SERVICE BANK are, it is said, about to erect a very handsome and ornamental building at Madras, the cost of which is estimated at half a lakh of rupees.

COTTON.—The Madras Daily News states that scarce a hundred bales of cotton are to be obtained in the whole town. The supply for the moment is exhausted. Screws have stopped working, and for some few weeks to come no business whatever can be done in this staple of trade.

THE TELEGRAPH.—We are glad to be able to inform our readers that the telegraph cable connecting the Maulmain side with the Martaban, was safely laid yesterday, within three quarters of an hour. We believe the Commissioner ordered a steamer to be ready, and wrote to Captain Hill to that effect. The same authority also ordered Mr. Popen, of the police, to pilot the steamer, as he was an old navigator and knew this part of the river well. The steamer Nemesis was in readiness, and within a very short time the cable was laid, the steamer being piloted by Mr. Popen, and we are now in direct communication from Maulmain to Rangoon, Shwaytheen, and other places.—Maulmain Advertiser.

THE BREACH OF TRUST CASE.—Apothecary King, whose case we lately reported, was charged at the Town Police yesterday on a second count of misapplying a certain quantity of Government medicine valued at seventy rupees, and Assistant Apothecary Henry Godbier with aiding and abetting him in the commission of the said offence. From the evidence of Doctors Mayer and Barclay, it appeared that three or four days ago from information received, they went into a room which is used for keeping utensils, and there on a shelf found nine bottles containing poisonous and expensive medicine, the proper place in which these articles ought to be kept being the strong rooms, and it was stated that they could not have been removed to the utensil room for any legitimate purpose. Mr. Godbier, who was a senior-assistant apothecary, also employed at the stores, and his duties bringing him into constant connection with prisoner, stands charged with receiving the medicines from coolies sent by the prisoner and directing them to be stowed in the room where they were discovered. The case occupied the whole of yesterday, when it was adjourned till tomorrow at twelve o'clock. The prisoners were sent to the Penitentiary, as it was thought their liberation on bail at present might prejudice the future issue of the case. The former charge to which we referred a day or two ago is still pending inquiry.—Madras Times.

BOMBAY.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MR. HENRY LACON ANDERSON, of the Bombay Civil Service, has been nominated as an Additional Member of Council of the Governor-general of India, for making laws and regulations.

APPOINTMENT.—We understand that Mr. W. H. Havelock, Political Superintendent of the Southern Mahratta country, is appointed to officiate as Secretary to Government in the Political, Judicial, Secret, and Educational Departments, during the absence of the Hon. Mr. Anderson at Calcutta.

RECEPTION OF THE GOVERNOR OF MAURITIUS.—The China mail steamer, is to be moored off the Apollo Bunder, on her arrival, to facilitate the landing of Sir Henry Berkely, and a full company of the 21st Regiment N.I., (or Marine Battalion) in full dress, with a proportion of European and Native officers, with regimental colours, to be held in readiness, to be at the Apollo Bunder, at a date and time to be hereafter notified, to receive Sir Henry Berkely. The drums and fifes of the regiment to attend.

THE LATE MURDEROUS ATTACK ON MRS. MACQUOID.—An Ellichpoor correspondent of the Times of India furnishes this correction of the previous account given of the murderous attack made on Mrs. Macquoid at that station a short time since:—"ELLICHPOOR, Sept. 18.—I have this morning read a letter in the Times of India of the 14th inst., purporting to be an account of the murderous attack made on Mrs. Macquoid, the wife of Captain Macquoid, of the 5th Regiment H. C. Your correspondent, however, cannot be a resident of Ellichpore, though he dates his letter from that station, for he has misrepresented what occurred; about the only true portion of his letter being that Mrs. Macquoid was attacked by a man with a drawn sword. The boy (for he was only about eighteen or twenty years of age) was not a khansama, nor had he been discharged some months; he was only taken on trial to do the work of a maty, and had been in Captain Macquoid's service about three weeks, or a month at the outside, and had been discharged only two or three days before the occurrence took place. He never expostulated with Mrs. Macquoid, but took his pay on the 1st, and went away without saying a word. The event took place on the morning of the 2nd; the ruffian walked into the house at six A.M., and taking Capt. Macquoid's sword proceeded upstairs to the bedroom, where he attacked Mrs. Macquoid at once with the sword, and before that lady managed to escape downstairs inflicted over twenty severe cuts and blows with the back of the sword. One of the cuts severed the bone of the left arm completely, and another divided the small bone of the right leg just below the knee joint. Captain Woodcock did not kill the man. I have now given you a correct account of the facts as they occurred, and I think you will acknowledge that they slightly differ from those related by your correspondent."

Pension to Sir F. B. Outram.

Home Dept.—The following despatch from the Secretary of State for India is published for general information:—
H.E. THE RIGHT. HON. THE GOVERNOR GEN. OF INDIA IN COUNCIL.

MY LORD,—I have received and considered in Council your public letter, dated June 6 last, No. 32, reporting your decision on an application from Sir F. B. Outram for the grant of an invalid pension of £150 per annum, to which he considered himself entitled as a civil servant of more than five and under ten years' service.

You refused this application on the ground that my financial despatch of Nov. 25 last, No. 193, did not appear to alter the interpretation hitherto put on the word "service," under which one year's sick leave only is allowed to be reckoned in qualification for pension, and therefore that Sir F. Outram is not entitled to a pension.

By the despatch in question the period of twenty-five years' service and twenty-two years' residence, including one year's absence on sick leave, was required as a qualification for the full annuity, but in the cases of civilians who might be compelled by their state of health to retire at an earlier period, service and not residence is to be calculated in deciding on their claims to invalid pensions.

Sir F. B. Outram has accordingly been instructed to apply again to your Government for an invalid pension, to which he will be entitled from Feb. 6 last, the date on which his resignation of the service was accepted.

The President in Council is pleased to permit Mr. H. W. Hammond to resign the Civil Service from April 16, 1863.

The President in Council is pleased to permit Sir F. B. Outram, Bart., to resign the Civil Service from Feb. 6 last.

Rank of Brigadier-General.

Military Dept., Simla, Oct. 8.—H.E. the Gov. Gen. is pleased to publish, for general information, extract of a despatch from the Right Hon. the Sec. of State, No. 301, dated Aug. 24 last. Paragraphs, 1, 2, 3, and 4.

Para. 1.—In reply to the question submitted in your lordship's letter dated May 30 last, No. 23a, I have to inform you that an officer holding the rank of brigadier would not, under the regs. of the British army, command an officer in the same brigade holding H.M.'s commission of a prior date; and I am informed by H.R.H. the Field Marshal C. in C. that your lordship rightly interprets the 'Queen's Regulations,' under which it is ruled that, although brigadiers general rank with each other according to the date of their commissions as colonels, they exercise command over all colonels whatsoever who do not hold the rank of brigadier general.

2. It appeared to me, with the view of extending as widely as possible the sphere of selection for the command of brigades, that the recommendation of your lordship and the C. in C. in India, that the rank of brigadier gen. should be conferred upon officers appointed to such commands, should be carried out; and I suggested to the Field Marshal C. in C. that this course should be adopted.

3. H.R.H. has expressed his concurrence in this suggestion.

4. In conveying to you the sanction of her Majesty's Govt. to the above proposal I wish it to be distinctly understood that no additional expense is to be occasioned by the arrangement.

In accordance with the foregoing authority the Right Hon. the Gov. gen. is pleased to confer the rank of brigadier gen. upon the undermentioned officers while in command of brigades on the Bengal establishment, with effect from this date:—

Brig. W. P. G. Haly, c.b., H.M.'s 38th foot.
Brig. D. Rainier, H.M.'s 98th foot.
Brig. E. A. Holdich, c.b., H.M.'s 29th foot.
Brig. J. Welchman, c.b., Bengal inf.
Brig. A. C. Errington, H.M.'s 51st foot.
Brig. Lord M. Kerr, c.b., H.M.'s 13th foot.
Brig. A. Tucker, c.b., Bengal cav.
Brig. P. Harris, Bengal inf.
Brig. J. Travers, v.c., Bengal inf.
Brig. P. Hill, c.b., rifle brigade.

Brig. J. D. Macpherson, B.R., Bengal inf.
Brig. H. Tomba, c.b., v.c., royal art.

THE COURT-MARTIAL ON COLONEL CRAWLEY.

THIS will assuredly be the most memorable court-martial of our time. It has assumed all the importance of a great State trial. Its interests are imperial. It is not simply the solution of a question respecting a petty regimental irregularity, involving the character of a colonel and a non-commissioned officer: it is an illustration of the power of public opinion and the press in this really free country. It shows the world that the Government of Great Britain cannot resist the strong torrent of public feeling—that even the humblest subject of Queen Victoria at home or abroad, if treated with gross injustice, need not despair of some redress for himself, if he lives, or, if he dies, some fit retribution on the head of his oppressor. Every true Englishman feels his blood boil at an act of lawless tyranny inflicted on the humblest of his countrymen. It is like an injury personal to himself. The country, therefore, will not count the pecuniary cost of this trial which brings 150 witnesses from the banks of the Ganges to the banks of the Thames. Whatever may be the result, the trial must reflect honour on the character of our country and its institutions.

It would be quite impossible for a weekly paper like ours to keep pace with the daily journals in the successive verbatim reports of this important court-martial. We shall, therefore, give such a summary of the proceedings as will enable our readers to understand at once the main points of the case as they are day after day developed. The reports of four days of the trial occupy nearly fourteen long and closely printed columns of the Times.

Lieut.-colonel Crawley is an officer of about thirty years' standing. He was appointed in 1861 to the command of the 6th Dragoons, then in the Deccan. The regiment before that period is said to have been in a high state of discipline, but as soon as it came under the command of Colonel Crawley the regiment was divided into hostile cliques. Colonel Crawley's bearing towards his officers is said to have been peculiarly irritating and offensive. Paymaster Smales, an outspoken man, of an impulsive nature, could not resist the temptation to let the Colonel know, in a somewhat too free and informal style, what he thought of his Colonel's conduct and manner. The Paymaster was brought to a court-martial, and sentenced to be dismissed the service. That sentence was a peculiarly hard one, and we think unjust, as we said at the time, and we were very glad, and by no means surprised, to find it subsequently quashed by the advice of the law officers at home. Everything connected with that unhappy Mhow Court-martial has served to lower in public estimation all our first military authorities in any way connected with it. His Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, his Excellency Sir Hugh Rose, the Commander-in-Chief in India; Sir William Mansfield, Commander-in-Chief at Bombay; and Major-general Farrell, commanding the Mhow division, all seem to have acted inconsistently or erroneously, and blunderingly; and it is on this account chiefly—a want of confidence in the military authorities, especially the Indian ones—that the British public insisted with a loud voice and most imperatively that the present court-martial should have England for its locality.

FIRST DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The general court-martial first assembled at Aldershot on Tuesday, the 18th. Sir Alfred Horsford, K.C.B., is the official prosecutor; Mr. Denison is the Judge-Advocate; Lieut.-general Sir G. A. Wetherall, K.C.B., presides.

Colonel Crawley is attended by his legal advisers, Mr. Vernon Harcourt and Mr. Waller, of the Chancery bar, and Mr. Cocker, solicitor. The prisoner is tried on two charges only. The first is to the purport that when he was directed by superior authority to put Sergeant-major Lilley under close arrest, on a report from the Colonel himself that the Sergeant was in a conspiracy against him, he carried the order into effect "with unnecessary and undue severity," whereby the sergeant and his wife were subjected to "great and grievous hardships and sufferings." The second charge accuses the Colonel of expressing himself as shocked when he heard of the severities exercised towards the Sergeant, and of falsely transferring the entire blame to his Adjutant, Lieutenant Fitzsimon; whereas in fact the Adjutant had acted in the affair under the express orders and directions of Colonel Crawley. It must be recollected that Sergeant Lilley was one of Paymaster Smales' witnesses, and that when he appeared in court to testify in Smales' favour he appeared as a prisoner under arrest, and Colonel Crawley turned that fact to his own advantage and made light of Lilley's evidence on that ground.

Colonel Crawley has most earnestly protested against being tried on such limited charges; but his representations and appeals on this point, both to his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief and to the President of the court-martial, have been of no avail. Many reasons may be assigned for this. Perhaps the authorities considered that if the whole affair connected with the too famous Mhow Court-martial were to be now re-opened the case would be interminable, the expense would be unlimited, and even the present 150 witnesses would require to be doubled in number. Perhaps, too, the authorities knew too well that if the whole case were re-canvassed they would themselves be virtually quite as much upon their trial before the British public as Colonel Crawley himself. We have to suggest a third "perhaps," and that is, that though this trial has been forced from the authorities by the public press, they would be very glad if Colonel Crawley should pass through it unscathed, and they know, what the Colonel himself does not seem to know, that the prisoner has a much better chance of escape by the limitation of his defence to two points only, on one at least of which it is now quite clear that there has been a great deal of hostile exaggeration; for the talk about the place of confinement of the sergeant and his wife as being "unfit for human habitation," as "an oven," as "the hold of a slave-ship," and as "another Black Hole," like that of Calcutta, &c., &c., is proved, beyond all further question, to be utterly unfounded and ridiculous.

Colonel Crawley pleaded not guilty to the two charges on which he was arraigned. The official prosecutor then addressed the Court. His opening statement was very gentle and temperate. It certainly exhibited no animus against the prisoner. He explained that it was his intention to produce models of the buildings in which the sergeant was confined, that the Court might judge how far the place of confinement, the position of the sentry, and other local incidents, tended to produce the hardships complained of. He would adduce medical evidence as to the habits and constitution of Sergeant-major Lilley, and the state of his wife's health. He did not blame the Colonel for Lilley's confinement, except in so far as he rendered it unnecessarily grievous while it lasted, and that he omitted to represent to superior authority that the length of the arrest, under an indefinite order, was likely greatly to exceed what the superior authorities had in all probability in the least degree anticipated. "It will be proved," said the prosecutor, "that in the opinion of the medical gentlemen who made a post mortem examination of the body, the death was not traceable to any excess in drinking brandy or other spirituous liquors of any kind, but to heat-apoplexy, caused by the confinement; and that the annoyances to which Lilley was subjected during his confinement contributed to the breaking down of his health, and that had he not been in confinement there were no medical reasons to suppose that he would not have been in perfect health at the time when he died. Their opinion is, that the annoyances to which he was subjected, combined with the length of the confinement, were the sole known and assignable causes of his death."

With regard to the second charge, "it would be proved," said the prosecutor, "that up to the time of Lilley giving his evidence, the prisoner's orders about the position of the sentry had been most positive and precise, and issued in a manner that made it unlikely that they would not be attended to. That these orders were given by the prisoner himself in the orderly room to Lieutenant Fitzsimon, in the presence and hearing of several witnesses, a very few days before the 7th of May, notwithstanding objection being raised to them by Lieutenant and Adjutant Fitzsimon himself and Sergeant-major Cotton at the time they were being given, on the ground that they would, if enforced, cause inconvenience to Mrs. Lilley, and annoyance to her husband. If this be proved to the satisfaction of the Court, it will be for you to consider whether Lieutenant and Adjutant Fitzsimon could have been to blame for what took place with regard to the posting of the sentries, and whether the prisoner, on the 7th of June, when he made this statement, could have really thought that Lieutenant Fitzsimon was to blame for it. I think it right, in conclusion, to state that, so far as the prisoner is concerned, the legality of the order for the confinement of Sergeant-Major Lilley will not be called in question."

The prosecutor then proceeded to call his witnesses. Major James Hyde Champion, Assistant Adjutant-General of the Mhow division of the Bombay army, deposed that the models of the two places of Lilley's confinement (for he was moved from one to the other) were correct representations.

Lieutenant and Adjutant Fitzsimon was then sworn.

We must make room for his evidence verbatim. He is perhaps the most important witness on the side of the prosecution with respect to the second charge.

Lieutenant Fitzsimon: I was Adjutant of the 6th Dragoons on the 26th of April, 1862. On that day I was sent for to Colonel Crawley's house at Mhow. He asked me whether I knew there was a conspiracy going on against him. I said I was not aware of it. He replied that I did not do my duty as adjutant—that I should know everything. He told me that Regimental Sergeant-major Lilley, Troop Sergeant-majors Wakefield and Duval were in a conspiracy against him, and ordered me to place them under arrest, which I did. I inquired whether sentries were to be placed over them. He told me he would let me know later. To the best of my recollection he said he wished to speak to General Farrell about it first. Subsequently he gave me a written order for the placing of the sentries over the quarters of the prisoners. (Order produced and identified.) It was in the following terms:—"Regimental Sergeant-major Lilley and Troop Sergeants Wakefield and Duval to be placed in close arrest, with a sentry over the quarters occupied by each of them, with orders to allow no person whatever to hold communication verbally or written with the prisoner. Sergeant-major Cotton will perform the duties of regimental sergeant-major during the arrest of Sergeant-major Lilley, or until further orders.—Mhow, April 26, 1862." On receipt of that order I gave it to the Acting Regimental Sergeant-major Cotton, and told him to have the sentries posted. I did not march the sentries there myself, but I went afterwards and inspected them, and made them give over their orders. In Sergeant-major Lilley's case the sentry was in the front verandah of the bungalow, outside the building. That was the first sentry I visited.

Colonel Crawley: I wish it to be noted that the witness says it was the first sentry he visited, not the first who was posted.

The President: All that will come out much better in your cross-examination.

Examination continued: A few days subsequently, at the regimental orderly room, in the barracks, Colonel Crawley said to me that persons held intercourse with the prisoner. He asked me if I knew what "close arrest" meant. He said "close arrest" meant that the sentry was not to lose sight of his prisoner night or day, and gave me orders that the sentries should be placed inside, so that they should not lose sight of their prisoners night or day. The Acting Regimental Sergeant-major Cotton remarked to Colonel Crawley that Lilley was "a married man." Colonel Crawley answered to this effect,—"Officer or soldier, married or single, he did not care." I cannot say positively that the words "a d—n" were added, but I think they were made use of. "The duty shall be done," he added. He ordered the acting regimental sergeant-major to go and see it done. I also made a remark, to the best of my recollection, on that occasion that Mrs. Lilley was sick, and that her husband was obliged to rub some liniment on her chest every day. Major Swindley was present on that occasion, so were Captain Weir, Quartermaster Wooden, and I think Sergeant-Major Cotton; if not actually in the room, he must have been just outside. I am not certain about him. I don't remember anyone else. After receiving these orders from Colonel Crawley I laid a written order for the posting of the sentries before him for his approval. He added one or two words in his own handwriting. I then gave the order to Acting Regimental Sergeant-major Cotton in order that he should have the sentries posted accordingly. I have not got those orders now, nor a copy of them. I was ill about that time, and Cornet Snell became acting adjutant. That was about the 4th or 5th of May. I resumed my duties, I think, on the 16th of May. I was suspended from the duties of adjutant on the 22nd of that month. I knew Sergeant-Major Lilley since I joined the regiment in the commencement of 1859. I always heard the highest character of him for sobriety. I never saw him in the least intoxicated. He never was reduced to my knowledge. He was always regimental sergeant-major since I joined the regiment. I don't think his name ever appeared in the defaulters' book, but I cannot be certain about it. I never visited the sentries posted over him, as orderly officer. I never received any order from Colonel Crawley to remove the sentry from inside Sergeant-Major Lilley's quarters. Orders were given about Lilley's having exercise; the date I cannot state. The order was given some time after the arrest.

When Adjutant Fitzsimon found himself unexpectedly censured by the Commander-in-Chief (Sir Hugh Rose), who pronounced his "evidence in the Mhow Court-martial unsatisfactory and evasive," and spoke of his carelessness in posting the sentry on Lilley's quarters, he wrote an appeal and explanation to his Excellency, which he called upon Colonel Crawley to forward; but when he was informed by Colonel Crawley that his letter was insubordinate, and that it had been shown to Major-general Farrell, who pronounced it "highly dangerous to his prospects," he consented to withdraw it.

Private Cuthbert Blake, of the 6th Dragoons, was next examined. His evidence was to the effect that, as corporal of the guard, he at first placed a sentry outside Lilley's door; for this he was confined himself for neglect of duty in not posting the sentry inside. He was tried by regimental court-martial, and sentenced to forty-two days' imprisonment. Colonel Crawley remitted the punishment on account of the previous good character of the prisoner, and the recommendation of the Court to mercy.

Sergeant Edward Mills, with whom the late Sergeant Lilley does not seem to have been a favourite, described him as a man who used "to consume a deal of liquor," but one who "could carry a good deal." He was "a great, coarse, ignorant man." He had often seen him drunk, but never on duty. The order to the sentries was, that "they were never to lose sight of the prisoner."

At the close of this witness's evidence the Court adjourned.

SECOND DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The proceedings were resumed at eleven o'clock on Thursday morning, the 19th inst. Colonel Crawley, addressing the Court, begged to be informed whether he might be furnished with a copy of the examination of witnesses taken by the prosecution in India. The President replied that no depositions on oath were taken, nothing that constituted evidence. There was merely an inquiry as to what witnesses ought to be sent home.

Major Champion then gave evidence at great length as to the character of the bungalows in which Sergeant-major Lilley was confined. He showed that the apartments the Sergeant-major occupied were more than commonly spacious and comfortable—"the accommodation was full and ample—far larger than is usually allotted to sergeants stationed in India." The dimensions of the largest room were 34ft. by 16ft. Two inner rooms were 14ft. by 16ft. The walls were two feet thick. The rooms of the first bungalow were the same as he had occupied before he was placed in arrest. The house in which Lilley died faced towards the south—a favourite and healthy aspect in India. It had two verandahs fifteen feet wide. The principal room was 23ft. by 14ft. The second bungalow was not bomb-proof. There was a chick or screen (made of split bamboos, with a calico lining) at the door of the bed-room in which Lilley and his wife slept. This sort of curtain, instead of a solid wooden door, is a very common article of furniture in the best houses in India, as it admits air while it preserves privacy.

Colonel Crawley proved to the Court that when it was proposed to knock down the first bungalow in which Lilley was confined, to clear the site for new barracks, that he urged the Brigade-major to secure the best accommodation available for the Sergeant-major. The entire correspondence on the subject between the Colonel and the Brigade-major was read to the Court, but we cannot possibly make room for it here. Colonel Crawley now produced a long letter from Sir W. Mansfield, which showed that his Excellency disapproved of Sergeant Lilley's conduct on Colonel Crawley's own representation of it, and that he sanctioned the Colonel Crawley's proceedings. The President of the Court decided that the letter was nothing to the purpose, as it was not denied that the Colonel had been authorised to place Lilley under arrest. "I really wish," said the President, "that you would suppress these things. We don't want to hear old stories at this court-martial." The question of Lilley's guilt or innocence was not to be tried. The question to be decided was, whether Colonel Crawley accompanied the arrest of Lilley with circumstances of unnecessary severity?

The following letter, addressed by Colonel Crawley to Major Champion, seems to tell in the Colonel's favour, inasmuch as it shows that he had himself proposed to abbreviate the term of the Sergeant-major's imprisonment:—

Mhow, May 24, 1862.

My dear Champion,—I have been thinking that now Paymaster Smales has made his defence, there is no longer a necessity for keeping the three Sergeant-Majors in close arrest, with sentries over them, lest they should be tampered with. At the same time, the threat held out by Troop Sergeant-Major Wakefield, that he would poison or otherwise make away with the men who gave information about the defence being read, is still to be guarded against. What do you think I had better do? Release them from close arrest with sentries over them to simple arrest, with leave for an hour's exercise morning and evening; or keep them as they are till the Court has finally adjourned on Monday week, as the Commander-in-Chief indicates? Perhaps it would be well to ask the General by sending this note to him.

Yours, sincerely,

THOS. R. CRAWLEY.

Colonel Crawley: Can you say at what o'clock you received that note?

Witness: Not exactly; between three and five p.m., I believe. That was about twelve hours before Lilley's death. After taking the Major-General's orders on the subject I wrote this reply:—From the Acting-Adjutant-General, Mhow Division, to Officer commanding 6th Dragoons.

Mhow, May, 25, 1862.

Sir,—In reply to your communication of the 24th inst., respecting instructions as to the enlargement of the Sergeant-Majors from close arrest, I have been directed to inform you that the enlargement of the Sergeant-Majors from close to simple arrest may be permitted forthwith.

J. H. CHAMPION, Acting-Adjutant-General.

After a very long discussion about certain documentary evidence, the Court adjourned to Thursday morning.

THIRD DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

This day was devoted almost wholly to the cross-examination of a single witness, Adjutant Fitzsimon. An artist was in attendance to take likenesses of the leading personages for some one of the weekly illustrated papers. Colonel Crawley, the hero of the hour, will find that there is no privacy for him in the public streets. He will be recognised wherever he goes.

Major Champion, in answer to a question from Colonel Crawley, deposed that he had never observed any vindictive or malicious feeling in him towards Sergeant-major Lilley or the two other sergeants under arrest. The written address of Major-general Farrell on the release of the two surviving sergeant-majors, after their imprisonment of forty days, was read to the Court. The major-general expressed his deep regret at the death of Lilley, and after censuring the conduct of which the colonel had complained as "closely resembling mutiny," extended his forgiveness to Sergeant-majors Wakefield and Duval, "hoping that they had seen their fault in its true light." Major Champion testified that Wakefield had not then, as had been stated, become "a raving maniac" from his sufferings under arrest, and when released he returned to duty as before. About a year subsequently he took his discharge on the completion of his service. The President called upon Major Champion, as Assistant adjutant-general of the Bombay army at Mhow, to give a definition of "close arrest," as carried out in the Bombay Presidency.

Witness: I define "close arrest" to carry with it that a sentry must be over the quarters in which the prisoner lives, and that it is a mode of arrest resorted to when serious crimes are charged against the prisoners. There are no local orders on the subject of "close arrest" in the Bombay presidency; it is, therefore, a discretionary matter altogether. It depends entirely on the description of quarters whether the sentry should be placed inside or outside. By quarters I mean wherever the prisoner is confined.

The Court: Are you aware whether Major-general Farrell's definition of "close arrest" agrees with that of Lieut.-colonel Crawley as stated by Lieut. Fitzsimon—namely, that the sentry should not lose sight of his prisoner night or day?—I cannot say what definition Major-general Farrell would give of "close arrest;" but in the case of the late Sergeant-major Lilley it was necessary to prevent his having communication with outside parties.

The Court: Was Major-general Farrell at any time aware of the placing of a sentry in the same room with Sergeant-major Lilley and his wife?—To the best of my belief he was not at any time aware of such an occurrence. By a room I mean bedroom.

The Court: Did Major-general Farrell, in addition to ordering that the prisoner be kept in close arrest, order that no one should have access to the sergeant-major except by Lieut.-colonel Crawley's express permission?—Yes; the letter of the 28th of April, 1862, from the assistant adjutant-general, produced yesterday, shows this. It contains all the orders given on that subject.

Adjutant Fitzsimon was then cross-examined by Colonel Crawley, and admitted that "bomb-proof oven" and a place "unfit for human habitation" were not true descriptions of Lilley's residences under arrest. He also admitted that the greater part of the families of the regiment occupied similar quarters. He thought them, however, "injurious to health" in hot weather, and "not comfortable." He admitted that it was not the fault of the Colonel that the married men of the regiment had such quarters. Lieutenant Fitzsimon was deprived of his appointment as adjutant for having visited Paymaster Smales and partaken of his hospitality while that officer was under arrest. Colonel Crawley called upon Lieut. Fitzsimon to say whether his evidence at the Mhow Court-martial was not censured by that Court as evasive and unsatisfactory before the Commander-in-Chief had so characterised it. The witness replied that "he could not recollect what the remarks of the Court were, or whether they were made on him or not. He had never read the proceedings through; he read chiefly his own evidence in the Court-martial Book. Colonel Crawley asked if it was possible that an officer should receive such censure and forget it. The witness was directed to look at the passage in which he was condemned, and to say on his oath whether he had read it before. He admitted that to the best of his recollection he had read it before, but he did not remember his name having been mentioned in it.

Lieutenant Fitzsimon was under a severe cross-examination for several hours, and Colonel Crawley showed considerable sagacity and readiness in his questions, though he rather unreasonably complained of extreme injustice in being discouraged from his efforts to prove the perfect legality of his arrest of the sergeants, though that had been at once fully taken for granted both by the prosecutor and the Court. The main question, it cannot be too often repeated, is whether Colonel Crawley exceeded the limits of his duty with inhuman and unjustifiable severity.

The Court then adjourned.

FOURTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

This day again was wholly occupied in the cross-examination of Adjutant Fitzsimon, whose evidence, we must say, is rather too much what the Indian Commander-in-Chief described it to be at the Mhow Court-martial, "evasive and unsatisfactory." His replies are rather too often in the words, "I do not remember," "I cannot say," "I do not understand that question." Allowance, however, must be made for a witness who has to speak of minute matters that occurred a year and a-half ago, and who is under a very long, severe, and searching cross-examination in the presence of a great multitude of hearers—virtually, indeed, in the presence of the whole nation.

The admissions made by Adjutant Fitzsimon are chiefly to the following effect, namely, that in the orders for posting sentries given on the 6th of April, he, Adjutant Fitzsimon, did not consider that Colonel Crawley intended to annoy the prisoner—that he understood the first order about the sentries was that they were to be placed outside the building—the words of the order were "over the quarters," though Colonel Crawley's second order was, that the sentry was not to lose sight of the prisoner night or day, so that it became necessary to post him inside the building—that though he had heard that a sentry had seen Sergeant-major Lilley rub liniment on the breast of his wife, he had not made inquiries on the subject; and he thought that if Colonel Crawley had known of it he would have removed the sentry from the inside to the outside of the building—that he did not know that any sentry had ever been placed inside the bedroom of Mrs. Lilley, though he thinks he had heard that it was the case—and that he did not know positively that Major or Mrs. Lilley had made any complaint of such annoyances as had been spoken of, though he had heard rumours to that effect. After Colonel Crawley, by a cross-examination of great length and severity, had extracted these admissions from the witness the Court adjourned to this morning at ten o'clock.

Thus far the evidence seems to tell in favour of the prisoner, but we cannot venture to anticipate what turn the case will take before it is brought to a termination. If Colonel Crawley should be acquitted of the charges brought against him his ostensible prosecutors will no doubt share his triumph; but if, on the contrary, he should be pronounced guilty, what will be the position of his Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, who, after all that had occurred to show that the Colonel was not a fit man to have charge of the internal and social discipline of a regiment, re-instated him in his command, while he sanctioned the cruel dismissal and disgrace and utter ruin of poor Paymaster Smales, who had been provoked into the indiscretion of writing an angry letter? What, too, will be the position of Sir Hugh Rose, who proclaimed in a General Order that Sergeant-major Lilley died not from harsh treatment, but from hard drinking?

Colonel Crawley has bitterly complained that he has been persecuted by the press, and too hastily condemned by the public; that he has even expected to be hooted at in the streets. We are not surprised at his vexation and soreness. But let him ask himself what is the cause of the strong and vehement and almost universal indignation. Does he imagine it to be all personal spite? What is Colonel Crawley to the nation?—nothing—a mere name. It is the supposed offence, and not the offender that has caused so much excitement. The British nation has a passionate jealousy and intolerance of everything in the shape of oppression and injustice in the conduct of men in power, however high may be the position of the persecutors, or however humble that of their victims. The distance between the parties only exaggerates the offence. Let it be shown that in the case of Sergeant-major Lilley the public sympathies have been misdirected, and that the Colonel's conduct towards his officers has been misunderstood and misrepresented, and that he has been altogether "more sinned against than sinning," and he will soon find that the same love of justice which made the people of England protest against his supposed proceedings, will change the current of popular feeling, and produce a re-action in his favour.

BAIL COURT, Nov. 16.

WATSON V. HOLDSWORTH.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff, a jeweller in Cheapside, to recover from the defendant, a gentleman of property in the North of England, and formerly a surgeon in the Indian army, the sum of £33. 15s. 6d., part of which were for goods sold and delivered. The plaintiff, in his particulars of demand endorsed on the writ, claimed to be entitled also to £23. 15s. 6d., upon a bill of exchange, and interest thereon. At the trial, however, a promissory note for that amount was put in evidence, and proved to be in defendant's handwriting.

Mr. Cook, on the part of the defendant, contended that the plaintiff was bound by his particulars, and therefore he could not recover upon the promissory note.

The learned Judge was of opinion that the plaintiff was not bound by the particulars, as there was nothing to mislead the defendant, and therefore overruled the objection, and directed a verdict for the plaintiff for the amount claimed.

Mr. Philbrick appeared for the plaintiff; Mr. J. Cook for the defendant.

CALCUTTA AND SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

The half-yearly meeting of the shareholders of this company was held at the office on Thursday last, the chair being taken by Mr. J. Borro-dale.

The report stated that the line was officially opened from Calcutta to Canning on the 15th of May last. The jetty, which is of essential importance for shipping and landing cargoes, had arrived safely. The traffic which is expected to furnish the chief returns on this line by the transport of merchandise to and from vessels visiting the port, had only begun to be developed. But the receipts for the conveyance of passengers from Calcutta to Chappahattee is highly satisfactory. The inadequacy of the receipts to cover the working expenses, which in this, as in all other cases, was to be anticipated on the first opening of the line, is rapidly diminishing, and during the six months under review had been reduced to about £43. To make suitable provision for this traffic, however, it is necessary that the line should be placed in a state of complete efficiency, more especially in reference to the accommodation of warehouses. An estimate has accordingly been sent home of the works required for the completion of the line, and of the expense of executing them, which has been submitted to the Secretary of State for India, who has been pleased to authorise the raising of a further sum of £100,000. It is a matter of deep regret, but one for which the directors are in no way responsible, that the steps taken by the local authorities for constructing roads to the railway stations, and still more for draining and rendering habitable the town of Canning, should have been so dilatory. The statements of receipts of payments from Jan. 1 to Sept. 30, 1863, showed that the former amounted to £380,377. 7s., and the latter to £185,682. 6s. 2d., leaving a balance of £194,695. 0s. 10d.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report and accounts, said the anticipation of traffic by the agent gave a prospect of their turning the corner, and doing something beyond paying working expenses. Almost everything that the Government should have done during the construction of the line had to be done now that it was completed.

Mr. Marshman (deputy-chairman) seconded the motion.

In reply to questions,

The Chairman observed that a complete account of the traffic would be furnished at the next annual meeting, and that application had frequently been made to the Government to construct the works which it had been understood they would construct. The board had no thought of any extension, though they might be willing that that company should work an extension projected by another company.

The motion having been passed unanimously, the meeting was made special, to confirm the resolutions passed at a meeting of the 13th of October, authorising the borrowing of £100,000. A motion for that purpose was adopted, after which the proceedings terminated in the usual manner.

EXPORTS TO BRITISH INDIA.

The value of British produce and manufactures shipped from this country to India in the year ended December 31, 1862, was a little more than 14½ millions sterling, an amount less by 1½ millions than in 1861, by 2½ millions than in 1860, and by 5½ millions than in 1859, a year in which the aggregate was within a small fraction of 20 millions, or more than double the average of the seven preceding years. The cause of the decreased total in 1862 is entirely due to the partial cessation of exports of cotton fabrics, which ordinarily constitute three-fifths of the whole values. Next in importance on the list are manufactures of copper, glass, iron, and wool; apparel, beer and ale, coals, hardware and cutlery, machinery, salt, and stationery.

A comparative statement, showing the values of all the principal articles shipped in the years 1860 and 1861, specifying the respective increase or decrease, is subjoined. On comparing the figures, it will be seen that in 1861 the chief increases were—on coals, £26,731; linens, £32,520; machinery, £154,328; salt, £30,584; telegraphic wire, £37,689; and woollen manufactures, £70,709. The principal decreases fell on beer and ale, £290,802; copper, £270,458; cotton yarn, £206,532; and iron, wrought and unwrought, £187,784; the balance on all the articles of merchandise being adverse to the year 1861 to the extent of more than half a million sterling.

The exports from the United Kingdom of foreign and colonial produce and manufactures are not of very great importance, although the number of items is considerable, the value of which in 1861 was £641,599, or about 12 per cent. less than in the previous year.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BILLS ON INDIA.—The biddings for 50,000,000 rupees (£500,000) in bills on India took place on Wednesday last at the Bank of England. Annexed are the official particulars:—The proportions allotted were—To Calcutta, 26,000,000 rupees; to Bombay, 22,000,000 rupees; and to Madras, 2,000,000 rupees. The minimum price declared was, as before, 1s. 11½d. per rupee on Calcutta and Madras, and 1s. 11½d. on Bombay. The applications within the limits amounted to 170 lacs. Tenders on Calcutta at 1s. 11½d. will receive about 20 per cent.; on Bombay at 2s. 0½d. about 50 per cent.; on Madras at 1s. 11½d. about 75 per cent.; and all above these rates in full.

SCINDE, PUNJAB, AND DELHI BANK CORPORATION.—The directors of the Scinde, Punjab, and Delhi Bank Corporation (Limited) have issued their first report. Seeing that India generally affords so large a field for banking operations, they announce that their policy is not to confine their business to any particular locality, but always, within the limits of a prudent reserve, to avail themselves of the power conferred by the articles of association, and from time to time to open branches at such places as may present the most lucrative field for banking operations. With this view, the managing director in India has proceeded from Bombay, via Calcutta, to the Punjab, where one or more branches will in the course of a few months be opened. The directors do not consider it expedient to publish any statement of accounts until the half-yearly meeting. They report that the capital hitherto called up has been profitably employed, both in London and India, as well as in exchange operations between the two countries.

THE INDIAN TELEGRAPH.—The correspondent of the Times, writing from Constantinople, on the 4th instant, says that in confirmation and continuation of the articles which have been published on the subject of the Indian telegraph, it will be interesting to know that an arrangement has been concluded between the English and Turkish Governments which promises in a very short time to fill up the remaining links in the main line, and constitute a permanent means of telegraphic communication with India. The land line from Bagdad to Bussorah is to be constructed under the auspices of the English Government, but at the expense of the Turks, and a telegram just received from our Consul-General at Bagdad reports the arrival of the telegraphic materials from England. From Bussorah a cable is to be laid to Bushire, and another cable will connect Bushire with Kurrachee; but, in order to provide against all emergencies, it has been decided to have an independent line from Bagdad to the Persian frontier, at a place called "Khanokain," from which point the Persian Government, under the advice and with the assistance of English officers, will carry the line to Teheran and Schiraz, and so to Bushire, where it will join the cable to Kurrachee. It is proposed ultimately to extend this land line through Beloochistan to Kurrachee, and thus to secure uninterrupted communication in case of accidents to the submarine line. The Turkish line through Asiatic Turkey, consisting of two wires, is in good working order, and it is proposed to set apart one of those wires exclusively for English traffic. The profit and advantage of this arrangement to the Turkish Government—by which it secures the monopoly of the Indian traffic for its own lines—are immense, and in view of those advantages, and of the imperfect system which still prevails in the Turkish telegraph department, it is to be hoped that no difficulty will be raised by the Porte against placing the management of its line from Scutari to Bussorah in the hands of English operators. If necessary, some pressure should be exercised in a matter which affects their own interest as closely as it does ours, and which is too important to be sacrificed to any absurd susceptibility that may be felt on the subject.

CAPT. SPRAY'S SCHEME FOR DIRECT COMMUNICATION WITH WESTERN CHINA.—At the monthly meeting of the Dewsbury Chamber of Commerce, it was suggested that the council should adopt a memorial, similar to that lately presented by the Halifax Chamber to Lord Palmerston, on the subject of Captain Spray's scheme, establishing a direct communication through Burmah with the western provinces of the Chinese Empire. A discussion ensued, and it was ultimately resolved that, although the opening of the trade was very desirable, the project was one for commercial enterprise rather than for Government adoption.

INTERPRETERS IN INDIA.—The Admiralty has approved a proposition of the India Department for allowing Rs. 50 per month to one officer in each of her Majesty's ships, on the East India station, for services as interpreter. It has also been arranged that any officer who may pass the staff test in Hindoostanee, or a good colloquial examination in Arabic or Persian, will receive a sum of Rs. 180, being equivalent to six months' allowance at Rs. 30 a month, drawn by interpreters of regiments for the entertainment of a moonshee, or instructor of native languages. The Government of Bombay will communicate with senior naval officers on the East India station as to the place where the proposed examination will be held, and the regulations under which it will be conducted.

COTTON SUPPLY ASSOCIATION.—At the usual weekly meeting of the Executive Committee, held on Tuesday, November 17, a letter was read from Colon, New Granada, reporting that the writer, who is earnestly endeavouring to extend the cultivation of cotton, expects very soon to ship several bales to the association. A letter was received from the British Vice-Consulate, Latakia, North Syria, stating that, owing to the impulse given to the growth of cotton, a much larger area will be placed under cultivation next year, and that there is a good opportunity for the introduction of an improved staple. The former efforts failed in consequence of the late arrival of the American seed that was sent. It is still impossible for a European to obtain land on a good title from the Government, and the law which prohibits foreigners from possessing landed property is a great impediment to the extended and improved cultivation of cotton. A letter was read from the honorary agents of the association at Madras, advising the despatch of two parcels of indigenous (Ooppum) and exotic (Bourbon) cotton, grown by Messrs. Fischer and Co., Salem, for which they obtained the Governor-General's prizes for this year of 2,000 and 1,500 rupees respectively. The proceedings of the Madras Government on the subject have been forwarded, and particulars of the cultivation are supplied. The Bourbon sample is an excellent specimen of this description of cotton, and has a beautiful silky appearance. Its value was about 22d. per lb. in the Liverpool market in June last. The yield was a little more than 60lb. of clean cotton per acre. The Ooppum cotton is of superior quality, and was worth in Liverpool at the above date 18d. per lb.; the yield of clean cotton is a little over 41 lb. per acre. A letter was read from the Secretary of State for India in Council, forwarding reports on the cultivation of Peruvian cotton in the Salem, Cuddapah, S. Arcot, and Kistna districts, and of Egyptian cotton in Madura, together with samples of cotton grown from Peruvian and Egyptian seed in the Madras Presidency. These reports furnish interesting details of the experiments which have been made with Peruvian seed, and the results appear to be in most cases eminently successful. A judicious system of irrigation has been advantageously employed, and indeed seems to be essentially necessary during the hot season through; as the plant is said to be perennial, it may possibly not require irrigation in succeeding years, when it has acquired more strength and become more deeply rooted in the soil. It is supposed to take three years to come into full bearing, when it becomes a bushy tree. Further experiments are in progress, the results of which will be communicated. Some of the samples excited general admiration; the cotton is fine and silky, and fully equal to any grown in Peru itself. Further supplies of seed are required, as the cultivation seems likely to extend. A sample of cotton grown at Naples from seed sent out by the association was submitted for examination, and valued at from 2s. 3d. to 2s. 4d. per lb. Grants of seed were made for the New Hebrides, and of cottage gins for Western Australia.

THE LOSS OF THE "PARANA."—The Hong Kong agents of this ill-fated vessel have addressed a letter on the subject of her destruction by Chinese pirates, and the murder of her captain and crew, to the editor of the Hong Kong Daily Press. The letter, which explains itself, is as follows:—"In a leading article of your impression of September 24, you say, in reference to a statement made by one of the pirates captured and brought up here in her Majesty's gunboat Opossum, that his story is, that the Parana came in to anchor through stress of weather, and that the master, suspecting nothing, allowed the pirates to go on board in large numbers, when an easy capture was effected. As the statement is calculated to lead to the supposition that great want of caution was shown by the late Captain Morrish, we think it right to say that one of our firm was present in the magistrate's court throughout the examination of the witnesses, including the Chinese pilot who accompanied the Opossum, and to whom the confession in question was made, and we do not think that any allusion was made in the pilot's deposition as to the master having allowed the pirates to go on board the Parana."

EXPORT OF SPECIE.—The P. and O. steamer Pera, which left on Friday (yesterday), took out £302,052. Of this amount £214,000 is gold, and £88,000 silver. The proportions are as follows:—India, £51,000; China and the Straits, £38,052; and Alexandria, £213,000.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Morland, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.

MR. EPHRAIM MOSELEY'S IMPROVEMENT in the CONSTRUCTION OF ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES, on an INDIA-RUBBER BASE, are secured by Letters Patent, dated December, 1862, whereby the continual outlay of new teeth is avoided, alterations from the absorption of the gums, or any other cause, being easily remedied, and the first outlay no greater than for ordinary kinds. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted as under:—It consists of one continuous piece of Prepared India-rubber. The Artificial Teeth present an uniformly even surface to the action of the tongue, preventing lodgment of food and all secretions, so much complained of in the present system. No gold or any other metal being required, all springs, wires, and fastenings are wholly unnecessary; sharp edges are avoided, a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity hitherto wholly unattainable, and a fit perfected with the most unerring accuracy, are secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums. The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the prepared india-rubber; and as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may be retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being at the same time provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

EXTRAORDINARY CURE OF A COUGH.
—The following letter has been received:—"Nightingale-hall, Edmonton. Dear Sir,—I have recently suffered much from a most violent cough, proceeding from a tickling in my chest, which no remedy, out of many I resorted to, could allay. My head was constantly aching, and my whole frame entirely shaken. Having seen the good effects of your Balsam of Aniseed in several members of my family, I purchased a small bottle, and when going to bed at night took a teaspoonful in two tablespoonfuls of water, just warm. The effect was immediate; it arrested the tickling in my chest, I slept well, and arose perfectly restored in the morning, with the exception of debility, arising from fatigue by incessant coughing for some days previous. My cough entirely left me, and has never returned. Having since heard of a lady in the neighbourhood who for a long time had laboured under a most distressing cough, and who had resorted to every remedy within her knowledge, I sent the remainder of the bottle to her; and that long-standing, obstinate, and (as she thought) incurable cough was perfectly cured.—I am, my dear sir, yours very truly, Wm. Howards. To Mr. Thos. Powell."

If you GREASE or STAIN with PAINT any Silks, Cloths, Curtains, or other article of Household Furniture, or Wearing Apparel, the best and most effectual agent for removing it is the BENZINE COLLAS, which will not alter the colour or injure the texture.

IMPORTANT to PEOPLE RETURNED from INDIA.—The only really effectual relief for torpidity of the liver, bile, and all those weak feelings arising from the change from a hot climate, is SANGER'S TASTELESS ANTHILIOUS POWDERS, a trial of which will satisfy the most sceptical. They are invaluable for chronic bile, and do not weaken the system by violent purging, or saturate it with mercury, which most remedies for the bile do.
Sold by J. SANGER, 150, Oxford-street, W., in packets, at 1s. 1d. and 2s. 9d., or by post for fifteen or thirty-six stamps.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—SAFE and SURE.—Day by day are cases of ulcers, wounds, sores, contractions, and deformities cured by these well esteemed remedies, after all other known means have been tried in vain. Varicose veins and all descriptions of sore, ulcerated, and bad legs, which seem to defy the best surgical skill, succumb in a short time to the soothing, healing, and purifying properties of Holloway's Ointment and Pills. They operate both locally and constitutionally; they strengthen both capillaries and nerves, and regulate the circulation of the blood. The most valued testimonials are constantly received from persons whom chance directed to Holloway's sale and certain remedies, and which effected a complete cure even after the constitution seemed thoroughly broken down.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Calcutta papers by this mail complain that though the natives are rejoicing in the Doorga Poojah all European business is at a standstill, and that there is neither public news nor social gaiety or excitement of any sort. The bazaars still have their gup about the rumour respecting H.M.'s 101st Regiment having fallen into an ambuscade, and been cut all to pieces by the Syuds and Hindostanees of Sitana. Not less than five hundred men of all ranks are said to have been slain. The report was first given in the Oude Gazette of the 17th October, but no other up-country paper has confirmed the statement, or even alluded to it. The story was no doubt started by the natives, and we hope to find that it was nothing but "a weak invention of the enemy," or, at all events, an exaggeration of the truth.

We are sorry to observe that the Commander-in-Chief has had occasion to reprimand certain cavalry and artillery officers at Barrackpore, for purchasing and trading in horses which, as members of a casting committee, they had condemned.

A correspondent of the Calcutta Englishman, dated Julpigoree, Oct. 15, writes:—"A flight of locusts passed over this station last evening. The flight commenced about five p.m., and lasted till darkness set in. Very little, if any, damage done. The flight was from west to east, right across the river Teesta into Bootan. I have seen denser flights in the Upper Provinces; but, as the locust is almost unknown in Bengal, the people of this part of the country hardly know what to make of them. The locusts were of the red kind. We caught a lot and had them roasted for dinner. There are still lots of locusts knocking about. They seem as if they don't know what to do with themselves; evidently they don't like dhan."

Twelve of the robbers who attacked Mr. Robertson have been apprehended. They belong to a large gang. A small amount of the property stolen has been recovered.

Mr. Claud Hamilton Brown has been appointed an additional member of the Viceregal Council.

Mr. H. L. Anderson is appointed to succeed Mr. C. J. Erskine on the High Court bench.

A French gentleman, M. de Closet, has arrived at Madras from Pondicherry, with the view of making the necessary arrangements for the construction of a railway from Pondicherry to Conjeveram.

We are sorry to learn that cholera has made its reappearance amongst the troops in Oude. Dr. Shelton has been summoned from Simla. Two hundred prisoners have been employed to clear away the rank vegetation in the neighbourhood of cantonments.

Lord Elgin and Sir Hugh Rose are moving towards the Punjab.

The supposed Nana is said to be of high sacerdotal rank, and is said to have threatened a civil action against the authorities for false imprisonment.

There was a very long letter in the Times of yesterday from some passengers by the Overland Route to India, who complain very bitterly that they suffered severe inconvenience from the late inundation of the Nile and the very imperfect arrangements of the Peninsular and Oriental Company. Ladies and young children were amongst the sufferers. They landed at Alexandria on the 10th instant from the steamer Ellora, from Southampton, en route to Bombay. The first-class passengers say that they had been provided with an Egyptian transit ticket by the P. and O. Company before leaving England. But they paid nearly double the sum for it that they could have procured a similar ticket for in Alexandria. The steamer which carried them on the Nile to Cairo, "in twenty-two wretched hours," "had not a single responsible official on board." The captain and pilot spoke only Arabic. The accommodations are described as most deplorably bad, and the vessel "was crowded with 'outsiders,' shouting, lolling, eating and drinking, smoking, spitting, and snoring in every part of the vessel—especially the best parts—and all of them very dirty canaille." "The sleeping cabins—four in number—were all public, and open to all. There was no lavatory on board, and until the energy of one passenger, after some hours of endeavour, compelled the production and cleansing of one close stool in one of the cabins, no necessities or urinals of any kind. Nature was relieved from the same corner of the rail whereat the water for drinking and ablution had to be drawn from the muddy river. But water could not always be got even in sufficient quantity to fill the solitary wash-basin, which we passed from hand to hand. A young American lady, among others, was seen ineffectually trying, in default of servants, to draw the foul fluid for herself, and had to be assisted by some of her fellow-passengers in that enterprise. There was one towel, but only a small one, and no more were to be had till the following day; but of soap there was not a morsel but what some of the passengers had brought. Lice and insects of all kinds, since the exodus, have been the plagues of Egypt. We found the parasites in plenty at Cairo. That we were not without them on board of the Hadji-Pasha you may easily guess. There was the food of the quotidian 'meal,' as per regulation—such stuff! Insufficient, even if good; it was filthy, coarse, and ill-cooked besides, and all, in the highest degree. Dirty—very dirty—iron knives and forks were distributed at the rate of one knife and one fork to each guest of the 'administration,' and he, or she, or it used these for all purposes, for there were no carving knives or carving forks. Insufficient and bad also was the attendance, as we have already said; yet even of that, such as it was, the canaille without obtained the preference and held it to the end."

How far the above statements are strictly correct we have no certain means of knowing, but we suspect some exaggeration.

BENGAL.

THE BENGAL MEDICAL RETIRING FUND.

The Bengal Medical Retiring Fund publishes the following statistical particulars of its present quivering condition, and of the actual distress which stares it in the face for the coming year:—

Balance of unappropriated fund, April 30, 1863	Rs. 25,005
Net receipts to Dec. 31, 1863	1,64,485
Deduct value for the six annuities declared	1,89,359
This, it must be admitted, is a sufficiently narrow escape from present insolvency to please the most reckless person interested in the welfare of the Fund; but the following prospect for next year is alarming indeed:—
The year's income	Rs. 1,97,464
The year's charges, sum required to provide for the value of seven annuities	Rs. 2,20,920
Management charges, &c.	5,000
	2,25,920

Deficiency at end of 1864... Rs. 28,456

So that, next year, so far as self-sustaining power is concerned, the Fund will, as the doctors would say, be helplessly and hopelessly paralysed, and can only be saved from death and annihilation by aid, of which the directors express their hope in the following words:—

If the Government allow the supplemental grants applied for by the managers at the request of the last general meeting of subscribers, the fund will, it is expected, be enabled to grant the full number of seven annuities per annum.

From these extracts, taken from the directors' report, it will be plainly seen that the Fund is now mendicant, and will next year be pauper; and, in this state of affairs, it is to be hoped that the Government which has, by its acts killed the institution, will lose no time in taking over the carcass for the benefit of those who have hitherto kept the body alive and in good condition, but whose diminished numbers and subscriptions can no longer suffice to save it from its now certain fate.—Englishman, Oct. 10.

THE COUNCIL OF INDIA.

The members of the Council of India have been summoned to legislative sitting on the 16th November, the Council of Bengal re-assembling on the 14th—that is, on the preceding Saturday. Additional members (official) from the Presidencies of Bombay and Madras, and from the Punjab, will be present—namely, the Hon. Messrs. H. L. Anderson, R. S. Ellis, and A. A. Roberts. The latter is a judge of the Bengal High Court, though a Punjab civilian. From his judicial appointment not being held to disqualify him for a place in Council, you may estimate the value attachable to those newspaper assaults on Sir Charles Wood which made his assumed shutting of the Council Chamber against independent judicials a prime article of indictment against her Majesty's Secretary for India. Independent judicials continue eligible for seats in Council; the objection now, as ever, is to the faction, whether judicial or lay. The Council, should Messrs. Ellis and Anderson have arrived, will on its re-opening have present official members, ordinary and additional, from every division of India; for, in addition to the above-named, there will be the Hon. Mr. Grey for Bengal, and the Hon. Mr. Harrington for the North-West. I have heard nothing reliable concerning the additional non-official European and native members. Of the latter, Rajahs Dinkur Rao and Deo Narain Sing would probably make not the slightest objection to retain their seats for another two years, and they may be asked to do so. A third native member is his Highness the Nawab of Rampore, and a fourth, I am inclined to vaticinate, will be the Maharaja of Jeypore, who has gone through the approved probation; that is, done something for education in the way of schools and scholarships; and who has, by this, been summoned to Lahore, to be invested with the insignia of the Exalted Order of the Star of India.

The European non-official members last sitting (I cannot employ the word session) were two, Messrs. Cowle and Fitzwilliam. Both are in England, and it will be difficult to replace them. Whoever accepts the honour of a seat in Council will be expected to be present at Lahore in January! This is the great obstacle, for I need not remind you that January is the very middle of the mercantile busy season. The question, therefore, is, are there to be found amongst us two merchants of note, so public-spirited as to leave their private money-making for two months of the busiest season of the mercantile year, to take part in the deliberations of a Council twelve hundred miles from Calcutta? Possibly, one European non-official member may be procured from here, and a second fished for in your most promising city. But if European members are not procurable, the requisite quota will be made up of natives. The Council's Act but insists on half the number of additional members summoned being non-official, but on nothing further; they (non-officials) might be all natives, or all Europeans if it so pleased the Viceroy.

NEW RATES OF PAY AND STAFF ALLOWANCES.

It is not only the new consolidated rates of pay for regimental officers which have arrived from England, sanctioned, and may be published at any moment by the Government, but, at the same time will appear the re-organization of, and new rates of pay and staff allowances for all the departments of the army—the Secretariat, Adjutant-general's, Quartermaster-general's, Judge Advocate-general's, Pay, Stud, and every other department, too numerous to mention here. We may mention a few of the most important changes which attracted our notice, and have adhered to our memory. The Military Secretary to the Government of India will in future receive Rs. 3,500 a month, consolidated; and his deputy will receive staff allowance of Rs. 1,000 a month, with the pay of his rank. All other deputies in the several departments—Adjutant-general of the army, Quartermaster-general, &c., will also receive Rs. 1,000 staff. Officers commanding native regiments, cavalry and infantry, will receive consolidated pay on a sliding scale, according to their rank; Lieut.-colonel, cavalry, Rs. 1,500; infantry, Rs. 1,400; majors, captains, &c., lower consolidated rates. We believe that the officer second in command is, in future, to receive a staff allowance of Rs. 350 a month, whilst with his regiment. Presidency house-rent is to be reduced, for field officers at least; the present rate for a Lieut.-colonel, Rs. 180 a month, being brought down to Rs. 125. As a whole, the new tariff must be admitted to be fair and liberal, and such as ought to procure and retain good and zealous officers for the service of the Government; but some retrenchments have been made in all the departments. For instance, in the stud department, the superintendent of Government studs now receives Rs. 1,500 a month staff allowance; it will in future be Rs. 1,000; and the deputy-superintendent, now receiving Rs. 1,000 a month staff allowance, will, under the new rules, receive but Rs. 700. The controller of military finance gains Rs. 6.8 by the new rules; the military accountant to the Government remains as he is; and the presidency paymaster's staff allowance is reduced by Rs. 100 a month. These are some of the larger features of the new pay regulations, which it has taken the Governments of India and of Westminster two years and a-half to bring to maturity; and which we hope will now require no further change or modification. The error of cutting down the pay and allowances of the military so as to make this country, already sufficiently disliked, still more hated, has been pretty well avoided; and we must hope for the best results.—Englishman, Oct. 20.

THE MILITARY FORCE IN THE PUNJAB.

The military force in the Punjab, exclusive of the irregulars, amounted during the year 1862-63 to 15,560 Europeans and 12,770 natives; making a total of 28,339, maintained at a cost of Rs. 196,70,080. This force was composed of 16 field and 6 garrison batteries (96 guns), 3 regiments of British cavalry, 14 of British infantry, 8 of native cavalry, and 15½ of native infantry. These figures include the 23rd and 32nd corps N.I., though now withdrawn from general duty and chiefly employed on public works. The irregular force, again, consisted of 5 regiments of native artillery, 5½ of cavalry, and 11 of infantry; making a total of 11,079 men, maintained at a cost of Rs. 20,97,504. The five artillery regiments, it may be remarked, were together only 549 strong, while the cavalry regiments mustered no more than 2,774 sabres. The Punjab camel establishment has been kept up at such a comparatively trifling expense that the commissariat department became anxious to know how such substantial results were obtained from such a small outlay. The system is explained as follows:—

"The cattle establishment attached to Punjab infantry regiments, the regiment at Abbottabad and the Guide corps excepted, consists of fifty-five camels, with eleven sowars at five rupees; and a jemadar on eight rupees per mensem, and forty mules; one muleteer is allowed for every three mules on five rupees per mensem, and one jemadar of muleteers for each corps on eight rupees per mensem. The camels are sent out to graze, care being taken to select the best grazing ground, and to change the locality from time to time. When camels are worked as on a march, they are still restricted to what they can procure when out grazing. It is only when, from any cause, forage is scarce, or when they are worked unusually hard and have no time to graze, that two seers of gram per camel, or, in lieu, ten seers bhoosa, is allowed; but it rarely happens that either gram or bhoosa has to be provided. The jemadar of Serwans and the non-commissioned officers in charge of the camels are held strictly responsible for their condition, and that no undue expense is incurred. Mules are allowed two seers of gram and six seers of bhoosa daily. The two infantry regiments located in Huzara do not keep up camels; they have one hundred mules, with thirty-three muleteers and one jemadar each. The Guide corps has only eighty-six mules, with twenty-eight muleteers and one jemadar."

In consequence of the determination of the Supreme Government that all armed bodies must for the future be either soldiers or police, it became necessary to revise the military levies maintained for the defence of the frontier ever since the final conquest and annexation of the Punjab. A frontier militia was accordingly organised, consisting of 403 horsemen and 217 footmen, at an annual cost of 145,596 rupees. These militia men are for the most part inhabitants of the Border, and are employed as outposts on the Dera Ismael Khan, Dera Ghazee Khan, and Bunnoo Frontiers, and as guides to military detachments of the Punjab Irregular Force. In order that a sufficient supply of provisions shall always be in hand in the event of troops being required to take the field without any previous notice, the Forts of Kohat, Duleepghur, and Akalghur are always provisioned for two months, while at the larger posts supplies for one month, and at the smaller posts for ten days, are always kept in store. Constant vigilance is needed to guard against the cattle-stealing raids of the Highland caterans, and frequent collisions take place between the armed robbers and the militia, in which the former invariably come off second-best. The conduct of the entire Punjab Irregular Force during the year under notice was highly commended by the Brigadier-general commanding.—Bengal Hurkaru, Oct. 21.

MERITS OF JUDICIAL OFFICERS.

Reports of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut of the Administration of Civil Justice in the North-Western Provinces in the year 1862.

With regard to the work done by the zillah judges we have the following order of merit:—

	Civil.	Criminal.
Azimghurh ...	1	IV.
Allahabad ...	2	III.
Farrukabad ...	3	I.

Benares occupying the third place in the criminal work. Allahabad that occupies the best place, taking a double second.

"The largest amount of civil work in these provinces in the past year was performed by Mr. Andrew Ross, Judge of Azimghurh, whose industry was very remarkable. Second only to Azimghurh stands the district of Allahabad, in which the work performed by the judges, especially by Mr. G. P. Money, was very large."

Messrs. Spankie, Lindsay, Lind, and Horne, are creditably mentioned. "In the year under review Moradabad occupied the lowest position in regard to the amount of work performed by the judge, and the court have censured the zillah judge for his want of industry and diligence." They observe with regret that Moradabad shows the worst results also in respect to civil and criminal duties combined. With regard to the "percentage of appeals to cases and appeals decided," the best results were obtained by Messrs. Fane, Drummond, and Carnac, the worst by Messrs. Horne, Andrew Ross, and Edmonstone. With regard to the "percentage of modified or reversed cases to total number decided by the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut," the most favourable were those of Messrs. Pearson, Swinton, Batten, and Spankie, as in the previous year. With regard to the "percentage of modified or reversed cases to total number of cases and appeals decided by the judge," the best results were those of Messrs. Spankie, Drummond, Lind, and Carnac, and the worst those of Messrs. Masson, Vansittart, and Patterson. We would observe, however, that there is a great fallacy in this determining of merits by separate percentages. It lies in not taking into consideration the relative value of the amounts on which the percentage is struck. It is true that this is done in a measure by having the three different percentages. But the error as regards the comparison of man with man runs through them all.

Thus take the cases of Mr. Fane and Mr. Ross in the first percentage. The former attains "best results" and the latter "worst results." But, then, on examining the table we find that Mr. Ross decided 458 cases, Mr. Fane only 172. It is evident that for the purposes of fair comparison an allowance ought to be made for the greater amount of work done in the one case than in the other, for the greater risk.

Thus, if A decides 100 cases, B 50, and 10 of the former and 5 of the latter are appealed, they are both 10 per cent., but that does not show equal merit; B ought to have a less percentage appealed out of his smaller number of cases decided; in fact, as he had only half the number of cases his percentage ought to be only half that of A, that is 2½ per cent. Again, if on appeal 5 of A's cases are confirmed, and 5 of B's, the former shows 50 per cent. reversals, the latter has a clean bill altogether, and heads the list; whilst it is evident that there was more chance of 5 cases being all confirmed than 10 cases.

Mr. Spankie seems to us to come out in all respects, best in the list of judges, deciding the second greatest number of cases, and yet appearing well in the matter of appeals and reversals.

With regard to the principal Sudder Ameer, "the largest amount of work was performed by Mr. R. H. Smith, who disposed of an average of 45 cases per mensem, only 3 per cent. of which were modified or reversed on appeal. After him Mahomed Buksh, P.S.A. of Agra, decided 42 cases monthly, of which only 4 per cent. were reversed or modified."—Delhi Gazette.

FUTURE CHANGES IN INDIA.

The time is now apparently approaching when the scheme is fairly to be tried of bringing the P. & O. mail steamers to Bombay and Beypore only, leaving passengers, letters, and goods to find their way as they best can from Bombay to Calcutta, and from Beypore to Madras. The whole arrangement, if successful, is fraught with grave results. The establishment of an imperial capital on the western side of the Indian Peninsula would be carried out as a matter of necessity without any interference from home; whilst the trade and importance of Madras would be irresistibly drawn in the same direction. If, however, we may judge from reports which have recently reached us, we might be inclined to doubt whether these dreams of future changes are likely to be realised to the full extent which some appear to imagine, or at any rate before Bombay and Calcutta are in direct and unbroken communication by rail. No doubt, when passengers for Calcutta are enabled to land in a fine harbour like Bombay, and then proceed direct to their destination by rail, the change will be preferred to the hot, weary voyage round Galle. But Beypore is far less favourably situated. The port there is said to be on an open and unprotected coast, where landing and embarking would be both uncomfortable and unsafe for several months in the year; when, indeed, it is exposed to all the fury of the south-west monsoon. Consequently, to expect Calcutta passengers to land at Beypore, then to proceed, across the hottest part of India, to the hottest of all the presidencies, and finally to embark amidst all the unpleasantness, to say nothing of the peril, of the Madras surf, in order to proceed up the Bay of Bengal to the so-called Imperial city, is simply a hope that never will be realised. The mails may be carried that way, inasmuch as the Post-office authorities appear to have exerted themselves from time immemorial to select the most difficult and impracticable routes for the conveyance of despatches; but we should be induced to imagine that Calcutta passengers will not willingly incur such evils, and indeed will rather prefer going round the Cape even to the pleasures of a journey through the beautiful and prosperous country of Malabar, and Italian climate of Mysore, to that concentration of dust and sunshine which prevails in Madras and its neighbourhood.

But if Calcutta traffic might prove strong enough to induce the P. and O. steamers to continue running until the completion of the Bombay railway, it will then remain to be seen what will become of Madras. Calcutta is really bearable to the European, excepting, perhaps, in May and September; but even here, where the thermometer ranges some degrees lower than Madras, and where for four months in the year we have a really beautiful climate,—even here people are dissatisfied, and the capital does not appear to be a favourite Viceregal residence. But at Madras the summer heat is invariably described as grilling; and whilst the Governor is anxious to fix his permanent residence at Ootacamund, the whole European population seem to take frequent flights to the Shevaroy and Neilgherries. The railway will indeed enable everyone to gratify this continual desire to fly away to the Land of the West, but at the same time the result must be the transference of the permanent head-quarters of the Governor of Madras to some locality sufficiently near to Beypore and sufficiently distant from Fort St. George.

Such are some of the changes which appear likely, even in the minds of the most sober-minded people of the day, but which would have been regarded as downright madness five years ago. People's ideas are, however, being revolutionised in more ways than one; and whilst we are speculating upon the transference of capitals and the creation of new cities the railway trains are passing amongst large communities that have never been without the limits of their respective villages, and fairly opening their eyes and compelling them to think. The sneer of the Brahmin, and the depreciation attempted by the Mussulman, are less and less regarded as the natives see trains full of people carried by a mysterious agency through mountains and over rivers, with all the thousand and one marvels connected with such achievements. Under these circumstances, therefore, we may hope that the changes in progress may be prolific of such results in all directions as may prove beneficial to future generations.—Englishman, Oct. 16.

THE MISSION TO BHOOTAN.

In the long-stretching extent of fifteen hundred miles covered by the Himalayan range from Peshawur to Suddya, there are two vast tracts which are entirely independent of British power, and carefully exclude English influence. These are Nepal and Bhootan. As the former stretches no less than five hundred miles in length from the Kali river to Darjeeling, and the latter two hundred and thirty miles from Darjeeling to Assam, we may be said to possess little more than half the southern slope of our great northern bulwark. The two countries differ as much in their civilisation as in their extent. Nepal has been conquered by a Hindoo race; is the last asylum of Brahminism; is governed by a Prime Minister who has been feted in the palaces of English nobles, and observed the sources of English power; and has, after one great war and many little quarrels, an English Resident at its capital. The latter is still the abode of Indo-Chinese barbarism, and acknowledges a distant fealty through Thibet to Peking. Inhabited by a sparse and miserable people, Bhootan has hitherto escaped the attraction of the English power only by its insignificance, and it would long have continued unnoticed by the Viceroy who governs Southern Asia from Calcutta, if for a whole century it had not persistently harassed our frontier. Those political petits maitres who scent in every defensive movement and every commercial treaty of Government the odour of annexation, suspect in the proposed mission a covetous desire to seize nineteen thousand square miles of tea land, fine forest, and sanatoria. But, whatever the result may be—and it will probably be territorially as unimportant as that of the last Sikkim war—all that our Government means to secure by this mission is a quiet frontier. Science may benefit a little, and commerce less, but annexation has nothing to hope for at present.

Our connection with Bhootan goes as far back as the time of Warren Hastings, who, in 1774, "wholly from consideration for the distress to which the Bhootans represented themselves to be reduced," restored to them all the lands which we had taken as a punishment for their invasion of Cooch Behar, on the sole condition of their ceasing to molest our native subjects, and paying to us, instead of Cooch Behar, the annual tribute of five horses for a district at the foot of the hills. All their traditions and superstitions point to the fact that the Bhootens took their present country from the people of Cooch Behar. The story is that the Dhurm Rajah, who is to Bhootan what the Mikado is to Japan, dwelt to the far north of Lhasa, migrated south to that capital, and finally to Punukka, the present hot-weather capital of Bhootan, where he played so miraculously on a pipe made out of a man's thigh bone that the Cooch Raja disappeared under ground. The Dhurm Raja thereupon deprived all the people of their caste, introduced the present form of spurious Buddhism, and appointed a Thibetan as his vizier under the name of Deb Raja. In Bhootan, as in Japan, the latter soon exercised the chief power, and as each Dhurm Raja was an incarnation of his predecessor, the office was generally held by a mere boy who was said to be "regenerated" and proved his title by recognising the property and clothes of his predecessor. In time the Dhurm Raja was "regenerated" in Bhootan instead of in Lhasa, to save trouble—a tradition which marks the time when Bhootan became virtually independent of Thibet. The whole country is divided into the three provinces of Paro, Tongsa and Tacca, each under a Pillo corresponding to our Lieutenant-Governor, and these again into districts under Soubahs like our Commissioners. Were the Deb Raja a man of recognised power, the country might be as decently governed as Nepal. But being generally elected from among the three Pillors, he is continually controlled by them, while he dare not interfere with them so long as they pay their trifling tribute. After he has enjoyed office for a few years they force him to resign.

Thus, what with Soubahs who care little for the Pillors, Pillors who quarrel with each other and scorn the Deb Raja, a Dhurm Raja who is a mere boy kept as a State prisoner, and Lhasa priests who constitute half the population and help the civil rulers to grind the rest to the dust, Bhootan may be pronounced the most ill-governed country in the East, not excepting the independent Malay States of the Archipelago. To increase the scantiness of the population, thinned by misrule, polyandry prevails, while chastity is as unknown as cleanliness of life, the Bhoota, and all the more if he is a priest, considering clean water his greatest enemy. Cowardice, treachery, falsehood, ignorance, and petty insolence are declared by all who have visited the country to be the prevailing characteristics of its people, and the priests are the worst of all. The only beings who work are the women. Over them the labourers tyrannise, over them those whom we would in Japan term the retainers of the Daimios or governing class, and over the whole the priests and rulers. The lower a man is the more cheerful and honest he seems to be, for the best safeguard in Bhootan is poverty. Living in a country which for a breadth of a hundred and twenty miles is one succession of snowy hills and malarious valleys rising from a thousand to twenty-five thousand feet high, the religion of the people consists of a belief in hosts of spirits to which they offer flowers and rags, with incantations loudly uttered as they pass the haunted spots, and in counting Buddhist beads while they utter the everlasting mystery, "Oom manee paimee oom." They live on the lowest kinds of grain, and a favoured few use the flavourless brick tea of Western China. Their drink is "chong," a sort of bad gin made from rice, which they gulp down in enormous quantities from large horns.

We have more than once sent a mission to Bhootan, of a combined political and scientific character. But as we have from the first acted towards the Bhootas with liberality, they despise us and our messengers, whom they have always treated with a baseness which measures the extent of our long-suffering patience. Of the last mission under Captain R. Boileau Pemberton in 1837-38, Mr. Griffith, the Madras Assistant-Surgeon who accompanied it, has left us an interesting account. Starting from Gowhaty on 21st December, 1837, the mission were struck by the change from the highly cultivated Doosars or passes of Assam to the desert of Bhootan, marked by a stream eighty yards wide, although the soil of the latter is as fertile as the jungle of the former is deadly. By 3rd January the hills were entered, and the first sign of habitation witnessed was a Bhoota post at the height of a thousand feet. The Soubah of this place was the only "gentlemanly" man met with by the mission, not excepting the Dhurm and Deb Rajas. The only priest who was ever found working, asked with much condescension for the health of the "Goombhane" and the Governor-general. Pines and rhododendrons, oaks and chesnuts, with violets and primroses at their feet, marked the prevailing vegetation. The oak resembles that of England. The streams are mountain torrents, the largest being the Monass which drains Eastern Bhootan. Up the many valleys blow gusts of wind carrying abundant dust, but this is the only drawback which the climate presents to the traveller. On a precipice above the Monass stands Benka or Tassgong, the Gibraltar of Bhootan, which the mission reached on 1st February. The highest peaks are Dongdola and Rodola, the pass through the latter of which was found to be 12,900 feet. Valley succeeded ridge, and snowy ridge valley, till Captain Pemberton reached Punukka, on 1st April, after more than three months' toil, at the rate of about fifteen miles a day. Here the Rajahs spend the six summer months of the year, going afterwards to Tasisudon, not only because that suits the cold season better, but because the limit of oppression which the ryots of each district will bear is reached in six months. This "capital" is a miserable collection of fifteen ruinous houses on either side of the Patchien stream. The Deb Raja is described as an ordinary looking man, who, after nine days' delay, received the mission in a low room supported on pillars hastily hung with silk, beside which sat a man counting cowrie shells to make a display of the wealth of the kingdom! The Dhurm Rajah was a boy of eight years of age, and the son of the leading Pillo. Sitting in a recess lighted with lamps, and in a room even meaner than the Deb Raja's, and surrounded with priests who muttered charms from gilt-lettered black books like those of the Burmese, the boy was prompted by a grey-headed priest. After more than a month's exposure to roguery, insolence, and lying, the mission departed fruitlessly by a new route, leaving the trade track to Rungpore to the right, and arriving at Goalpara after six months' absence.

We expect for the Hon. A. Eden a much better reception. He discharged his mission to Sikkim well three years ago, and on this occasion he will be attended by fifty Sikhs of the 25th Punjab N.I., as well as a detachment of sappers and miners from Darjeeling. Accompanied by a military and medical officer, this force of a hundred men ought to ensure respect from savages who thirty years ago ran away in thousands from a few Assamese Sebundies. Avoiding our mistake in Japan, Mr. Eden must see that both the Dhurm and Deb Rajas, as well as the three Pillors, are parties to any treaty that may be formed. Commerce has little to hope from a country which may produce copper, as is said, but the great attraction of which is its soil. We shall not want Bhootan for the next half century, and meanwhile, if Mr. Eden can teach its savage rulers to respect treaties, the Bhootas will be the gainers. —Friend of India, Oct. 1.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CALCUTTA BUDGET.—The Budget of the Calcutta Municipal Funds for the year ending 31st December, 1864, calculates the income at about twelve lakhs and a quarter of rupees, of which three lakhs will be derived from trades licenses. The expenditure, which will greatly exceed this amount, is to be met by a series of loans, to the amount of twenty-four lakhs, raised by debenture on the security of the rates, taxes, and dues imposed by the Municipal Act.

DIVIDENDS.—The following dividends are now in course of payment at the official assignee's office, Calcutta:—Estate Margaret Lee, first dividend, at 39 per cent.; estate John Brightman Vandenburg, fourth insolvency, first dividend, at 18 per cent.; estate Joseph Anderson, first dividend, at 8½ per cent.; estate Edmond George Collinet, second dividend, at 8 per cent.; estate Assaram and Soaklall, first dividend, at 5½ per cent.; estate William Samuel Palmer, first dividend, at 2½ per cent.; estate George Ripley (or Birrell and Co.), third dividend, at 1½ per cent.; estate Manuk Malcum Manuk, second dividend, at 1 per cent.

EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.—We publish in our official columns some correspondence relating to the extension of the Eastern Bengal Railway to Jumooona, in which Sir Charles rather neatly endeavours to throw the whole blame of refusal on the shoulders of the directors. Those interested will be able to judge, from the correspondence, of the comparative merits of the case put forward by the respective parties; but, as it stands, the whole question is simply this:—Sir Charles Wood requires the line to be extended under a guarantee of 4½ per cent., on the ground that he cannot afford, in the present state of the money market, to offer more; and the directors decline to take up the work in the mode he requires at less than 5 per cent., for the same reason. Sir Charles Wood, however, wishes them to bear his share of the odium of refusal as well as their own, and Lord Elgin is "therefore at liberty" to make other arrangements with some other company within the limits already sanctioned for grant of assistance to unguaranteed companies, or to propose to Sir Charles such other scheme as he may consider desirable for the construction of other lines of railway in Eastern Bengal. This is certainly extremely considerate and kind on the part of the Secretary of State for India; but the fact of its being tolerably well-known that the directors were perfectly ready to extend the line as originally proposed by the Government scarcely says as much for the justice of the proposal, and the probability of the company having their interests guarded by some such little trifle as a charter or an Act of Parliament, raises a very open question as to the power of the proposer. —Englishman, Oct. 22.

THE PRICE OF COTTON AT UMRAITSUR.—As much as thirty-two rupees per maund has been given for cotton at Umritsur during the present month. About the same time last year the price was only eight to ten rupees.

LIEUT.-COLONEL DRURY, the well-known botanist, is now engaged, as we are informed, in completing a "Handbook of the Indian Flora," in two volumes. This work will contain the scientific, English, and native names of every hitherto discovered flowering plant indigenous to India, with a full description of its properties and characteristics.—Hurkaru, Oct. 22.

CACHAR TEA-PLANTERS.—We deeply regret to learn, from the Dacca News, that four Cachar tea-planters have fallen victims within the last few weeks to the malarious influences which prevail in that province at this season of the year. The names of these ill-fated gentlemen were Messrs. C. P. Arkwright, J. Webster, A. Boucat, and H. E. Jewsbury. The present season is said to be a particularly unhealthy one, from the want of the usual fall of rain. The vegetation, being thus prematurely exposed to the sun's heat, is withering and rotting on the ground. The temperature, too, has of late been excessively high, and consequently a deadly miasma evolved from the reeking jungles and swamps. As a rule, the Cachar planters dwell on the tops of teelas, or little hills, and thus in ordinary seasons escape the deadly effects of the malaria of the plains. This year, however, not even that precaution has saved them from sickness and death.

TEA GARDEN AT NUNCLOW.—Extract of a Travelling Diary of the Officiating Governor-General's Agent, North-East Frontier:—"One of the chief objects I had in view in coming to Nunclow was to see a tea garden said to have been planted by David Scott. I had not visited it on my way from Assam, as I was told the garden contained but a few orange trees. I found that the garden was entirely neglected, no boundary or trace of one remaining; it has, therefore, been open to cattle for years. The garden contained about four hundred tea shrubs. These had been planted a great deal too close together, that is, with space only of from two to two and a half feet, and had thus run up into poles ten or twelve feet high. The leaf, however, appeared to be unusually large, and the shrubs as healthy as could be expected under the circumstances. The plants were, in my opinion, too much exposed. All plantations in the hills should have a western aspect—that is, be upon slopes facing the west. Many of the shrubs had thrown up strong and vigorous shoots from the roots. There has been a report current that tea would not thrive in the hills, and I was most anxious to ascertain, by personal inspection, how far this report was founded on fact. From what I have seen I have no reason to doubt but that with ordinary care the plant will thrive in most situations, at least those not exceeding 4,000 feet elevation, and not exposed like Cheera to deluges of rain. Mr. Hudson has for some years collected about a maund and a half of seed from the Nunclow shrubs. The whole, however, I believe to be Government property, and I shall endeavour to ascertain the point. There is another tea garden in Khyrim, planted and abandoned by Mr. Stainforth about twelve years ago. The seed of these is also collected by Mr. Hudson. It is my belief that the slopes of the hills towards Assam from 4,000 feet downwards will prove to be eminently suited for tea, and if so, the advantage to Europeans of being enabled to reside in a healthy climate will be incalculable. Mr. Shadwell, the oldest resident at Cherra Poonjee, states his belief that tea has not been cultivated merely from ignorance as to whether it would grow or not. Mr. Hudson has commenced a small garden at Moosmye, near Cherra, about the worst situation in the hills, I should say, for such an experiment, as it is exposed to the Cherra rain deluge."

PUNJAB TRADING COMPANY.—Amongst the trading speculations of the present day the limited liability project of Messrs. Peake and Allen deserves to be noted as a wonder. The whole of the shares were taken up—value six lacs of rupees—the first week of the announcement of the company, and before Mr. Firze, in charge of the Calcutta office, and Mr. Allen, in charge of the Simla and Umballa offices, could communicate on the subject, applications for several thousands more were received and registered at all three places. This overwhelming success has, I suppose, on the principle that "too much of a good thing is good for nothing," led to a considerable amount of confusion and trouble. All the applicants are alike clamouring for the number of shares each applied, and get an acknowledgment for, but since the number applied for exceeds by thousands the number proposed for allotment, it is simply impossible that the demand can be met. The only solution, therefore, that I can see of the difficulty is, to add up the total number of shares applied for, and allot to each applicant the number which the proposed lot of shares will proportionably give. I believe it is the intention of Messrs. Peake and Allen to adopt some such plan; meanwhile, recourse to law is threatened by some of the more doughty applicants. Dr. Macrae, who succeeds Dr. Beatson shortly as the Viceroy's surgeon, has gone in for a lac of rupees worth of shares, and so is the proprietor of one-sixth of the whole concern. I certainly do wish the Punjab Trading Company every possible success, for the firm of Peake and Allen has established a reputation in these provinces for civility and business habits, the best proof of the value of which has been more than realised in the unprecedented success which their new undertaking has attained.—Correspondent of the Times of India.

CAPTAIN EYRE AND THE BURNEY CASE.—The Government have summarily dismissed Lieut.-col. Turner from his appointment of deputy judge advocate-general of the Benares division of the army. Lieut.-col. Gordon, and not improbably Brigadier Macpherson, will be dealt with according to such facts and circumstances as may be developed and confirmed in the court-martial to be held on Captain Eyre. Orders have been sent to England for sending this officer back to India as quickly as possible, in view to his being placed on his trial; so that, as matters now stand, nothing more will be done in the Burney case until the arrival of Captain Eyre in this country, if that may be an event which may be looked forward to with any degree of certainty. Meanwhile the names of the several officers who appeared for the defence in the late trial at Calcutta will remain distinguished by the well-known red cross.

THE UMRITSUR RAILWAY.—Apropos of railways, I see some of your contemporaries are floundering for information as regards the line between Delhi and Umritsur. I can so far enlighten them as to state that the mail of August 18 brought out the tenders for the construction of the portion between Umballa and Umritsur. The contractors in the field are Sir Morton Peto, the Messrs. Brassey, and the Messrs. Fleming. The lowest tender is for Rs. 14,000 a mile; but as there is barely a difference of Rs. 100 between the tenders of the whole three, it has given rise to a suspicion that there is some collusion between the different contractors. Rs. 14,000, moreover, is thought too much for a mile, and it is strongly believed that the authorities in this country will have nothing to say to it. The probability, however, is that Sir Morton Peto, with his home interest, will eventually be the successful competitor, and, to judge from his English reputation, we should be fortunate in having him as the contractor for this, the most difficult piece of work on the line.—Hurkaru.

HOSPITALITIES OF THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—The Lahore Chronicle was correctly informed the other day that the Commander-in-Chief intended giving a grand fancy-dress ball at Lahore next December. Indeed, his Excellency is going to carry out the same series of princely hospitalities during the three months that he is to be in camp at Lahore as he has just ended at Simla. Every arrangement for these magnificent entertainments is in course of completion. More than the usual number of tents is to form his suite of canvas apartments at Lahore. They are to be pitched on a raised floor, which is to be planked, and the planks smoothed. Pianos and billiard tables are to be sent down from this, and no requisite of amusement is to be left wanting to complete the arrangements for carrying out his Excellency's noble and hospitable intentions against his arrival at Lahore. I trust this is giving timely notice enough to the élite of the capital of the Punjab to prepare for a course of gaieties which will be as varied as they will, indeed, be on a most liberal scale.

H.M.'S 43RD.—On the occasion of the departure for New Zealand of H.M.'s 43rd L.I., Major-general Becher, commanding the Presidency Division, has published a valedictory general order, laudatory of the discipline and good conduct of the soldiers of that distinguished regiment, and expressing his thanks to Lieut.-colonel Booth for their constant zealous co-operation in carrying on the military duties of the garrison since the regiment entered Fort William. It is, we believe, usual for the Government also on these occasions to express its approval of the services and exemplary conduct of a deserving regiment leaving the shores of India; and although the war services of H.M.'s 43rd L.I. in this country have not been arduous or brilliant, from want of opportunity, a better behaved corps has never, we believe, taken its departure from amongst us.

TRADE WITH INDIA.—The statistics of the trade of Calcutta, which have been compiled by Mr. Wood, the secretary of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, show that the import trade for the thirty-two years, 1830-1862, was £244,044,215, of which £69,652,061 represents treasure, and £174,392,154 merchandise. It is to be regretted that we have not similar figures for Bombay and Madras, but we shall not err if we double these to represent the trade of both. We thus learn the astounding facts that, for a period less by a year than the third of a century, nearly £70,000,000 of bullion and more than £170,000,000 of merchandise were poured into Calcutta; and that in the same period India took not less than £140,000,000 of treasure from Europe and £350,000,000 worth of goods.—Friend of India.

THE NEW PROCEDURE BILL.—As might well have been expected, the native papers and their supporters are loud in their indignation against Mr. Maine's new Procedure Bill. They cannot call it a contract law, but they are sure that it will, to a certain extent, have the ill effects of one, viz., that it will interfere to a great and alarming degree with their "peculiar habits and customs" by doing away, as it proposes to, with many of the legal cobwebs that now offer a convenient shadow to the practices of forgery and fraud. But their abuse of the measure recoils upon themselves, and Mr. Maine must see, as all unprejudiced men see, that the best comment on the certain success of his Bill is the indignation in prospect of those whose evil practices it will restrain.—Englishman, Oct. 20.

THE FORCE AT THE CAMP AT MEEAN MEER, when the escorts of the Viceroy and Commander-in-Chief have joined, will consist of:—4 batteries of horse artillery; 3 light field batteries; 1 heavy field battery; 4 companies of sappers and miners; 20th Hussars; 21st Hussars; 2nd Bengal Cavalry; 9th Bengal Cavalry; 10th Bengal Cavalry; 19th Bengal Cavalry; 7th Royal Fusiliers; 42nd Highlanders; 93rd Highlanders; 24th Foot; 3rd Battalion Rifle Brigade; 1st Goorkha Regiment; 2nd Goorkha Regiment; 6th Native L. I., 24th Punjab Infantry, 27th Punjab Infantry, and probably the 14th Native Infantry (Ferozepore Regiment). Brigadier-general Brind will command the artillery, Major-general Lord George Paget the cavalry division, and Major-general Cunningham and Colonel Sisted the infantry divisions. The two cavalry brigades will be commanded by Colonel Stannus, 20th Hussars, and Colonel Thompson, 7th Dragoon Guards, and the four infantry brigades by Colonel Macdonnel, C.B., Rifle Brigade, Colonel Shipley, 7th Fusiliers, Colonel Prior, 1st Goorkha Regiment, and Colonel Priestley, 42nd Infantry. The whole of these troops will not be assembled till the middle of January, but the bulk will be at Lahore by the 10th of December.—Friend of India.

KING OF THE ANDAMANS.—"It is not often," writes the Englishman, "that a removed or abdicated monarch returns to his throne and the seat of his power and government; but we understand that Government has prepared an instance of such reinstatement by the appointment of Lieut. colonel P. H. Haughton, now a commissioner in Assam, to succeed Lieut. colonel Tytler as King of the Andaman Islands, the government of which he formerly held. The salary of the King is, we understand, to be raised, and will in future be Rs. 1,750 a month."

ENSIGN KENNEY AGAIN.—Ensign Kenney, whose acquittal of a heinous charge we have mentioned before, is stated by the Oude Gazette to be still under arrest, preparatory to being brought to trial on fresh charges that have been preferred against him.

MADRAS.

THE LATE AFFAIR AT SAUGOR.

The following has been furnished us as a more accurate account of the affair at Saugor we recently noticed.

A captain of H.M.'s 97th Regiment being on the sick report, and in arrest, was permitted to take convalescent exercise morning and evening. This officer made arrangements to change his quarters, and during the time allowed him in the morning for exercise, he repaired to the house of a subaltern of the cavalry, there to take up his abode. On the morning of his leaving his old residence (where two other officers lived also) he sent an official letter informing the adjutant of his regiment of his having removed to another bungalow. He also wrote to the same effect to his medical attendant. Towards the evening the adjutant of H.M.'s 97th Regiment came down to the subaltern's bungalow for the purpose of removing him to his old quarters. He (the adjutant) said he had been ordered by the commanding officer to tell him (the captain of the 97th Regiment) that he was to go back to his old house, which he had quitted that morning without permission. He said he could not possibly go back to his old residence, as he had renounced all claim to the house, and further added that he did not consider the commanding officer was authorised to make him go to another man's bungalow, as a third party would naturally have something to say to that (referring to the other occupants of the house in question). An official letter was then sent to the captain, ordering him back, the answer to which embodied a respectful objection to return to his old house. About eight o'clock p.m. the adjutant came down with an European guard to remove the captain by force, if he still refused to go. At this the latter officer became highly excited, and it is stated that he drew his sword, but there are contradictory statements on this head, the captain alleging that the sword was put into his hand by another cavalry subaltern, who is likewise in arrest, and stated to have been drunk, and that he merely took the drawn sword, as it were mechanically, and almost immediately afterwards threw it down. The adjutant then went to the commanding officer's house, and after the medical officer had been consulted, it was considered that to remove the captain in his then highly excited state would be injurious to him, and the guard was consequently removed. The day following sentries were placed at the gates of the bungalow, the captain being then in close arrest. On this day about five p.m. the adjutant of the Cavalry came and placed the subaltern in arrest, but could not inform him on what charge, as he did not know himself. The day after, at the court of enquiry, the adjutant of the 97th Regt. stated that the subaltern was drunk, but did not interfere in any way with the guard, as appears to be the unfounded report. It was a very gratuitous, unnecessary, and most uncalled for information. There are two officers who considered that he (the subaltern) was not drunk, but greatly excited. This was natural enough, considering they (the guard) were about to remove forcibly an officer in a highly excited state, who, the chances were a hundred to one, would have resisted to the last. The captain was in error in not having obtained permission to change his quarters, which unfortunately constitutes his breaking his arrest, but it can only be ascribed to a mistake on his part, as it was not done wilfully. However, it will be with a court martial as to the light they view it in. The proceedings of the Court of Inquiry have gone up to Army Headquarters, and it remains to be seen what will be the issue. As to the Commander-in-Chief being telegraphed to, nobody at Saugor seems to have heard anything about it, though apparently the report has gained ground somehow.

THE GALES.

MADRAS.—MORE DISASTERS.—It is our painful duty to add another to the list of shipwrecks in the gale of Monday last. The ship Mencius, 510 tons, Captain Wood, which left here along with the others on Monday, drifted stern on to the beach at Sadras about ten o'clock the same evening. Finding the water shoaling, the captain made several attempts to put her about, but she would neither stay nor wear, and soon afterwards struck. Three men belonging to her crew walked up to Madras early yesterday morning, but were refused admission to the Home as deserters, in consequence of their refusal to return to their ship and render what assistance they could. This unfortunate vessel was advertised to sail for Calcutta on the 21st.

The barque St. Owein, from Adelaide, with horses, arrived here on Tuesday evening, and reports a collision with the barque Adelaide, one of the vessels which left here on Monday. The St. Owein lost her jib-boom and bowsprit in the collision.

The ship Sir Robert Seppings returned on Tuesday afternoon, but put to sea again yesterday morning.—Madras Times, Oct. 23.

COCHIN.—A friend has obligingly communicated to us the following telegram, dated the 20th of October, from Cochin:—"Heavy gale of wind. Ship Wings of the Wind on shore; total wreck." The Wings of the Wind was loading a cargo of coconut oil, coir, &c., for London.

Another telegram of the same date from Cochin states that the ship Fathel Razac was also totally lost, with several lives. The gale was still raging, and the ship Indomitable was considered to be in great danger.

This may account for the wind hanging from the southward at Madras for the last day or two. No mention is, however, made as to the direction of the wind at Cochin, so that it is merely matter of conjecture that we should be so affected.

The captain of the ship Mencius reported that he saw a white ship ashore about six miles north of his own disaster. The Lady Saliant was the only white ship that left our roads, but she was in sight last evening, and had been since the day before; it may be some other white vessel coming up from Mauritius.

A telegram was received in town yesterday morning from Captain Syme, from Cuddalore, saying that he had been wrecked off that port, and wanted the steamer to call for him to take him to Colombo; what vessel he was in he did not say.—Madras Times, Oct. 23.

During the night of the 19th and the morning of the 20th instant, the north-east monsoon came upon the port of Cochin with fearful severity, producing painful disasters to the shipping. The Arab ship Fatal Rosack went to pieces, and all hands but one were lost. The Wings of the Wind, Captain Whyte, bound for London, with a large cargo of oil and sundries, also foundered; with the exception of seven, who were drowned, the other hands reached the shore. The crew of a lifeboat, seven seamen of the Victoria, who volunteered on the noble adventure of saving the lives of the crew of the Indomitable, another fine vessel in the country trade, were all drowned except one man, who on reaching the shore was sent to the hospital. The Indomitable was still safe at her anchors late in the afternoon, the gale still blowing; she had lost her foretop mast. The Victoria, the Euglet and a vessel arrived the previous day from Colombo, were happily safe in the inner harbour. Great praise is due to Captain Castor, Master Attendant, who went out with his boat over the bar with the hope of bringing off the crews of these ill-fated vessels, but was compelled to return on seeing the lifeboat of the Victoria disappear in advance of him. At the same time all the authorities on shore exerted themselves to the utmost in affording relief to the sufferers.

After narrating these disasters, there is a pleasure in recording another trait of heroic disinterestedness. Captain Whyte, of the Wings of the Wind, said to his men, when in the agony of their peril, "Save yourselves, men, before the mast goes over upon you. Good bye, I shall be the last to leave the ship." Captain Whyte was saved. The morning of the 21st was fair, after a calm night, though wet. Indomitable in safety.—Madras Times, Oct. 26.

PONDICHERY.—The gale blowing here on Monday has, we learn, been severely felt at Pondicherry, and we regret to announce the total loss of the English barque Briton, which came on shore about 5 p.m., in trying to put to sea. The full force of the gale must have been felt at Pondicherry before noon, and we are at a loss to understand why so great a delay was allowed to take place before the ships were ordered off. At 5 p.m. the wind must have been blowing dead on shore, rendering it almost impossible for a ship to clear the coast. It would appear that the master attendant of our neighbouring port is not so active as our friend Captain Crowther, or that he is obliged to wait for orders from superior authority.—Madras Times, Oct. 21.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE SHIP "HURKAIRAH," from London 8th June for Madras, put in at the Mauritius leaky on the 9th of September.

RAILWAY TRAFFIC RECEIPTS.—The receipts of the Madras Railway of the South-West Line for the week ending Oct. 10, 1863, amounted for passengers, &c., to Rs. 22,588-10-6, for goods, &c., to Rs. 28,545-15-0, making together Rs. 51,134-9-6, or an average receipt per mile of Rs. 125-15-2. During the corresponding week in 1862 the receipts were Rs. 32,101-8-4, or an average receipt per mile of Rs. 79-1-1. The receipts of the North-West Line for the same week amounted for passengers, &c., to Rs. 1,188-0-10, for goods, &c., to Rs. 791-8-2, making together Rs. 1,979-9-0, or an average receipt per mile of Rs. 48-4-6. During the corresponding week in 1862 the receipts were Rs. 1,962-12-10, or an average receipt per mile of Rs. 47-13-11. The receipts of the Great Southern of India Railway for the week ending 10th Oct., 1863, amounted for passengers, &c., to Rs. 2,749-0-0, and for luggage, goods, &c., to Rs. 2,840-13-0, making together Rs. 5,589-13-0, or an average receipt per mile of Rs. 70-12-0. During the corresponding week in 1862 the receipts were Rs. 4,609-11-0, or an average receipt per mile of Rs. 59-2-0.—Madras Times.

CANNANORE, Oct. 15.—The weather for the last few days has been hot. Three gentlemen while going out "boating" a few days ago had a very narrow escape from drowning; fortunately they only got a ducking. On Monday, between four and five p.m., an officer of H.M.'s 102nd Regiment had an encounter with some "Moplah hawkers." It appears that he went into the shop of a hawker named Moideen Cooty to make a purchase, which he did, and was giving the same to his servant to place in his conveyance, when he was prevented and struck. Not liking the salutation he returned the compliment, and being plucky he convinced them that he had got a bit of "Tom Sayers" in him, when he was assailed by five or six Moplahs, who had a hit at him, and into it right and left he was obliged to go in self defence; but one of the rascals threw a missile at him, which struck his eye, and away he ran towards the barracks, leaving the Moplahs masters of the field, since which the Moplahs have found out that they have made a mistake, and are willing to compromise the affair for any amount. Now, I do not know how this matter will end, but a similar affair about two years ago ended in the hawkers being placed in "durance vile," besides paying a fine. How this affair would have ended had this officer had his sword on can easily be conjectured.—Madras Times, Oct. 21.

ZINC FOR ROOFING IN INDIA.—In 1858 Government sanctioned the use of zinc for roofing the railway station houses in Malabar. In April, 1861, the chief engineer reported that the zinc had stood remarkably well, and appeared to be adapted for roofing buildings upon the Malabar coast. It is now satisfactory to learn from a report of the present chief engineer that, on examination of the roof of the Beypore goods shed, which has now been up about three years, it has been found to have suffered no perceptible deterioration during that period, and is in every respect as good as new. This is the only zinc roof at Beypore, and it has needed no repairs.

SEPOYS' GARDENS.—We learn that a proposition has recently emanated from the Quartermaster-general's Department, which has met with the cordial approval of the Commander-in-Chief and the Government, to establish sepoy's gardens in connection with every native corps, on the same plan as those established for European troops; annual prizes being offered for the best show in vegetables, &c. The experiment is certainly worthy of a trial, and if those whose benefit is sought could be induced readily and cheerfully to co-operate, sepoy's gardens will give occupation for a large body of men, for whom it is no easy matter to find recreation and amusement.—Madras Athenæum.

"SHEPHERD KINGS."—On the 30th of Sept. the collector of Vizagapatam wrote as follows to the Chief Secretary to Government:—"I happened to be at Yellamanchili the other day, where there stands on the hill an old ruined fort, which local tradition points to as the stronghold of a dynasty of 'shepherd kings.' A few days before my arrival two cow boys discovered in the neighbouring jungle an earthen pot full of copper pieces, which are believed to have been coined in the time of these kings; but the savans at Madras must settle that point. I thought proper to secure the whole for the Government Museum, and bargained with the boys that they should get five rupees each, which is about double what they could have obtained in the bazaar for the coins as old copper. Sanction for ten rupees is requested. I send a dozen specimens of the coin with this letter. The rest, amounting to 3,193 pieces, shall be sent down in the next steamer. Regulation XI. of 1832 refers to hidden treasure, 'consisting of gold or silver coin, or bullion, or precious stones, or other valuable property,' and therefore I was clear it did not apply to the present case. The jungle where the discovery was made is within the bounds of a Government village." Government sanctioned the payment of rewards of five rupees each to the two boys referred to in the foregoing letter, and ordered that the coins sent by Mr. Carmichael should be forwarded to the Central Museum.

H.M.'s 68TH.—We (Englishman) have received Rangoon papers to the 3rd inst., and note that the inhabitants of the station intend giving a ball in honour of, and presenting a valuable piece of mess-plate to, the officers of H.M.'s 68th Durham Light Infantry, under orders for New Zealand. The regiment is deservedly popular among all classes.

FATE OF MYSORE.—That Mysore will revert to its native ruler is highly improbable, as we see from the local journal that Government has been examining different sites with a view to the construction of barracks for the location of troops. The death of the present Rajah, who is a childless octogenarian, cannot be far off.

THE INAM COMMISSION.—We learn from the Madras Examiner that Mr. W. T. Blair, Acting Inam Commissioner to Government, in his report for August, 1863, states that the number of cases decided by the deputy collectors during the month was 2,480, which raises the total number of cases decided from the commencement of the undertaking to the end of August to 3,15,636. Besides these, 4,022 cases of village service inams have been registered during the month, of which 3,305 come under the head of Government village servants, which under the rules are enfranchised on five-eighths of their assessment, and 717 under the head of village artisans. The total number of the several descriptions of service inams registered up to the end of August is 1,35,407.

RAILWAY TRAFFIC RECEIPTS.—The receipts of the Madras Railway of the South-West Line for the week ending 19th Sept., 1863, amounted for passengers, &c., to Rs. 17,845-0-10; for goods, &c., to Rs. 24,756-15-7; making together Rs. 42,602-6-5; or an average receipt per mile of Rs. 104-14-11. During the corresponding week in 1862 the receipts were Rs. 30,337-14-2, or an average receipt per mile of Rs. 74-11-7. The receipts of the North-West Line for the same week amounted for passengers, &c., to Rs. 1,341-10-9; for goods, &c., to Rs. 815-9-3; making together Rs. 2,157-4-0; or an average receipt per mile of Rs. 52-9-10. During the corresponding week in 1862 the receipts were Rs. 1,557-8-10, or an average receipt per mile of Rs. 37-15-10.

A PIER FOR BEYPORE.—Sir Charles Wood having taken into consideration several methods proposed by the directors of the Madras Railway for the improvement of Beypore harbour, has decided that a pier shall be constructed. This pier will run from the railway terminus into the harbour, and afford facilities for landing and embarking passengers and goods. It is to be regarded as an experimental attempt, and the cost must not be much in excess of Rs. 50,000. The Madras Daily News advocates the employment of a dozen mussoolah boats as likely to be of more service to the public. The jealousy of the P. and O. Company, combined with the apathy of the Madras Government, has hitherto been powerful enough to keep Beypore a mere fishing village, and so to deprive the Madras Railway of the profits of the overland trade to the east coast of India. The public, who pay the five per cent. guarantee, and are detained four days going round by Galle, are the sufferers.

AN INSTANCE OF HINDOO BRAVERY.—The difference in national character between the European and the Hindoo is very fairly gauged in an official paper published by the Madras Government. One Sonnan, hearing that his brother's house in Salem had been entered by a gang of robbers, ran to the rescue, and was wounded in three places. He was disarmed and seized by one man, whom he hit in the chest till he let him go. Then he was seized by others and pressed down under a bamboo, till he contrived to wriggle out and make his escape. He ran straight to his own house, and came back armed with a spear, and struck the first man in the bowels. The magistrate writes to Government—"You are aware of the importance of making an encouraging example of men who show what this country so much wants—courage in resisting the attacks of robbers;" and the Governor in Council authorises the magistrate to present a reward of Rs. 100 to Sonnan for his courageous resistance. From an Indian point of view the reward was fully deserved.

COTTON FRAUDS.—We hear on reliable authority that forty-two bales, shipped on board a vessel now in harbour, and represented as cotton, were seized by the Customs authorities on Saturday last. On examination the so-called cotton bales were found to contain the veriest rubbish. A more flagrant instance of adulteration than the present it would be scarcely possible to find.—Times of India.

COTTON.—The landholders of Kattywar have gained largely by the increased stimulus given to the growth of cotton by the American war, but numerous complaints have reached the Political Agent that adulterations of various kinds have been employed in the trade. The cotton has been wetted, dirt has been mixed with it, and different sorts of cotton have been put up in the same bale. Major Keatinge warns these dishonest traders that, should they persist in this system, their profits must for ever cease at the close of the war, and the trade which he calls "a flood of silver" come to a dead stop.

CEYLON.

SIR CHARLES MACCARTHY AND THE PROSPECTS OF CEYLON.

If the different reports regarding the plans of His Excellency the Governor for his expected departure for England, which have appeared in our own and our contemporaries' columns, have been founded on good authority, Sir Charles MacCarthy must be a very changeable man! Both the time and the conveyance have been differently represented, and the widely differing stories to which we gave publicity were all traceable to some good authority. The only other individual whose plans are surrounded by a haze is the treasurer, Mr. Saunders (who, we now learn, has obtained an extension of leave for six months;) but we suppose there is no more connection between the movements of the two gentlemen than there is in two advertisements which appear in another part of our paper: one announcing the sale of Dr. Charsley's household goods, and the other the sale of a Bath invalid chair, for which the owner has now no further use! One thing, however, is beyond doubt. Sir Charles MacCarthy could not have a more auspicious time for taking a temporary leave from Colombo than the present. The Supply Bill, framed as it is on principles apparently opposed to those hitherto acted on, cannot but be gratifying to the public; while the numerous ordinances passed or proposed which have the benefit of the native population in view, will justly cause him to be popular with the more thinking portion of that community.

We infer that no change is to be made in the ordinary course of events on this occasion; and, Mr. Gibson not having the commission held by two of his predecessors, that General O'Brien will undertake the duties of Lieut.-governor. The post will be best served by his making it as much of a sinecure as possible.

It will be seen, therefore, that the date of our Governor's departure for England is still a matter of uncertainty. It is a fortunate thing that his health latterly has improved, enabling him to continue to preside over the deliberations of the Legislative Council, as the Colonial Secretary is still absent from indisposition, and Government are not particularly well represented in the majority of its members there. Still a great deal of legislative work has been gone through; and measures of vital importance to the interests of the colony have passed under, and yet remain for, the deliberation of our senators. The particular bills are fully noticed in our columns; and it will, no doubt, afford much gratification to home readers having a stake in the colony, to observe the liberal disposition displayed in the disposal of the large revenue expected to accrue during 1864. The sums devoted to reproductive works are by no means stinted; but, alas! just as even our everlastingly grumbling community must have had their mouths closed with the bonbons thus so liberally provided for them, our hopes are dashed to the ground, and the gravest fears excited by the purport of a despatch from the Colonial Secretary of State, made to our governor, informing him that, on account of the strong feeling raised in Parliamentary circles by the motion of Mr. Lyall (pointing out that by our annexation to India a clear saving to the Home Government of so many thousand pounds of military expenditure would be effected), his Excellency must retain out of the general revenue a further sum of £30,000 in addition to the £24,000 already contributed to the Queen's chest. This will raise our total outlay for internal defence and military purposes to between £140,000 and £150,000, the one item of "colonial allowances" to the troops stationed in this small island in 1862 being £40,037. The following figures will show our total military expenditure for 1862:—

Military Expenditure, 1862.

Contribution to Queen's chest	£24,000
Colonial pay and allowances	40,037
Military pensions	30,613
Works and buildings	9,292
Colonial commissariat, deducting stoppages, &c.	16,439
Total	£120,381

The amount now expended by the Imperial Government on behalf (nominally, for our great military expenditure is for Imperial, not local purposes) of Ceylon is about £50,000, so that when we contribute £30,000, in addition to the above, the figures will stand as follows:—Out of the colonial revenue, £150,381; paid by the Home Government, £20,000, or less than one-eighth of the whole; while in Mauritius the Imperial Government defrays somewhere about three-fourths of the entire military expenditure of over £130,000. Can anything show more plainly the injustice of the treatment Ceylon is experiencing at the hands of the mother country in this respect. Well might the Sub-Committee on the Supply Bill for 1862 report on this subject:—"It is impossible to justify in Ceylon an expenditure which is not warranted by any colonial requirements, and is so utterly out of proportion to the expenditure of other colonies, and to its own annual revenue and civil expenditure."

And, moreover, we have not the slightest control over this expenditure. It may go on increasing at the pleasure of the Imperial authorities, who may send us more troops, or fill posts for which there is no necessity, with officers drawing salaries and allowances utterly disproportionate to the duties they have to perform. Here is where we complain most, and with the greatest justice.—That we are not permitted, through our Legislative Council, to have a voice in the expenditure for military purposes, on behalf of this colony.—Colombo Observer, Oct. 30.

CEYLON RAILWAY.—On Tuesday morning, owing to the sudden rise of the Kalany from the heavy rains of the preceding few days, a number of the piles and great part of the temporary wooden bridge erected over that river for railway purposes were carried away. This part of the work has been the most unfortunate, as it is perhaps the most difficult operation yet carried out, for while in course of construction the piles, after being considered firmly fixed, were washed out, and the work had to be repeated. Since the contractor's arrival in Ceylon we have not had rains which could afford him a fair criterion of the very heavy deluges we are often visited with in the south-west monsoon, the burst of which was this year unusually mild. The late wet weather, and which we may expect to continue, with greater or less intervals, for a couple of months to come, will afford the contractor and his staff a valuable, if expensive, experience of the dangers to be guarded against from such inundations. The present catastrophe is chiefly to be regretted from the delay it entails, not alone in the reconstruction of the bridge, but in the various operations further down the line, material for which was carried by this route. Another accident occurred at the Bridge of Boats by some of the heavy beams of the Railway-bridge dashing against the chains, one of which snapped. Fortunately the exertions of those in attendance prevented our communication with Kandy from being completely stopped.—Colombo Observer, Oct. 22.

APPOINTMENTS, &c.—COLOMBO, Oct. 16.—Lieut. Hunter, Ceylon Rifle Regiment, at the expiration of his present leave of absence, will join the detachment of his regiment stationed at Jaffna. Staff Assistant-surgeon Roe, in addition to his present duties, will take medical charge of the Garrison Staff and Military Department at Kandy. The undermentioned officer is granted leave of absence:—Captain G. A. Tranchell, Ceylon Rifle Regiment, from 23rd inst. to 30th of November, 1863, to visit Batticaloa. Lieut. Walker, Ceylon Rifle Regiment, will perform the duties of staff-officer at Trincomalee, during Captain Tranchell's absence.

TRAVELLING ALLOWANCE.

RESOLUTION.—The Hon. the President in Council observes that, under the Financial Resolution of Aug. 29, 1862, the distinction between the Covenanted and Uncovenanted Service in the Financial Dept. was abolished, and that under the Financial Resolution of July 26, 1863, all the officers of the dept. were placed, in respect to deputation allowsnore, under one set of rules, based on those for the Covenanted Civil Service.

In respect, however, to travelling allowance, two sets of rules are still in operation in the Financial Dept., one applicable to the Covenanted and the other to the Uncovenanted officers; but as the latter equally with the former are required in the Financial Dept. to travel from one presidency to another, thereby incurring heavy transit expenses for which the inferior rates of travelling allowance for Uncovenanted officers are inadequate, the superior rates for Covenanted officers will be given in lieu, in future, under the ordinary rules on that head.

ORDER.—Ordered, that the above resolution be published in the Calcutta Gazette for general information, and that a copy be forwarded to the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for information.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

FRIDAY, November 27, 1863.

THE ROYAL AMALGAMATION COMMISSION.

We may state positively that the Royal Commission on the amalgamation grievances of the Indian army have sent in their report to the Secretary of State for India, who will lay it before Parliament. What the exact purport of the report is we are not able to say; but we have good reason to expect that the just complaints of the service will be attended to, and that some remedies will be proposed for the peculiar cases of hardship which have been submitted to the consideration of the commissioners.

SCINDE, PUNJAB, AND DELHI BANK CORPORATION (LIMITED).

THE commerce of India is increasing with a rapidity that is perfectly marvellous. A few years ago our gubernatorial authorities little dreamt of what could be made of the country in a monetary and commercial point of view if colonisation and free trade and open competition of all sorts were properly encouraged. Happily a prodigious change has come over the spirit of every true statesman's dream respecting the importance and the resources of India, that "brightest jewel of the British crown." The British capitalist has discovered at last that India is one of the noblest fields in the world for the multiplication of moneys. Gold in India is not "a barren metal." A Shylock, or a better man can make it "breed as fast as ewes and lambs." There are now at least eighty millions sterling of British capital invested in Indian undertakings, and there can be no doubt that this amount will speedily be doubled. We need not wonder, therefore, that banks should be rising in all parts of India, or that the Scinde, Punjab, and Delhi Bank Corporation, which is scarcely a year old, should be stretching out its Briarean hands in all directions. The directors, seeing that India affords so vast a field for banking operations, announce in its very first annual report, now before us, that it is not their intention to confine its branches to any particular locality. Of course not. We shall soon see its operations extend all over India. This bank started with a capital of a million sterling, in 50,000 shares of £20 each. This great enterprise is already a success. The directors, encouraged to increased confidence and boldness, have turned their attention beyond the limits originally suggested for the operations of their institution. They have established a branch at Kurrachee and another at Bombay. They have increased their paid up capital to £125,000, and they are going to issue 12,500 additional shares of the original capital at par to shareholders on the register, in the proportion of one new share to every two old shares. The first ordinary general meeting of this company is to be held at the London Tavern, on the 1st of December next.

MONEY ORDERS ON THE COLONIES.

WHAT is the reason that the great convenience of the system of money orders which is accorded to all parts of Great Britain and Ireland, and is extended to Canada, the Cape of Good Hope, the West Coast of Africa, New Zealand, South Australia, Victoria, Western Australia, and the West Indies, and to British Guiana, is withheld from the vast and important colony of British India? Perhaps it is a favour that only needs the asking for it. But still it puzzles us how to account for the strange indifference, or neglect, or forgetfulness on this point of her Majesty's subjects in the East. We believe that military men in India, and perhaps civilians also, have the power to send to England through the local paymasters certain portions of their pay under the head of "family remittances," but commercial men, planters, and outsiders, and interlopers have no such indulgences from the Government, and even Government servants would hardly be allowed to send such petty sums to England through the Indian pay-offices as might be sent under a Money Post-office system. Sometime in 1862 the Post-office Money-order system was introduced as an experiment for remittances to all parts of the Lower Provinces of India on the Bengal side. Mr. H. Sandeman, the Civil Paymaster, and Mr. J. C. Ross, formerly Inspecting Postmaster at Cuttack, were appointed to carry out the system. No larger sums than Rs. 100 were to be sent through the Money-order Offices. The fee paid for remitting Rs. 10 is four annas; for not more than Rs. 25, eight annas; twelve annas for not more than Rs. 75; and one rupee for not more than Rs. 100. We hope the same system will be extended to the Upper Provinces and the whole of India. At present newspaper proprietors in India, with their subscribers scattered so widely over the Upper Provinces, must find it very difficult indeed, if it be at all possible, to fully realise claims which, however small separately, are of importance in the aggregate, from the difficulty which people find in obtaining the means of transmitting with safety petty sums from remote districts. Good hoonies, or orders from native bankers for small amounts, are not everywhere or always readily obtainable, and when obtainable, are costly. The same difficulty must impede the settlement of petty accounts, not with newspaper proprietors only, but with all sorts of traders as well as private individuals, not in India alone, but in this country also, in its monetary relations with the East. But the system should at once be extended from India to England, and be reciprocated between the two countries. It would be a great boon to merchants and traders; and friends divided by the great distances, East and West, and desirous of giving commissions for the purchase of articles in either quarter, would find it a truly welcome convenience if they could despatch Post-office money orders of any amount, however large or small, by any mail that would suit them. Under the present system of bank remittances it is calculated that a remittance at sight of twenty pounds, costs, on the average, about eight shillings and sixpence. The advantages of the Money-order system are so manifest, and it seems so strange that British India should be excepted from a privilege accorded to all other colonies, that we can hardly suppose our fellow-countrymen in the East, or the leading merchants and traders of England connected with Indian interests, will be much longer silent on this subject.

CONTINUATION OF THE COURT-MARTIAL ON COLONEL CRAWLEY.

We continue our summary of this important trial.

FIFTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

On Saturday last, November 21, Lieutenant and Adjutant Fitzsimon was again subjected to the severe cross-examination of Colonel Crawley. His questions were not only sharp and searching, but often sarcastic and contemptuous. "You have told us," said the Colonel to the Adjutant, "that you forbore to enter Sergeant-major Lilley's bungalow out of consideration for Mrs. Lilley—was she confined to her bed or to her house during the time of the arrest?" "I cannot exactly say," was the answer. "I do not think she was continually confined to her bed." "Will you swear," asked the Colonel, "that you do not know that during the whole time of Sergeant Lilley's arrest Mrs. Lilley was not confined to her bed, but went about the barracks visiting her acquaintances as usual?" "I swear that I do not know it. I never saw Mrs. Lilley go out. In my opinion she was ill and confined to her house." "Then," said Colonel Crawley, "you never took the trouble to inquire whether she was in the house or out of it—up and about the house or not." "I did not," was the answer.

"Are you of opinion," said the Colonel, "that Lilley and his wife suffered great and grievous hardships from the manner of the execution of the arrest?" "I consider," replied the Adjutant, "that Sergeant-major Lilley, being with his wife, must have suffered inconvenience by having the sentry posted so that he was not to lose sight of him night or day." Colonel Crawley: Did you never go inside his second bungalow during the arrest? Adjutant Fitzsimon: Never. Colonel Crawley: May I assume that that was out of the same tender feeling for Mrs. Lilley's health which actuated you in the case of the first bungalow? Adjutant Fitzsimon: Yes. "Who acted as Adjutant," said the Colonel, "after you ceased to do so?" "I believe," replied Adjutant Fitzsimon, "it was Cornet Snell." "You say you believe. Do you mean to say you don't know?" "To the best of my recollection it was Cornet Snell resided in my house. I have not a distinct recollection whether his orderly room was in my house or in the barracks." "Can you, Mr. Fitzsimon, speak to conversations and phrases, and yet not be certain whether the regimental orderly-room was in your own house?" "I have spoken to the best of my recollection." Colonel Crawley here called upon Colonel Pipon, the officiating Judge-Advocate, to read a very long letter from the Colonel to the Assistant Adjutant-general, M.D.A., which unequivocally contradicted the charges against his commanding officer embodied in Adjutant Fitzsimon's explanatory statement to Sir Hugh Rose, in reply to His Excellency's censure that his evidence at the Mhow Court-martial was evasive and unsatisfactory, and that he had been careless of his duty in the posting of the sentries over Sergeant-major Lilley. Adjutant Fitzsimon admitted that on perusing the Colonel's letter he withdrew his own statement. This ended this witness's long, tedious, and trying cross-examination. Colonel Crawley said he had no more questions to put to him, and Colonel Horsford, the official prosecutor, said he was happy to say that neither had he any more questions to put to him. The court adjourned.

SIXTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Sergeant Patrick Blake was recalled and made to undergo a brief cross-examination from his commanding officer, who still seems to speak with the same determined tone and air of authority as if he were on his own parade ground, and his faculties were evidently as much awake as if he were on the field of battle. "What induced you, Sergeant Blake," asked the Colonel, "to post the sentry outside instead of inside when you were corporal of the guard over Lilley? Was it in consequence of anything he said to you?" "No, sir. When I posted him Lilley was outside himself." Sergeant Mills was next recalled and cross-examined. "When Corporal Blake was arrested, where," asked the Colonel, "ought the sentry to have been posted, according to orders?" "Inside the little room—the servants' room." From that little room it is said that Lilley, sleeping on the couch in the hall or largest room, could be seen by the sentry. This was admitted by the witness in reply to a question from Colonel Horsford. This witness also admitted that the sentries had strict orders not to enter Mrs. Lilley's bedroom on any account, and that the sentries had no occasion to leave the servants' small room, except when Lilley went into the verandah or to the water-closet; that they had no right to be within two feet of Mrs. Lilley's bed, that neither Lilley nor his wife ever complained of annoyance, that the sentries never intruded on the wife's privacy, and that during the arrest the witness had several times seen Mrs. Lilley going about as usual out of doors.

After this Troop Sergeant-major Robert Cotton, 6th Dragoons, was examined by the official prosecutor. He was asked what character Lilley bore. The reply was, he, Robert Cotton, always considered him a hard-working, industrious and sober man. In reply to the question of whether Lieutenant Fitzsimon gave him the order respecting the arrest, he replied that he could not positively swear whether it was given to him verbally, or whether the Lieutenant dictated it to him from a written order, but the witness entered it into a little book and he could not recollect what had become of that book. He remembers that he remarked to Colonel Crawley that Lilley was a married man, and that on that the Colonel grew angry, and asked him how he dared to resist his orders. Colonel Crawley ordered him, he says, to post the sentries "inside the quarters." Colonel Crawley reserved his right of cross-examination of this witness, who was then permitted to retire.

The next witness for the prosecution was Major John Edward Swindley, 6th Dragoons. He distinctly recollects Colonel Crawley telling Lieutenant Fitzsimon that he did not know the meaning of close arrest. That it was not merely placing sentries over the quarters of a prisoner, but so placing them that they could not lose sight of their prisoner night or day, and that when Lieut.

Fitzsimon observed that Mrs. Lilley was so sick that liniment had to be rubbed on her stomach, Colonel Crawley replied, "He did not care a d—n, married or single, officer or soldier, close arrest was close arrest, and he would have his orders carried out."

A private named Little had been brought before the witness, Major Swindley, charged with allowing, when he was on sentry, a Mrs. Gibson of the regiment to have some communication with Lilley. He, the Major, inquired into the charge and dismissed it. Colonel Crawley was angry, and said that the man should have been tried by a court-martial. Lilley, according to Major Swindley, "bore the very highest character." He denied that Lieutenant Fitzsimon had a defective vision. He always believed him to have a very good eyesight.

Captain Archibald Weir, 6th Dragoons, was the next witness. He gave precisely the same testimony with respect to Colonel Crawley's now famous definition of arrest, and his "not caring a d—n about married or single, officer or soldier; arrest was arrest, and his orders must be carried out." He said that Mr. Wooden, the Quartermaster, Sergeant-major Cotton, Colonel Swindley, the Colonel, the Adjutant, and he thinks two sergeants were present when this strange conversation occurred. He gave Lilley "a most excellent character."

Quartermaster Charles Woodin confirmed the testimony of the last witness. The Colonel had called on him to give a written denial of the statement of Paymaster Smales in a newspaper. He asked the Colonel if he might add anything about his observation that "married or single, &c.," and that the Colonel said, "no—what you have stated is quite sufficient." The letter is of little importance, bearing but slightly on the question before the present Court. Colonel Crawley had asked him if he could place Lilley in other quarters; the Quartermaster suggested two others. "Neither will do," said the Colonel; "the one is too far, and the other too open, and Lilley would be up to some more tricks." He told Wooden to place Lilley in the troop-sergeant's quarters. "They are very small," said Wooden. "The quarters good for one sergeant-major are good for another." "But the troop sergeant-major," said Wooden, "is a single man." The Colonel got into a passion, and said, "I don't want any more 'buts,' do as I tell you." Woodin described Lilley as "a very good non-commissioned officer and soldier, and a very steady sober man."

Private John Little was then examined. He was sentry over Lilley. He testified that he was posted in the office, in the room next Mrs. Lilley's bedroom. He was opposite the bedroom. He could not see her bed, because the chick was down, without moving some paces from his post and looking through the chick, or lifting it up. He acknowledged that Mrs. Gibson came to the quarters while he was sentry, and for that negligence he was ordered to be confined. He saw Mrs. Lilley talking to Mrs. Gibson. Private James Reynolds, 6th Dragoons, deposed that he was orderly-room clerk at the time of Lilley's arrest. He recollected Colonel Crawley talking to Lieutenant Fitzsimon about a sentry being placed outside instead of inside the quarters. He also spoke of Colonel Crawley's memorable speech about "officer or soldier, married or single," &c. The Court adjourned.

SEVENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Private James Reynolds was recalled. He deposed that Sergeant-major Lilley bore a very good character for sobriety. He had never seen him drunk.

Colonel Henry Dalrymple White, C.B., Adjutant-general of Cavalry, was next sworn. He considered Lilley one of the most excellent soldiers and one of the most steady men he had ever met. A letter of his to the same effect was then read.

Major J. E. Swindley was recalled, and cross-examined by Colonel Crawley. He acknowledged that the court-martial at Mhow had censured him for the animus shown by him towards his commanding officer. He admitted that when he dismissed Private Little he should not have reported him "admonished," but "released." It was a mistake. He had seen Sergeant-major Lilley taking exercise, but he was attended by an armed non-commissioned officer. "Now, sir," said Colonel Crawley, "I ask you this, answer the question carefully—Did you never state to any person that Lilley and his wife were during the whole time of his arrest shut up together in one room?"—"If I ever had spoken about it to other persons I certainly should have done so; not during the whole course of the arrest, but for the latter portion of it. As for the recollection of my own sergeant-major's quarters, I should have believed that they were shut up in one room."

Sergeant-major Cotton was here recalled. He admitted that he was an intimate friend of Sergeant-major Lilley and Mrs. Lilley. Mrs. Lilley had visited his wife during Lilley's arrest. He admitted that he was censured by the Mhow Court-martial for the animus of his evidence against Colonel Crawley.

Captain Weir was called, and he, too, admitted that he had been censured by the Mhow Court-martial for the animus of his evidence against the Colonel, and that he had also been reprimanded by the Commander-in-Chief for disrespect to Colonel Crawley. He confessed that he had said at the Mhow Court-martial that, with the exception of the Smales case, Colonel Crawley had adopted towards the officers a conciliatory course. He had no official information that Mrs. Lilley was annoyed by the sentries, but a Mrs. Gibson, of the regiment, had told him that such was really the case. He said that Lilley's quarters were "certainly not unfitted for human habitation."

Quartermaster Woodin was now recalled. He was asked by Colonel Crawley if, when he wrote the letter contradicting statements in a letter written by Mr. Smales in the Deccan Herald, he had not stated that he had written the whole of what he could recollect. "Certainly not," was the answer.

Private James Liddell (or Little?) acknowledged that he had been brought up as a prisoner before Major Swindley. The major admonished him, but said he ought not to have been confined for so trivial a crime as that which he was charged with.

Sergeant John Gibson was now called on behalf of the prosecution. He had been twenty years in the 6th Dragoons, and had known Lilley seventeen or eighteen years: he was sober, steady, and industrious. He heard Colonel Crawley's speech of "He didn't care a d—n; officer or soldier," &c. Mrs. Lilley in her illness took about a bottle of brandy and wine nearly every two days.

At this stage Colonel Lodder, one of the members of the Court, was taken out ill, and the Court adjourned.

EIGHTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Colonel Lodder, of the 59th, was absent this day on sick certificate, being laid up with a severe attack of lumbago. Great preparations were made to-day by newspaper artists to give a representation of the leading personages present. Sergeant John Gibson was called first for cross-examination. He was asked if his wife had attended on Mrs. Lilley. Yes; she applied the liniment to her chest and shoulders, and gave the brandy.

Colonel Sir A. Horsford here put in a letter from Colonel Crawley to the Adjutant-general, dated Mhow, June 3, 1862, from which we give the following extract:—

"I learned a few days after the sergeant-major had been placed in arrest that the sentry had been most injudiciously placed by Lieutenant Fitzsimon, so as to give cause of annoyance to the sergeant-major's wife, and immediately sent Mr. Fitzsimon himself to withdraw the sentry from the presence of Mrs. Lilley, and to place him where he could do his duty with equally good effect without giving annoyance to her. Notwithstanding the precaution of placing the sentry in the room with Sergeant-major Lilley, it did actually occur that, through the neglect or connivance of one of the sentries, a communication was opened with the sergeant-major by a woman of the regiment. Immediately on the termination of the defence of Paymaster Smales on the 24th inst. I addressed a letter, as you are aware, to you, to request the major-general's permission to enlarge the arrest of the three sergeant-majors from close to open arrest, as the necessity for continuing the close arrest no longer existed. This permission I received on the following day, and I acted upon it forthwith. Unfortunately Sergeant-major Lilley died of a sudden attack of apoplexy about 4 A.M. on the 25th of May, and this has given a handle for the unfounded statements contained in the newspapers as to the peral character of the arrest of these non-commissioned officers."

Cornet Snell was now examined by Sir A. Horsford. Colonel Crawley had said to him, "Mr. Snell, Sergeant-major Lilley has complained in Court of the manner of his arrest." The witness replied that the sentry was in the room next to Mrs. Lilley's bedroom. "Who gave that order?" said the Colonel. Witness: "I understood it was yours." The Colonel then said he had ordered "close arrest. Go and see my orders carried out." Witness placed the sentry in the servants' room. The order was not to lose sight of the sergeant-major except when he went into his wife's bedroom. This witness had known Lilley eight years, and thought him always a very sober, steady man. He also heard the Colonel say, when told that Mrs. Lilley was ill, that "he did not care: an order was an order," &c.

Major Champion, assistant adjutant-general of the Mhow Division, verified a letter from the Deputy Adjutant-general of H.M.'s British Forces to Major-general Farrell, commanding Mhow Division, dated May 6, 1862:—

"SIR.—The enclosed letter (No. 1374) has been carefully dictated by the Commander-in-Chief on the assumption that no further matter has transpired against the non-commissioned officers concerned. If, however, they have been summoned in Captain Smales's defence, and Lieut.-colonel Crawley is of opinion that a charge of perjury can be established against any of them, or of conspiracy in any manner, a further reference should be made, and the enclosed letter should not be communicated. His Excellency observes that the best plan would be to send for Lieut.-colonel Crawley, and beg him to read the enclosed very carefully, and then to say if other circumstances have transpired rendering the communication of this letter inexpedient. His Excellency is most anxious to support the discipline of the regiment and its commanding officer's authority; but, to insure that, it is absolutely necessary that no prosecution should be instituted in this matter of which there may be a chance of failure. If the non-commissioned officers are released, as proposed by his Excellency, Sir Wm. Mansfield would recommend Lieut.-colonel Crawley to make a short but very kind address to them, and to point out that if any of them had felt hurt—and more especially the regimental sergeant-major—their right way of proceeding would have been to have requested to be allowed to speak to him upon the subject—a request which his Excellency is conscious would not have been made in vain. In conclusion, I am to request that the sergeant-majors concerned are not to be released from arrest, or the enclosed letter acted upon, until the proceedings in the trial of Captain Smales are entirely closed, and the Court of which Lieut.-colonel Payne is president has been finally adjourned.—I have the honour to be your obedient servant,

"FREDERIC THESIGER, Lieut.-col., Acting Deputy Adjutant-general her Majesty's British Forces."

Mrs. Ann Cotton was next called. Prosecutor: Are you the wife of Sergeant-Major Cotton? Witness: I am. Were you present when Sergeant-Major Lilley died? I was. Will you state what occurred? On the evening of the 24th of May, 1862, about ten minutes past ten o'clock, I was called upon by Mrs. Lilley to come into her quarters, as her husband was very ill, and herself not able to move in her bed. I did not go when she first called me, but about ten minutes after she called again. I then went in, and found Sergeant-Major Lilley very ill. He asked me to send for the doctor, which I did. I staid with him until about ten minutes to one. I then returned to my own quarters, and remained about a quarter of an hour, when Mrs. Lilley called to me again, and said her husband was dying. I immediately went in and found him still worse. He looked at me very hard. Mrs. Lilley said to him, "Do you know who that is?" He said, "Yes, it is Mrs. Cotton." He then took my hand, and said, "Mrs. Cotton, I am dying." I said, "Don't say so, Lilley; you will soon be better." He said, "No, my child, I never shall." He took my hand again, and said, "Good-bye, may God bless you!" I then assisted Mrs. Lilley from the bed where her husband was dying, and laid her on a sofa, until all was over. I then had her removed into my own quarters, where she remained until about a fortnight before her death.

Assistant Surgeon Oliver Barnett, of the 6th Dragoons, was next called. He had attended Mrs. Lilley before her husband's arrest. Her disease was consumption. When he attended her during her husband's arrest she was in the room No. 3, next to the office room, No. 2. The sentry could see into her room by moving the chick. The chick was lined with cotton half-way up. He had seen the sentry's head over the chick. The sentry could hear the conversation in the bedroom, unless carried on in an undertone. Mrs. Lilley was the greater part of the day in bed. He was painfully impressed by the proximity of the sentry to the bedroom of a sick woman. It was a great annoyance to Mrs. Lilley. Colonel Crawley never consulted me about the position of the sentries. Mrs. Lilley took two or three glasses of brandy daily by my recommendation. Lilley was a sober steady man. Colonel Crawley met him on the 9th of June, and asked him how much liquor Lilley had taken during his arrest. Witness said he did not know, but he never saw him intoxicated. Colonel Crawley said, "He had twenty-three bottles of brandy, twelve pints of ale, a bottle of port, and some gin." When the parade was dismissed, I waited upon Colonel Crawley and asked him if he wished us to make any addition to our report on the sergeant-major's case in reference to the quantity of liquor supplied to him during the arrest. The colonel replied, "No; I have done it," or "I will do it, in my report." Lilley was an enormously stout man, and predisposed to congestion. He died from heat-apoplexy.

The Court adjourned.

NINTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

It is now expected that the evidence for the prosecution will close about the middle of next week.

Assistant surgeon Barnett was recalled. He acknowledged that after he had heard of the quantities of liquor taken by Sergeant-major Lilley while under arrest he had concurred with Dr. Turnbull in a modification of their joint report; but he considered that the original statement was substantially the same.

Colonel Snell was now cross-examined. He deposed that he had acted as adjutant for some days for Lieutenant Fitzsimon, and that he was then living in that gentleman's house, but before Lieutenant Fitzsimon "he was not prepared to swear distinctly whether the orderly-room was in the barrack-yard or at Mr. Fitzsimon's." He had frequently visited Lilley—sometimes twice a day. He had asked him if he had any complaints to make, but he never made any to the witness.

Sergeant George Bernard was recalled, and asked if he ever put notes and papers through a crevice in the wall to Sergeant-major Wakefield, and he confessed that he had done so on one or two occasions.

Assistant-surgeon Oliver Barnett was here recalled and cross-examined. He said that up to the time of Lilley's arrest he believed that Mrs. Crawley was in the habit of visiting Mrs. Lilley in her illness, but he was not quite sure of that. He was on intimate terms with Colonel Crawley and his family, and visited them professionally day and night, in consequence of Mrs. Crawley. He never made any representation to the Colonel of Lilley's condition under arrest. There seemed to be a mutual understanding that the subject was not to be alluded to. It never was. He reported to Surgeon Turnbull all the circumstances, and the inconvenience caused by the position of the sentry. He was not aware that Dr. Turnbull ever made any report to the Colonel. No one could have anticipated the death of Lilley in consequence of the circumstances of the arrest. He was in his usual good health two days before he died. No special report nor any information of his illness was given to Colonel Crawley until after the man's death. Dr. Turnbull did not attend Lilley during his illness. The following was the modified medical report:—

Addendum to Detailed Medical Case of the late Regimental Serg. major Lilley, 6th Drags., forwarded for the information of H.E. the Commander-in-Chief.

In addition to what was stated in my report forwarded yesterday I have the honour to add that it has been brought to my notice that the deceased was in the habit of drinking a considerable quantity of brandy daily during the period of his arrest; and on inquiry I find the above statement to be correct. It is my opinion that this, in connection with the other exciting causes before related, was calculated to increase the predisposition to an apoplectic seizure, from which he died. The universal reputation which the deceased enjoyed in the regiment for sobriety and steadiness, and the medical officer in his daily visits never having noticed any symptoms of intemperance, precluded all suspicion as to his being addicted to the use of spirits.

(Signed) G. A. TURNBULL, Surg., 6th Drags.
Mhow, June 9, 1862.

This addition was made subsequently to Colonel Crawley's conversation with Dr. Turnbull on the subject of the quantity of brandy taken by Lilley during his arrest. The witness had inquired of Mrs. Lilley if the statement about his drinking so much was correct, and he was satisfied by her answer that it was so. When he stood at the head of Mrs. Lilley's bed in her illness he could see through the thin transparent lining of the chick at a certain distance and in a certain light.

Surgeon Gavin Ainslie Turnbull, 6th Dragoons, was the next witness for the prosecution. He did not attend Lilley, but he had recommended that he should be allowed to take exercise, and the permission was given. He also recommended that he might sit in the open verandah. There was no coroner's inquest on the body of Lilley. Colonel Crawley decided that there was no necessity for one. He thought it a case in which a coroner's inquest would ordinarily have been held. In conjunction with Dr. Barnett he had made a post mortem examination. Colonel Crawley declined forwarding the second, or modified, medical report to the Commander-in-Chief, because he had forwarded his own report about the brandy consumed by Lilley, and thought the doctor's supplementary report unnecessary.

To a question from the court, witness gave the following answer:—The heat at that season of the year, the predisposition of the patient to congestion, the peculiar and painful circumstances of his position, the illness of his wife, the mental anxiety, grief, and depression of spirits which he suffered during his confinement, together with the bilious and nervous derangement induced by a sedentary life in a man of the sergeant-major's active habits, all acted as exciting causes to produce the complaint of which he died. I wish to add that this opinion is to a certain extent modified by my subsequent report.

Lieutenant and Acting-Adjutant Robert Davies, 6th Dragoons, was next examined. He placed a sentry in No. 2 room (small outer room entered from the east verandah). He found that the sentry was afterwards removed to the servants' room, No. 4.

Mr. Richard Hudson, an apothecary, a gentleman with an English name but an Oriental complexion, was the last witness examined that day. He was present during a portion of the time of the post mortem examination of Lilley. His opinion was that he died of a fit of apoplexy. He attributed Lilley's death to sedentary habits, his painful position, the sickness of his wife, and the heat of the weather at the time.

The Court adjourned to ten o'clock this morning.

BOOKS.

The Drain of Silver to the East and the Currency of India. By W. Nassau Lees, LL.D. London: W. H. Allen and Co., 13, Waterloo-place.

This is a very clever and ingenious book, but whether it will be widely sold or widely read is a very doubtful question. When the author communicated his intention to lay the results of his calculations and reflections before the world he was told that "the British public seemed determined not to read anything relating in the most remote degree to India." Why India, so peculiarly important a possession to England—so romantic and gorgeous a land in the eyes of most other nations, should be so little attractive to the English at home, as a topic of conversation in private life, or of public discussion in the Senate, it is really not easy to say; but that such is really the fact there can be no dispute. Only forty members of the British Senate out of six hundred could be persuaded to listen to the last annual financial statement of her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, though it ought to have filled all England with pride, and exultation, and triumph to have found how rapidly the British power in the East had been extricated from all the dangers, and difficulties, and distresses of the great mutiny. The author, however, though discouraged for the time, and induced to put aside his manuscript, observing that the currency of India question was about to come under the consideration of the authorities at Westminster, has taken courage to publish a book which may furnish very important hints on difficult matters on which many errors are still prevalent.

Dr. Lees has observed with alarm the immense drain of silver from the West to the East, and has endeavoured to account for it and to propose a remedy. The book is full of most valuable details in illustration of his arguments. India has no silver mines to supply her own wants. She relies entirely on the resources of western lands. For some time past she has been receiving silver at the rate of about £10,000,000 yearly. If this process goes on it must cause some disturbance in the bullion markets of Europe. Dr. Lees advocates a gold currency for India. He declares boldly that at every mint in India the local Government should receive gold at the Bank of England rate per ounce of standard fineness, and coin all that should be tendered, issuing notes in lieu of it; as this, if successful, would, he thinks, fix the price of gold all over India.

THE LATE REV. STEPHEN HISLOP OF NAGPORE.

The newspapers of the day have recently recorded the death, in melancholy circumstances, of this gentleman, whose geological researches in Central India will doubtless render an obituary notice of him interesting to many.

Stephen Hislop was born at Dunse, in Berwickshire, on the 8th of September, 1817. He received his education first in the schools of his native village, and subsequently at the Universities of Glasgow and Edinburgh. On the "disruption" of the Scottish establishment, in 1843, Mr. Hislop, then a student, cast in his lot with the seceding party, and was sent out next year to found a mission at Nagpore, in Central India.

Schools were in process of time established at the three stations of Nagpore, Seetabuldee, and Kamptee. These ultimately acquired great influence, being attended by no fewer than 700 pupils. During extensive tours, undertaken for missionary purposes, Mr. Hislop paid keen attention to the physical character of the districts traversed, and various geological discoveries of a remarkable character were the result. Several officers, after a time, joined in the inquiry, and rendered effective assistance. A brief notice of the Nagpore discoveries was sent by Mr. Hislop, in April, 1853, to the Bombay branch of the Royal Asiatic Society; and a more detailed paper, in our joint names, was read before the Geological Society of London on the 21st of July, 1854, and printed in their Quarterly Journal for August 1855. Various supplemental papers were subsequently drawn out by Mr. Hislop, which also appeared in the journal. When afterwards at home on sick leave, he obtained aid from the British Museum and other sources, and described the fossil shells from Central India, a large number of which were new to science. Professor Owen had already named and pointed out the characters of one remarkable fossil, a new labyrinthodont reptile. Professor T. Rupert Jones, from whose kind assistance and sympathy much advantage had all along been derived, added a memoir on the Cyprides. Mr. A. Murray, F.R.S.E., took up the subject of the insect remains. Sir Charles Bunbury appended a paper on the more antique series of the fossil plants. The more modern series of plant-relics, chiefly beautiful fruits, believed to be of Eocene age, has not yet been figured.

Though geology was the chief, yet it was not the only subject of inquiry at Nagpore; and it was in connection with another department of research that the lamented missionary met his death. In December, 1847, as Mr. Hislop, with his colleague, was passing the village of Takulghat, twenty miles south of Nagpore, he observed a circle of large unhewn stones. Further examination revealed that there were no fewer than ninety such circles, some single, others double—all close together, and spreading over an area of about four square miles. Permission was subsequently sought and obtained from the late Rajah of Nagpore to make excavations among the circles; and in the centre of one of them, at the depth of three feet from the surface, was found an iron vessel like a frying-pan, with a handle on either side, which had rusted off and was now lying detached. The bottom of the vessel was covered with little pieces of earthenware, neatly fitted to each other like mosaic work, possibly designed to protect human ashes, of which, however, there were only doubtful traces beneath. The hostility of one of the petty native officials at Takulghat prevented the excavations from being as complete as had been intended, and it was all along felt that they should be resumed when a favourable opportunity presented itself. A couple of months ago, Mr. Temple, the chief commissioner at Nagpore, who had succeeded to the authority of the deceased Rajah, was encamped four miles from Takulghat, and, feeling that the time had come for paying renewed attention to the stone circles, wrote requesting Mr. Hislop to join him and superintend a new series of excavations. The missionary in consequence set off for Takulghat on the 3rd September, and aided Mr. Temple, during that day and the next. As the night of the 4th approached, Mr. Temple left first for his camp, and Mr. Hislop was to follow when he had gathered up the trophies and examined a school in the neighbouring village. It was the depth of the monsoon, and, though no rain had fallen at Takulghat, it must have done so very heavily somewhere in the vicinity. In consequence, Mr. Temple, on reaching the back-water of a river, which had been quite shallow in the morning, found it ten feet deep. He left behind him a native to warn Mr. Hislop of his danger, and conduct him to a ford some distance higher up the stream. When night fell the native left his post, and went back nominally to meet the missionary. Two horsemen left at Takulghat as an escort were also missing when the hour of departure came. Mr. Hislop, thus unwarned, rode up to the fatal post, unattended, at a canter, and was immersed before he suspected danger was near. There were indications to show that he must have been thrown from his horse as the animal was plunging in the water. Alone, and under the cloud of night, he struggled hard with his destiny. But all his efforts were unavailing to avert the fatal result. When two hours later his horse appeared in Mr. Temple's camp without a rider, alarm was excited, and parties having been sent out to scour the jungle, the body of the missing missionary was found in comparatively shallow water, still holding with a death grasp handfuls of grass, showing that he had succeeded at one period in reaching the bank, but had been too feeble to raise himself from the water.

Mr. Hislop was tall, wiry, and able to endure astonishing fatigue. His natural and moral courage were heroic. None could long associate with him without being constrained to admire his fortitude and decision of character. His powers of observation were of the first order. His mind was unimaginative, but logical and painstaking in no ordinary degree. His general knowledge was extensive. He could address a native audience in Maharratta with much effect, and had preached in that tongue through a great part of Central India, enlivening the tedium of the journeys (mostly performed on foot) from village to village by geologising as he went along. His personal piety was deep and sincere, and he possessed much influence over the Europeans, as well as the natives of Central India. He leaves a wife and four children. An obituary notice of him, from the pen of Professor T. Rupert Jones, in the November number of the Geologist, concludes with these remarkable words:—"Taken away suddenly from his family, his friends, and his native church and schools, he will live in our memory as a beloved man, just and good, and as an acute observer, cautious and conscientious, not courting praise, nor even justice, but delighting in work and truth, as a loving student of nature, and a faithful servant of God."—R. HUNTER, late of Nagpore.—The Reader.

EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

The report of the directors states that the gross receipts for the half year ending the 30th June amounted to Rs. 368,160 (£33,784). The number of passengers conveyed was 422,164. The gross receipts since the end of the half-year had continued to improve. The working expenses appeared to amount to 48.38 per cent., exclusive of the maintenance of the line. The steamer Pioneer, which had been chartered by the company for the purpose of opening up and showing the advantages of a direct steam communication between the great trading mart of Serajunge, on the Burhampooter, and Kooshtee, had for a time been worked at a loss, but the loss would be repaid by the earnings of the steamer before the end of last month. The steamer was now being worked at a profit, as the earnings for the week ending the 26th September amounted to Rs. 5,948, against Rs. 2,500, the estimated working expenses. The object of hiring her had thus been obtained, by inducing the proprietors of steamers and country boats to keep up the communication, and they had accordingly empowered the agent to discontinue the employment of the Pioneer. Two additional lines of river steam communication from Kooshtee to the eastward were now fully established—namely, one to and from Assam, and the other to and from Cachar and Sylhet; and there was a probability of two or more additional river steam companies availing themselves of the advantages afforded by the port of Kooshtee. The directors regretted that the progress in the construction by Government of the feeder-roads to the railway had not been so rapid as they could wish. The directors had given special notice that at the meeting they would ask for powers to raise from time to time, as necessity might arise, with the sanction and guarantee of the Secretary of State for India, sums of money not exceeding in the whole £300,000. The revenue account for the three months ending December, 1862, showed that £8,860 had been received, on 77½ miles of railway, and £4,925, or 55.57 per cent., expended, leaving a balance of £3,935. The revenue account for the half-year ending the 30th of June last, on 170 miles of railway, showed that £33,748 had been received, and £16,327, or 48.38 per cent. expended, leaving a balance of £17,421. The steamer account, from February to June, showed that £680 had been received and £2,238 expended, leaving a balance against net revenue of £1,558. The net revenue account to the 30th of June showed that £21,356 had been received, out of which £1,558 was deducted for loss on working the steamer, leaving £19,798 payable to Government in reduction of interest advanced to the company. The capital account showed that £1,409,602 had been expended.

EAST INDIAN IRRIGATION AND CANAL COMPANY.

The directors state in their report that the affairs of the company continue in a very satisfactory position, and although the period of the year which had intervened between the last and the present report was the most unfavourable for the prosecution of the works, a very large amount of labour had been efficiently performed by the professional staff. The local Government had heartily recognised the great importance of the intended operations, and had exerted their influence to help forward the project. The Government had transferred a short line of canal, which they had partially constructed for navigation during high tides only between Oolaberiah, on the river Hooghly, and Mohestraka Ghat, on the Damoodah river, upon the understanding that the company should pay them the amount they had expended on it. The Banka Nulla Canal, intended to be enlarged and improved by the company, had been given over to the latter by the Government free of charge. The latter canal had been opened in March last and the former in May last for public navigation, and the receipts on account of tolls had been increasing and very satisfactory. It appeared from the latest statements of the manager and engineers that the local supply of labour for the present was likely to be sufficient. The works in hand were the High Level Canal from the city of Cuttack to the port of Calcutta, the Delta works, the Tidal Canal, from Balasore to the river Hooghly, near Calcutta, the improvement of the Mahanuddy river, and reservoirs for the storage of water. In the execution of so extensive a scheme of works as that belonging to the company it has been considered prudent and beneficial to urge on speedily at the commencement certain portions only, so as to concentrate as much as possible both labour and supervision, and at the same time produce the earliest results, and the following had been selected for that purpose, viz., the weirs and other works at the head of the Deltas, the first and last sections of the High Level Canal, viz., from Cuttack to the Brahmany river, and from Midnapore to the Damoodah, opposite the end of the Oolaberiah Canal, and the tidal line from the last-named canal to Balasore. The whole estimated cost of those four works, including management, &c., was about £550,000, and it was represented by the chief engineer and by the manager that if labour was sufficient, and although the expenditure upon the head works would be unproductive, a fair amount of profit upon the whole amount progressively expended might be expected. As the expenditure of funds was now likely to be materially increased the directors were prepared to receive payments in advance of calls, upon which interest at the rate of 5 per cent. would be paid. The sum of £264,871 had been received on capital account to the 30th of Sept., and £92,494 had been expended.

MADRAS IRRIGATION AND CANAL COMPANY.

The report of the directors states that they obtained an Act of Parliament by which it was expressly declared that the benefit of the guarantee given by the Secretary of State was to be confined to the owners, for the time being, of the shares representing the £1,000,000 now raised.

The position and powers of the company had been during the last six months materially and permanently improved. They regretted, however, that the progress of executive operations in India during the same period had not been so rapid as was anticipated. The rainy season had been of unusually long duration, the supply of labour had been far from adequate to the actual requirements, and consequently a large amount of work had been held in abeyance. Contractors for small sections of the canal had been already induced to come forward, while others were expected, and an extension of the system of employing daily labourers had been entered upon, and so far the results were assuring. The directors had authorised an increase in the rates to be paid for the work yet to be done to such an extent as might be found advisable. This step had been thought prudent to secure the more rapid prosecution of the works. The directors had given special and urgent instructions that every possible exertion was to be made to execute the works in the Nellore section and those in the valley of the Koonchair as expeditiously as possible, both of those localities containing extensive tracts available for irrigation, and the work there being of a comparatively easy nature. The Mysore Government had officially expressed their willingness to transfer to the company the Luckovally site upon very fair and beneficial terms; and as those terms had received the approval of the Governor-general of India in Council, the company were at liberty to enter into its possession, if they so desired. The higher portions of the scheme of works originally selected for the company, including the important district of Bellary and its adjoining territories, were at the outset (i.e., in 1859) partially surveyed, but their further prosecution was subsequently held in abeyance. They had now been again taken in hand; and a thorough investigation, with a view of planning the best and most useful system of works there, including the storage of water, so far as might be practicable, in the adjoining rivers, had been entrusted to a competent engineer and staff, under the guidance of the chief engineer. The directors were led to believe that the results would prove highly favourable, and testify to the additional value which such extensions would confer upon the lower portions of the entire scheme, and thus also confirm the importance of the power of completion and development given by the company's contract. Up to the 30th of September last £727,254 had been received on capital account, and £348,787 expended, leaving a balance of £378,467.

MISCELLANEOUS.

EAST INDIA COTTON AGENCY COMPANY.—The East India Cotton Agency (Limited) Company held its second ordinary general meeting on Wednesday last, at the London Tavern; Mr. T. Bazley in the chair. The chairman said that the approximate statement of profit showed £2,930. 3s. 5d.; and this, after deducting current expenses, would leave a dividend of 4s. per share, or 5 per cent. So popular was the company in Bombay that 20,000 shares had been applied for; and Mr. Brice had allotted the 3,000 shares remaining from the first issue. This circumstance had led to a new issue of 20,000 shares. The report was adopted, and it was decided that a dividend of 2s. 6d. per share on 6,700 shares should be declared.

THE SHIP "THOMSON HANKEY, JUN."—Upwards of 50 guineas premium on insurance was being paid at Lloyd's on Tuesday on the ship Thomson Hankey, jun., from Mauritius for the port of London, a supposition prevailing that she is the vessel that was seen to blow up on the 22nd of October last, near Villafraanca. She was chartered to bring home Government stores from Mauritius, and had about fifty tons of powder.

EXPORT OF SPECIE.—The particulars of the specie to be conveyed by the Delta, which leaves on the 27th (to-day) are as follows:—Suez, gold, £80; Alexandria, gold, £250,550; Bombay, gold, £13,000; and silver, £320,910; making a total of £624,120.

ADJUTANT FITZSIMON.—Lieutenant and Adjutant Fitzsimon, who has given the chief evidence on the Crawley trial, is a grandson of the celebrated Daniel O'Connell.—Express.

ETHNOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—A very interesting account of the Weddoss or Widdos, by A. Taniel, native of Ceylon, was read at the meeting of this society on Tuesday evening; Mr. John Lubbock in the chair. The Weddoss are supposed to be the descendants of some royal families of Ceylon, who took refuge in the forests of the interior when the island was invaded, 2,172 years ago. The descendants of these refugees have secluded themselves in the jungle, and not associated with the other races inhabiting the island. The males barter dried venison, wax, and ivory for salt and arrowroot. They are good marksmen with the bow and arrow, destroying human life at a distance of sixty yards. They are, however, quite unacquainted with the use of firearms. Recently they have begun to cultivate the land, and to use clothing. The women are never seen by strangers, and any attempt to approach their villages is resented. Their principal deity is the tortoise Ebba, to whom they make offerings on occasions of sickness or childbirth. So strictly are the females secluded, even amongst themselves, that a father does not see his daughter when she has attained the age of womanhood, nor a mother her grown-up son. If a sick person does not recover after the offerings made to the deity Ebba, he is abandoned, and dies unattended, the corpse remaining unburied. The Weddoss subsist generally on the flesh of wild animals cured in honey, or, in times of scarcity, on decayed wood soaked in honey. As an article of barter, they place a higher value on salt than on any other commodity. In appearance they may be described as a miserable-looking race; their language is a dialect of the ancient Cingalese, mixed with Talengo, and is quite intelligible to the natives even of distant parts of the island.

TRADE WITH JAPAN.—Some interesting particulars respecting our trade with Japan appears in Tuesday night's Gazette. They are contained in a despatch dated Yokohama, Sept. 11, 1863, and received by the Secretary for Foreign Affairs from her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Japan. The returns are for the half-year ended June 30, when the situation of affairs was more menacing and alarming than at any previous period. The value of the export trade in British vessels had increased during the period referred to from £253,337 of the corresponding period last year to £561,120 for the first six months of this year. In imports we have, during the same time of the current year, £111,470, against £68,981 for the corresponding period. In this year's returns raw cotton also figures as an article of export for the first time. The quantity was 795,207 lbs.

NEW BLUE COLOUR FROM PATCHOULY.—"Azulene" is the name given by Mr. Septimus Piesse to a new beautiful blue body discovered by him to exist in several essential oils, particularly in that of patchouly. The sage-like patchouly plant is cultivated to a considerable extent at Penang for the sake of the well known peculiar perfume which it yields; it is said also to be an ingredient in Indian-Chinese tuk. The discovery of azulene will probably stimulate the industry at the Penang Patchouly Farm, though it should be known that this plant can also be grown to an unlimited extent in Ceylon. In a paper read before the Chemical Society, at Burlington House, the author stated that oil of camomile yields one per cent., wormwood three per cent., and patchouli six per cent. of azulene.

PROSPECTS OF ASSAM.—Assam having been annexed in 1826, immediately after the first Burman war, what has been done for it? Let us see: a howling waste prolific of beasts of prey; the people sunk into the most degraded state of stupefaction; the government bounding them on to destruction by the sale of opium, which you will find vended in every green-grocer's shop. Excuses are put forth that this latter will put a stop to the cultivation of the poppy in Assam, and from the dearness of the drug will induce the Assamees to work. What a salve to the conscience! How has this hobby worked? Let us examine. Have we any more labourers in our tea barrees or the executive engineer on his works? Look at the incessant influx of imported labourers, which gives the assertion a flat contradiction. On the contrary, what is it doing but decimating the Assamees that are, and stunting the rising generation? The future holds out a blank. The remedies are in the hands of Government, and if he Lieut.-governor would make this his pet province as Lord Dalhousie did Burmah and the Punjab, this howling waste would bloom and be covered with teeming millions. The climate is superior to Burmah; it is rich in soil and minerals; abounding in the best of timber and coals; gold can be had abundantly in exchange for cloth, beads, rum, &c. The hills indicate wealth worth the seeking, and what is found is worth the working. A company starting to work the Jeypore colliery will have as large a dividend as any speculation in India: 25 per cent. could be guaranteed. The coal is not five per cent. inferior to English coal. Timber can be brought hence to Calcutta at less cost than timber from Moulmein. Sassafras is used here for planking. Can all this incite no emulation to acquire in a (I can't say a new) province that wealth which the old cannot afford?—Englishman.

MR. EPHRAIM MOSELY'S IMPROVEMENT in the CONSTRUCTION OF ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATE'S, on an INDIA-RUBBER BASE, are secured by Letters Patent, dated December, 1862, whereby the continual outlay of new teeth is avoided, alterations from the absorption of the gums, or any other cause, being easily remedied, and the first outlay no greater than for ordinary kinds. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted as under:—It consists of one continuous piece of Prepared India-rubber. The Artificial Teeth present a uniformly even surface to the action of the tongue, preventing lodgment of food and all accretions, so much complained of in the present system. No gold or any other metal being required, all springs, wires, and fastenings are wholly unnecessary; sharp edges are avoided, a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity hitherto wholly unattainable, and a fit perfected with the most unerring accuracy, are secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth which loose or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums. The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the prepared india-rubber; and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may be retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being at the same time provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Morlan, &c., at half the price of new. Quintessence of Jamaica Ginger and Camomile.

GINGER has long been deservedly known as an excellent domestic medicine, and, combined with camomile, it is the most efficient stomachic tonic known, for while the ginger relieves the stomach from distension and flatulency, arising from impaired digestion, the camomile strengthens the coats of the stomach, and by that means gives it a healthy and invigorating tone. So highly concentrated is this preparation, it is unimpaired by age or climate, and well adapted for exportation. In Gout, Spasms, Dysentery, Cholera, or those complaints incidental to tropical climates, it is invaluable; as in numerous cases a dose or two has checked and frequently cured most alarming attacks. No family should be without it. Sold in half-pints, quarter-pints, and one-eighth pints.

Agreeable Sedlitz Powder, in one bottle, protected by a case, with measure and spoon included. The advantage of this preparation is the perfect combination of the solid ingredients of the Sedlitz Spring in one compound powder.

It is very cooling and refreshing, well adapted for exportation, or travellers by land or sea.

Aromatic Liniment of Quinodine.—For the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria.

No person exposed to the influence or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for it taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria.—Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by THOS. WILKINSON (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Regent-street, London, W.

EXTRAORDINARY CURE of a COUGH.

The following letter has been received:—"Nightingale-hall, Edmonton. Dear Sir,—I have recently suffered much from a most violent cough, proceeding from a tickling in my chest, which no remedy, out of many I resorted to, could allay. My head was constantly aching and my whole frame entirely shaken. Having seen the good effects of your Balsam of Aniseed in several members of my family, I purchased a small bottle, and when going to bed at night took a teaspoonful in two tablespoonfuls of water, just warm. The effect was immediate; it arrested the tickling in my chest, I slept well, and arose perfectly restored in the morning, with the exception of debility, arising from fatigue by incessant coughing for some days previous. My cough entirely left me, and has never returned. Having since heard of a lady in the neighbourhood who for a long time had laboured under a most distressing cough, and who had resorted to every remedy within her knowledge, I sent the remainder of the bottle to her; and that long standing, obstinate, and (as she thought) incurable cough was perfectly cured.—I am, my dear Sir, yours very truly, WM. BOARDS. To Mr. Thos. Powell."

POWELL'S BALSAM OF ANISEED,

DINNEFORD'S PURE FLUID MAGNE-

STIA has been, during twenty-five years, emphatically sanctioned by the Medical Profession, and universally accepted by the Public, as the Best Remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion, and as a Mild Aperient for delicate constitutions, more especially for Ladies and Children. When combined with the Acidulated Lemon Syrup, it forms an agreeable Effervescent Draught, in which its Aperient qualities are much increased. During Hot Seasons, and above all, in Hot Climates, the regular use of this simple and elegant remedy has been found highly beneficial.

It is prepared (in a state of perfect purity and of uniform strength) by DINNEFORD and Co., 173, New Bond-street, London; and sold by all respectable Chemists throughout the World.

COUGHS, ASTHMA, AND INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION ARE EFFECTUALLY CURED BY

KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES.

JUDGED BY THE IMMENSE DEMAND,

this UNIVERSAL REMEDY now stands the first in public favour and confidence; this result has been acquired by the test of fifty years' experience. These Lozenges may be found on sale in every British Colony, and throughout India and China they have been highly esteemed wherever introduced. For COUGHS, ASTHMA, and all affections of the Throat and Chest, they are the most agreeable and efficacious remedy.

Prepared and sold in Boxes, Tins, and Bottles of various sizes by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, &c., 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London. Sold retail by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the World.

N.B.—To prevent spurious imitations, please to observe that the words "KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES" are engraved on the Government Stamp of each Box, without which name are genuine.

IF you GREASE or STAIN with PAINT

any Silks, Cloths, Curtains, or other article of Household Furniture, or Wearing Apparel, the best and most effectual agent for removing it is the BENZINE COLLAS, which will not alter the colour or injure the texture.

Sold by SANGAR and SON, 150, Oxford-street, W., and all respectable Chemists. Price 1s. 6d. per Bottle.

IMPORTANT TO PEOPLE RETURNED

from INDIA.—The only really effectual relief for torpidity of the liver, bile, and all those weak feelings arising from the change from a hot climate, is SANGER'S TASTELESS ANTIBILIOUS POWDERS, a trial of which will satisfy the most sceptical. They are invaluable for chronic bile, and do not weaken the system by violent purging, or saturate it with mercury, which most remedies for the bile do.

Sold by J. SANGER, 150, Oxford-street, W., in packets, at 1s. 1 1/2d. and 2s. 9d., or by post for fifteen or thirty-six stamps.

BLAIR'S GOUT AND RHEUMATIC PILLS.

This preparation is one of the benefits which the science of modern chemistry has conferred upon mankind; for during the first twenty years of the present century to speak of a cure for the Gout was considered a romance; but now the efficacy and safety of this medicine is so fully demonstrated, by unobscured testimonials from persons in every rank of life, that public opinion proclaims this as one of the most important discoveries of the present age. These Pills require no restraint of diet or confinement during their use, and are certain to prevent the disease attacking any vital part. Sold at 1s. 1 1/2d. and 2s. 9d. per Box, by all Medicine Vendors.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—SOURCE OF

STRENGTH.—No deep philosophy is wanted to prove that health and vigour depend upon the purity of the blood; yet how few act upon this truth compared with the many who neglect themselves, and lay the foundations of the most formidable complaints, when a few doses of these purifying Pills would give them instant comfort and future health. Holloway's is no palliative treatment, but the most searching and fundamental means of redressing all wrongs in the stomach, liver, kidneys, and throughout the circulatory and nervous systems. Holloway's Pills are most admirably adapted for a family medicine, since the most youthful, delicate, and susceptible may fearlessly take them when more violent measures would be highly dangerous.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE mail from India brings intelligence to the 14th ult. The papers of that date contain nothing concerning the state of Lord Elgin's health which has not been anticipated by the latest telegram from India. All accounts agree in representing that his condition is utterly hopeless. He appears to have over-exerted himself at the Rotaug Pass, which he crossed almost the whole way on foot. He was obliged to halt at Dhurmsalla.

H. E. Sir William Denison, Governor of Madras, was summoned to the Punjab on the 9th to assume temporary charge of the Governor-generalship.

Lord Elgin's permanent successor, Sir John Lawrence, left England by the P. and O. Company's steamer Ripon on Friday last, the 4th instant.

Sir Hugh Rose was with the Viceroy on October 26. He was expected to reach Lahore on November 10.

The little war on the North-western frontier is more serious than it was expected to be. It is beginning to look rather serious. Sir Neville Chamberlain found the enemy had strengthened the Umbeylah Pass. He, however, succeeded in taking possession of it on October 21st; but two days after, as Probyn's Horse and the 20th Regiment patrolled about sixteen miles out from the Chumba Valley, they were attacked by a hill tribe—the Bunneyas—hitherto supposed to be friendly. The Bunneyas were charged, and, to a certain extent, cut up and dispersed, but they mustered again at night, and fired at random into the camp. A shot killed Lieut. Gillies, R.A. On the 26th our force was attacked by the Mavori tribe, when Lieut. Clifford, 1st P.I., Lieut. Richmond, 20th N.I., were killed, and Lieut. Drake, 32nd N.I., and Lieut. Barrow, of the Revenue Survey, were wounded, twenty-two privates killed, and fifty-six wounded. A telegram from Lahore of the 10th of November states that there had been more fighting, and that Colonel Harding and two other officers had fallen. The report of the loss of the company of H.M. 101st Regiment has turned out a mere bazaar rumour, as we had anticipated. The Pass of Umbeylah is a peculiarly difficult one for a large force, hampered by the extraordinary impediment of an Indian army. In some places only one man or beast at a time could make way. Our troops in the North-west are said to be accompanied by an interminable line of baggage. The hostile tribes seem to have shown considerable pluck, and rushed upon our troops with savage yells and howls, and mad shouts of defiance. One fellow advanced straight up to a breastwork, leapt over it, and wounded Lieutenant Brown, of the Engineers, in the arm. Some of them seemed to court death, and our troops shot down many of the fanatics without taking aim, they came up so close to them. The men of the 101st Regiment were in good condition, but the 71st Highlanders seem to have suffered severely from fever. The fatigue was dreadful, and provisions were scarce. Flour sold at a rupee a seer, and bread at several rupees a loaf.

The new rules respecting the Indian Medical Staff Corps are now published in the Bombay papers. We give them in another column. The pith of them we were enabled to present to our readers many weeks ago. They have not yet, however, been decided upon by the home authorities.

Entirely new dress and equipment regulations for the native cavalry in Bengal have been issued. This includes the European officers' dress.

The Madras Athenæum is informed that a mercantile house in that city has received intimation to advance the sum of Rs. 10,000 to meet the disbursements of the Confederate steamer Alabama in the event of her calling there.

General George St. Patrick Lawrence will remain another year in Rajpootana as agent to the Governor general.

H.M.'s 88th Regiment Connaught Rangers has been ordered to go to China to replace another Regiment, sent home, it is said, contrary to the intention of the Horse Guards.

The revised tables of staff salaries for the three Presidencies seem to have given general satisfaction. A liberal allowance for house rent is allowed for troops stationed at the Presidency towns. The new rules will have partially a retrospective effect—that is to say, they will be dated from the 1st of September last in all cases where there is no reduction from the present aggregate salary.

The Sikh Pioneer question at Ceylon does not seem to be settled yet. The Calcutta Englishman has the following paragraph:—

"What's in the wind now? There is mischief already brewing in Ceylon, in connection with the unfortunate Pioneer business; and a telegraphic message has come up from Colombo, where a general court martial is sitting, addressed to the Adjutant-General's office here by the Deputy Judge Advocate General, who is conducting the proceedings of the said court. This message requests that the general officer commanding the presidency division will be so good as to issue orders to Capt. N. Barton, second in command of the 25th Punjab N.I., and who, as will be remembered, went down to Ceylon with a portion of the Sikh Pioneers, to proceed as quickly as possible, and by the first opportunity, to Colombo, to give his evidence before the court-martial."

The Government has ordered the line of telegraph to be at once extended to the seat of war on the North-West frontier. Bombay will be in telegraphic communication with Delhi and the North-West by the end of the cold season.

Mr. David Sassoon, the well-known Jew merchant in Bombay, has offered to Government the sum of Rs. 60,000 (£6,000), on condition of Government giving an equal sum and a site on the Esplanade, for the erection of a suitable building for the Mechanics' Institution and for public meetings.

The Bishop of Calcutta, as Metropolitan in India, was to hold his primary visitation in the Cathedral Church at Bombay, on Tuesday, the 8th of this month.

His Excellency the Governor in Council of Bombay has appointed Dr. Forbes a Commissioner, with instructions to devote his exclusive attention to questions regarding the improvement and extension of the cultivation of cotton, and the invention and manufacture of cotton-cleaning machinery, on a salary of Rs. 1,600 per mensem. Dr. Forbes' operations are not restricted to any particular part of the Presidency.

The following is a cutting from the last Overland Friend of India :—

The Hurkaru mentions the going down at the mouth of the Mutlah river of the Prussian ship Essex, while in charge of the pilot. No lives were lost. This is unfortunate for the future of the Mutlah, and we trust the cause will be carefully investigated.

We trust so, too; inquiry by all means; but we cannot agree with our contemporary that it is unfortunate that no lives were lost. On the contrary, we regard that circumstance as the most fortunate one connected with the accident.

FIGHTING IN THE NORTH WEST.

The Delhi Gazette has the following interesting item of news from the Eusufzai field force—which seems to have forced the pass and reached the top after some sharp fighting :—"We reached the top of the pass about 4 P.M. on the 21st Oct. The 20th Punjab Infantry, some guides, and Probyn's Horse went on to reconnoitre with Colonel Taylor, of the Engineers, and came upon a picket of the enemy, which blazed into us and moved a little too near the open for their own safety; a large ditch or dry nullah lay in front of us, and a small piece of level ground twist us, and a curious-looking stone-built village. Probyn's Horse charged—cut up seven or eight men. One of the native officers received a sabre wound in the head, one of the European officers fell with his horse at the nullah, and did not recover his charger again. Force retired again within the pass—very hungry and bitterly cold all night: enemy waited till the moon was obscured by clouds, then came and fired at random into our camp; wounded several natives and shot poor Gillies, of the Mountain Train, through the heart. His body goes to Murdan for burial. The enemy were Bunneyerees. So that we shall now have to turn our troops into Bunneyr. Hindoostanees are still at Mulkah, and talk of bolting down towards Topi."

The following from the Lahore Chronicle refers to the same subject :—

"We hear from the frontier that the plan pursued by Sir Neville Chamberlain in recent operations was to seize the Umbeylah Pass and descend into the Chumba Valley, and so head the fanatics by ascending Mahabun from the north.

"The pass, a most difficult one, was by a forced march taken possession of with but little opposition—and the following day our cavalry patrolled sixteen miles into the valley. On its return near evening it was attacked by the Bonair tribe—the cavalry charged the enemy in broken ground and killed six of them. We had two men wounded. That night the Bonair men kept up a fire on the picquets, and it resulted in two casualties on our side, Lieutenant W. A. B. Gillies, of the mountain train, and one private, killed, and fifteen men wounded; the enemy had fifty men killed.

"The following night they attacked, and left ten dead on the field; one man of ours alone wounded.

"Owing to the Bonair tribe on our left being hostile, it is necessary to take considerable supplies with the force, which are being arranged for in the pass; as soon as they are collected the force will move on.

"There seems to be a general combination of the tribes, urged on by the Sittana fanatics. The force will have stiff work to perform.

"The presence of European troops with the force makes the baggage very considerable, and the pass is very difficult to ascend and descend."

A CLERICAL BARNUM.

However delightful it may be for our vanity of race to look down upon the apish tricks of primitive savages, it is by no means an edifying spectacle to behold a clergyman of the Church of England acting the part of a common showman. We cannot but think that Colonel Tyler is greatly to blame for permitting the exportation of an Andaman family to form an exhibition for the amusement of the Calcutta gobemouches. The Bishop, we feel assured, cannot regard with satisfaction the fooleries of the Reverend Barnum Corby, nor do we believe that his Lordship will sanction the continuance of the mountebank proceedings which at present afford matter for gaping wonder to the vulgar, and for shame and regret to all thinking men. Is it not a stumbling-block and rock of offence to the weaker brethren to see a chaplain of the Established Church driving about with a parcel of savages dressed up like dancing-dogs or monkeys? If his object be to humanise these animals and raise them in the scale of creation, he is taking the very best means to produce the diametrically opposite effect. What can these islanders fancy when they find themselves thus run after by natives and Europeans, but that they themselves are the superior race? And when they mark the curiosity and interest with which their rude, if rhythmical, caperings, and indeed their slightest movements, are watched by high and low, what other conclusion can they form than that they have been brought from their native jungles rather as teachers than as pupils? In a lay individual Mr. Barnum Corbyn's conduct would be simply ridiculous, but in a minister of the Christian religion it is most reprehensible. We trust, therefore, that his immediate superiors will take instant measures to put an end to this scandal. The clergy have something else to do in these our days than to go about the country leading bears and monkeys and animals that dance undressed and eat meat in the same condition.—Bengal Hurkaru, Nov. 2.

REDISTRIBUTION OF STATIONS.

Rumours are afloat of a fundamental rearrangement of the great military stations in India. The startling report of the Sanitary Commission has opened the eyes of the Home Government to the necessity of caring more systematically for the health of the British soldier in this country. It is not enough to build spacious barracks, and establish workshops and gardens. It is the climate that is primarily at fault, and that evil is one which can be shunned, but not remedied. All in vain are lofty and well-ventilated dormitories—in vain all attempts to amuse and occupy the soldier, depressed by a tropical temperature and the dull monotony of barrack life in the plains. An aching and yearning feeling of exhaustion drives him, in spite of himself, to alcoholic stimulants, and entails upon him all the ills which strong drink brings in its train. The question then arises, is it absolutely necessary that the bulk of the European troops should continue to be stationed in the plains, while there are so many and such easily-accessible spots on the spurs of the Himalaya and of the mountain range that forms the backbone of the Southern Peninsula? That a certain, and even a considerable, force may be required to occupy and overawe such cities as Delhi, Agra, and Lucknow, and to maintain uninterrupted the communication between the Hills and the sea, is at once conceded; but, even so, at least one-half, if not two-thirds, of the entire European army might be safely and prudently located on the Hill slopes. From those elevated and health-preserving eyries, they would, when required, swoop down upon the low country, lusty as young eagles, and indifferent to heat or fatigue. This was the plan recommended by the late Hindoo Rao, whose admiration for British troops is well known to all old residents of Delhi. Keep them in the hills, he would say. Feed them upon beef and beer; and when their services are wanted in the field, bring them down in carts and carriages, on elephants and horses, and slip them like chekahs upon the enemy. The old Mahratta Chief's advice is more easily carried into practice at the present day than at the time when he first gave it, and in a few years hence, when railways run up to the foot of the hills, it might be acted upon without a single drawback. Admitting that the report of the Sanitary Commission is painted in far gloomier colours than the occasion warranted, no one can deny that not only the mortality, but the moral and physical degradation, of British soldiers in India are much greater than they need be, or that they would be were these troops located in a healthy climate, where out door exercise would be almost always enjoyable. Sir Hugh Rose, it is said, is now busily engaged in preparing a report upon this very subject, in which his Excellency strongly recommends the expediency of entirely re-organising the distribution of the British army in India. On this matter, at least, Sir Hugh's opinion is entitled to command respectful attention.—Bengal Hurkaru, October 31.

THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICE.

Poets and moralists have sung the praises of all the virtues in turn, except that of self-assertion. In this nineteenth century few powers are at once so useful and so dangerous, and none are so successful. A monopoly of it is too often left to the unscrupulous, and so the world witnesses more and more what puzzled the philosophy of the best and the wisest sovereigns of Israel, the prosperity of the evil doer and the oppression of the good man. In the hurry and the friction of life the wise man must adopt the policy of the ambitious, if he would not go to the wall and see every prize gained by the successful scoundrel who will misuse it, or the wealthy man who does not need it. It was almost unavoidable that, in carrying out so great a policy as that of amalgamating the Indian with the Imperial services, both classes and individuals should suffer. All who have been wronged might have got off more easily, or their number might have been much less, had the process of absorption and re-organisation been carried on with more wisdom and generosity. Most deeply of all have Indian officers been injured; and it will be admitted that, for military men, they have not been slow to tell their grievances, nor has the press been backward in asking for redress. The result has been a few hundred annuities and a Royal Commission, with much public sympathy. The Indian navy obtained the benefit of previous agitation and, being few in number, its officers were treated fairly. The Covenanted Civil Service had no sooner seen their privileges lessened by the abolition of seniority and strict monopoly rights, than they asserted their claims to compensation and have been partially satisfied. The Uncovenanted Service, having long humbly submitted to grievances tolerable only by clerical machines, found among their number so many men of the highest abilities and training that they memorialised for justice. Notwithstanding Lord Canning's advocacy of and Lord Stanley's sympathy with their position, they waited long and wearily. Wanting self-assertion in pressing their prayer, they lacked it still more in expressing their opinion of the answer which was at last vouchsafed. We had to invite discussion of the new rules in our columns, and were told that the uncovenanted still depended too much on the breath of their superiors to run the risk of offending them by public criticism. But at last the new rules have caused so wide-spread a dissatisfaction, especially among the older and higher members of the service, that we are asked to give expression to it and to consider its justice. The rules raise two very different questions—how far are they calculated to secure contentment and efficiency among a most important and the most numerous class of officials for the future?—and how far are they just in their retrospective action?

As to the absolute fairness of the rules we cannot take serious exception to them. Government could not, in justice to the people of India and the public treasury, have done otherwise than give due importance to the fact that natives constitute the mass of the service, and will probably do so more and more in the future. We have always held that our native officials are, as a rule, tempted to dishonesty by trifling salaries, just as the Englishmen of Clive's days were. As we raise the status and pay of the native uncovenanted servant, we shall help to destroy the motive for corruption and create in him self-respect, and in native society an opinion as strong against corruption as it is now in its favour. The future European element in the service must expect that the rules will act from a native point of view to its disadvantage, and ought to be consoled for this by the far higher career opened up to it by the competition system. But as, for some time at least, there will be a large number of professional Europeans in the higher ranks of the service as judges, school inspectors, and professors, and engineers, this difficulty is met by promising them exceptionally better rules of pension, and we have already pointed out what classes ought to be thus treated. This, then, being the case, that what is fair to the natives must be the general basis of the rules, as a matter both of justice and policy, are the new rules less liberal than they ought to be? Certainly not as to pension, except that Sir C. Wood has introduced a limit to the one-third of the previous salary pension, which did not exist before. The uncovenanted servant who draws the maximum pension of £500 a year, receives at least £120 more than his covenanted brother who, though he may have served a shorter period, held higher offices and entered by the gate of competition. The covenanted pension of £500 given by Government becomes really only £380, for all lapses go to the State. The uncovenanted servant who subscribes to an insurance office as much as the covenanted civilian does to his funds, might retire on medical certificate after twenty-five years' service with a larger income than the latter can enjoy, or without medical certificate after thirty years' service, with a still larger income. Again, that leave to England should not count as service for pension is a grievance, but the memorialists have got only what they asked for in this respect. We believe that they asked this on the understanding that their other leave rules might be more liberal, but in this they are disappointed. So far from counting service from the English age of majority, it is reckoned from twenty-two years; while privilege leave of one month annually is not allowed to accumulate for three years as in the case of the Covenanted Service. These are undoubted grievances, and must operate to the prejudice of the public service. As accumulated privilege leave costs the State nothing and benefits its servants, we can no more understand the pettiness which would deprive them of it, than that which refuses to allow the covenanted servant to enjoy it in England. We are sure that Government will listen favourably to any memorial which asks, either that medical leave and furlough may count for service, or that service shall reckon from the age of twenty or a least twenty-one, while in either case privilege leave is allowed to accumulate for three months.

But if, with these exceptions, the hardship for the future is trifling, great is the wrong done to some of the oldest and best servants of the State by making the rules retrospective. A correspondent's statement of the case is both fair and temperate, and we cannot believe that Government will be deaf to a request to do their uncovenanted the same justice as their military servants, by giving them the option of the old or new rules. Anything less than this will be a breach of good faith with men who have for years served the public with ability and fidelity. Whether it would be prudent to ask more than this we doubt. At least let these men have justice if not generosity. They will find self-assertion most beneficial, though Parliament is not sitting; and their case is so clear that Lord Stanley will not refuse to take it up. They should, however, no more than the Indian officers, apply as corporate body. Let each uncovenanted servant, who feels he is wronged by the retrospective action of the new rules, go up to Government with his case, and we feel assured that he will meet with justice.—Friend of India.

MAKING HASTE TO BE RICH.

Several months ago, when the fever of speculation in joint-stock shares became so much of a dangerous epidemic in Calcutta that tradesmen who found it difficult to make a fortune out of their own shops began to launch them on the share market as companies on the principle of limited liability, we uttered the first note of warning. Since that time some of the more disreputable concerns of this kind have disappeared altogether, and the shares of others became so speedily unsaleable that even speculators have been caught and justly punished before they could victimise others. The merchant who, knowingly or carelessly, lends the credit of his name or firm to an undertaking which is in itself unsound, in the hope that he may pocket large premiums before the bubble bursts, is guilty of what we may fairly term moral swindling, as distinguished from an offence which the law recognises. So far as we are aware, there has been as little of this conduct in Calcutta as there seems to have been in Bombay, but there has been a little of it. The form in which this epidemic manifests itself in, all the presidencies is rather that of an uneasy and anxious desire to become rich by speculation of a bond fide character, on the part of individuals and classes who are utterly unfitted to succeed in the long run, and whose profession ought to keep them out of the share market. Speculation, when honestly and intelligently conducted by the banker, the merchant, or the broker, whose special business it may be, can only afford a healthy outlet for superabundant capital, and benefit society. But when we find the least mercantile and professedly most anti-worldly classes of society infected with the disease; when we see the clerical element represented in the Bourse, and doctors of divinity prominently announced in the newspapers as attending meetings of companies and voting dividends of 20 per cent.; when we know that grave fathers of families, innocent of all familiarity with the money market, spend sleepless nights as they ruminate over selling out of this "limited" company, and buying into that, it is time to repeat our words of warning. To them at least life is not worth the price they are paying for it, even if they, in the long run, realise half their expectations. "Neither poverty nor riches" is a far happier state for the non-mercantile class, and it will be a more certain result of freedom from care than of making haste to be rich.

We do not any more write against honest speculation by those whose business it is, than we would protest against the rain of the Indian monsoon. Law regulates the flux and reflux of capital as much as the evaporation and fall of water. And much capital is as beneficial to the nation which possesses it, as the rain which fertilises the tropics. But superabundant capital has its dangers, exactly like those of excessive rain, when it is not directed into useful channels. Many causes have produced this superabundance in England, and still more in India, of late years. All national prosperity of a material kind has its primary source in the land in the case of countries situated as India is, and every year since the Crimean War has seen an extension of cultivation. This has led to a vast increase of our export trade, in return for which the greater part of the silver of the European Continent has flowed to India and China. The normal rate of increase received a sudden impetus from the cotton crisis, and at once the money which used to flow to America was directed to India. The Vice-President of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce lately stated that England is this year paying India twenty millions more for the same quality of cotton than it would have done two years ago. In the last ten years, accordingly, prices have risen, all over India, on an average 25 per cent.; and while thus small fixed incomes have been so seriously affected that Government is contemplating a natural remedy, every class in the country, down to the poorest peasant who, with his fathers, has always been a bond slave to the money-lender, has benefited; and all but the lowest has had money to invest either in better agricultural stock and cotton gins, in company's securities which are at a higher premium than any other in the world, or in joint stock shares. And the more this investing of money goes on, for a time at least, the more the annual surplus capital of the country will grow in compound proportion. Capital, like a great inundation, seeks for an outlet, and we only trust that the leaders of the mercantile class will so remember their duty to their own reputation and to society, that they will discourage every undertaking which threatens to ruin its victims in the long run, however tempting at first its "guaranteed" dividends for a few years may be. How far this annually increasing quantity of surplus capital and rise of prices is due to the gold discoveries, and how the latter threatens to depreciate fixed incomes, our readers will find elsewhere clearly, and perhaps somewhat extravagantly, stated by Mr. Fawcett, the most popular, and not the least able of writers on political economy.

But what are the investing classes to do, when every safe channel for their money, like Government securities, is at so high a premium, while the cost of living is so heavy? Let them act with prudence and intelligence, investing in no joint-stock company merely to speculate in the hope of selling out at a premium in time, and investing permanently only in those companies which, besides having a good "direction," are conducted by managers who are both honest and experienced. If they are not in a position to ascertain the character of the men they trust with their hard-earned savings, or if they distrust their own judgment, let them be content with Government securities. Peace of mind and absolute security from ruin are better blessings than the gambling chance of doubling their capital or their interest. The more successful a company is, from causes other than the ability and honour of its conductors, the more certain is it, by attracting rivals, to sink to the general level which interest reaches as surely as water, though not always so speedily. In Bombay, four banks, four cotton press companies, and four other companies were established last May, with a capital of three and a-half millions. In Calcutta, during the past year, our share list shows no less than about forty new tea companies, and several new coal, hotel, steam and trading companies, with more capital than that. For the past fortnight men have been wild after the shares of two banks, one of them long without a name, and their shares sell almost at cent. per cent. We say nothing of the projectors of the new companies and banks more than this, that if they are not of the highest standing, and if they do not mean to abstain from selling their own shares, however great may be the premium, then the uninitiated would do well to be content with the sweet simplicity of Four per Cents. at par, or with the still better though rarer Five per Cent. Railway Debentures.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DEATH OF ENSIGN BROCKE.—The Oudh Gazette mentions with regret the sudden death, at Fyzabad, on the morning of the 21st ult., of Ensign Brocke, of H.M.'s 35th Regiment, whose remains were interred in the station burial ground on the evening of the same day. The same journal records the third attempt to commit suicide which has taken place among the troops at that station within the last six months. Fortunately, for himself, the offender omitted to put the ball into the carbine with which he proposed to put an end to his life. He is, nevertheless, in considerable danger.

M. F. R. COCKERELL, of the Civil Service, who has lately been appointed Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal in the place of the Hon. Ashley Eden, has already joined his new appointment at the head-quarters of the Lieut. Governor at Bhaugulpore. Mr. Eden, we hear, will leave Calcutta this day for Darjeeling on private affairs, and thence proceed direct to Bhootan on his political mission. The Lieut. Governor, it is said, will return to the Presidency from Bhaugulpore on the 12th instant, to preside at the meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council on the 14th.—Bengal Hurkaru, Nov. 5.

INDIAN FLORA.—Lieutenant-Colonel Drury, the well known botanist, is now engaged, as we are informed, in completing a "Handbook of the Indian Flora," in two volumes. This work will contain the scientific, English, and native names of every hitherto discovered flowering plant indigenous to India, with a full description of its properties and characteristics.

COTTON.—We learn, from an up-country paper, that as much as thirty-two rupees per maund has been given for cotton at Umritsur during the month of October. About the same time last year the price was only eight to ten rupees.—Bengal Hurkaru.

LAND MORTGAGE BANK OF INDIA.—An important Indian project is expected to be shortly introduced by the General Credit Company, to be called the Land Mortgage Bank of India. This is in connection with Mr. Laing's projects, and the consolation is that if the shareholders be ruined, the evils of Indian land tenures at least will be exposed.

INDIAN FINANCE.—There is at last a fair prospect of daylight being thrown into the obscurest nooks and corners of Indian finance. Messrs. Whiffin and Foster have arrived per S.S. Nubia, and will lose no time in introducing the English system of accounts into the different departments of the Indian Government. The reputation acquired by these gentlemen at home is the best guarantee for their success in this long-slumbering land.

MAHARAJAH DAN SINGH BAHADOOR.—The Delhi Gazette chronicles the investment, on Oct. 24, of H.H. Maharajah Sheo Dan Singh Bahadoor, of Ulwar, with the full charge of his principality. The young Prince, who has just commenced his nineteenth year, is described as possessing no common degree of intelligence and good nature. Instead of appointing a Dewan or Mosahib to relieve himself of the cares of government, his Highness has established a Council, called Ijlass-khas, over which he daily presides in person, for the conduct of State affairs.

AN EXTRAORDINARY SCENE IN A BALL-ROOM AT AGRA.—It seems that Dr. Lacy had given a large evening party, and obtained the attendance of the band of a European regiment; that, while dancing was going on, and the musicians playing, Captain O'Brien (an uninvited guest, it is said) went up to the band master and ordered him to change the tune. On the band master declining to do so, the gallant captain forthwith felled him to the ground, and on Dr. Lacy expostulating with him for this extraordinary and astounding proceeding, he sprang at his host, and, shaking him by the beard which he had firmly grasped, knocked him down likewise. The further playful, though somewhat eccentric ebullitions of this courteous gentleman, were checked by the bandsmen closing on him, and marching him off to the guard-room; which, if the facts have been correctly represented to us, was a much more fit place for one who could so far forget himself, than a ball-room.—Up Country Paper.

AFGHANISTAN.—Our Cabool letter, received this morning too late to give in to-day's issue, brings intelligence from 5th to 12th October. There is nothing very striking. The sons of the late Ameer seem bent on making their fortunes by oppression in the different provinces allotted to them. Ameer Shere Allee Khan has discharged about four thousand newly engaged troops in Cabool, and is paying off the arrears of the Heerat troops. The Ameer is trying his best to conciliate his rebellious brothers. Sirdar Mohamed Ameen Khan is screwing out money from the Candahares by oppression. Mahomed Shurreef Khan is encouraging the Heerates and the neighbouring tribes to revolt. Sirdar Mohamed Uzful Khan has sent another Vakeel with the Booklars ambassadors to Cabool, where they were expected daily. Mohamed Auzim Khan is continuing to strengthen his fort and making warlike preparations.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 12.

DEATHS OF TEA PLANTERS.—Four Cachar tea-planters have fallen victims to the malarious influences which prevail in that province at this season of the year. The names of these ill-fated gentlemen were Messrs. C. P. Arkwright, J. Webster, A. Boucat, and H. E. Jewsbury. The present season is said to be a particularly unhealthy one from the want of the usual fall of rain. The vegetation, being thus prematurely exposed to the sun's heat, is withering and rotting on the ground. The temperature, too, has of late been excessively high, and consequently a deadly miasma evolved from the reeking jungles and swamps. As a rule, the Cachar planters dwell on the tops of teelas, or little hills, and thus in ordinary seasons escape the deadly effects of the malaria of the plains. This year, however, not even that precaution has saved them from sickness and death.—Bengal Hurkaru.

THE TROOPS TO NEW ZEALAND.—There is still hope that the first of the Indian reinforcements may arrive in time to take a share in the serious part of the New Zealand war. Up to the 9th of September there was a lull in the operations, but General Cameron intended on the 19th to attack two thousand Maoris, most skilfully entrenched at Meremere. The Maori leader, William Thompson, had been courteously exchanging supplies of goats and fowls for tobacco with General Cameron, while his followers were doing their utmost to supply their want of ammunition. A native woman had long been purchasing little brass eyelet holes, which, with a lucifer match inserted in the centre of each, answered admirably as percussion caps. Sydney and Otago had sent their first instalments of volunteers, and Melbourne was despatching so large a body as 932 men and fourteen officers, under Colonel Pitt. Land bounties are offered to attract volunteers, and the land of all rebels is to be confiscated.—Friend of India, Nov. 5.

CHANGE IN THE RELIEF.—The reason assigned for the change in the relief, making the Bays stand fast at Benares and Cawnpore, and sending the 7th Dragoon Guards to Muttra, is that the barracks at Benares would not hold the latter corps; and for the same reason the 54th and 27th Foot change quarters. We understand that it is intended to build new barracks altogether at Benares for the whole European garrison. We shall be very sorry if it is the case, for the money would be much better laid out in erecting more barracks in healthy spots, like Hazarebagh and others, laying down tramways, so as to bring the troops down to any place, when their services are required on an emergency occurring.

MR. CLAUDE HAMILTON BROWN has been appointed a member of the Legislative Council of the Governor-General.

THE batteries of artillery in the Delhi division are to practice this year, with their own ordnance at their respective stations, with the exception of the Garrison Battery at Delhi, which will join the heavy battery at Meerut and practice with it.

THE new telegraph line which is to run through Rajpootana to Deesa will connect Agra direct with Kurrachee. This, when the line is laid down all the way to England, will give the Agra people and the N.W.P. generally a very decided advantage in regard to priority of news.

THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR has come down from Murree earlier than was expected. His honour reached Lahore on the 23rd inst. On the same day Mr. Cust, Judicial Commissioner, returned from Dalhousie, while Mr. McLeod was expected back from his brief trip to Kussowlee about the 26th or 27th. The press for passages from Murree downward was so great that even the Secretary to the Government, D. P. W., and family and other dignitaries of the State were glad to avail themselves of bullock train accommodation from Rawul Pinddee to Lahore. Great hopes were entertained on the 23rd that rain was at hand, but the favourable appearances passed away.—Delhi Gazette, October 29.

FYZABAD, Oct. 25.—Colonel Christie, commandant of artillery, with staff, has been here, inspecting that branch of the service, and appeared perfectly satisfied with the efficiency of A Battery, 11th Brigade, at this station. Deputy Inspector General Dr. Innes has also paid us a visit, and presided over the Invaliding Committee of the season, besides inspecting the barracks and hospitals here. I believe he expressed himself very strongly on the praiseworthy condition of the hospital, of Her Majesty's 35th Regiment, and also on the very excellent arrangements made for the comfort and amusement of the men of the above corps. He left yesterday for Gondah. I hear on dit that the Invalids leave on the 28th, under command of Captain Blyth, 35th Regiment, and from to-morrow they will have to await the arrival of the 27th men from Gondah, who, I think, will be scarcely here by that time. I regret to have to report the demise of a very promising young officer of the 35th Regiment—Ensign Brock; he died very suddenly of heart disease, and was buried with the usual military honours.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 29.

REBELLION IN THE BHAWULPOOR STATE.—The following is an extract from a private letter, dated Mooltan, October 24th:—"You have doubtless heard of the recent disturbances in the Bhawalpoor State. The Nawab has killed three of his uncles, for the alleged offence of taking a part in the rebellion, but I believe he is to be brought to an account for this, more particularly as he cannot substantiate the charge of treason against the deceased princes. They were at the period, and had been for some time before, in confinement in the Fort of Dirawur, where it has been customary to incarcerate all troublesome and dangerous customers. The reigning Nawab is a young man of about twenty-five years of age. He succeeded to the Musnud nearly a year ago, on the death of his father, whose reign, though brief, was not without its share of troubles. His rule is most obnoxious to the people committed to his charge. He is as cruel as unrelenting, as vindictive as rapacious. He is a slave to all the vices which Eastern Potentates delight in; and his advisers are all of the same stamp. The revenues of the country in the time of Bhawal Khan amounted to twelve lacs, but they have now dwindled to five lacs. It is the bounden duty of the British Government to make some arrangements by which the administration will prove a blessing to the people, if they consider annexation a measure of doubtful expediency.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 31.

A RAILWAY CASE.—The trial of Mr. Michael Cooney, railway-guard, for causing grievous bodily hurt to certain natives, is one of a very ordinary class of cases which have sprung up in this country of late years, and which are beginning to force themselves upon public attention. The facts seem to have been somewhat as follows:—Mr. Cooney had been drinking for some days prior to the 1st of last September, and on that occasion he proceeded in a drunken state to the dispensary at Rampore Haut, for the ostensible purpose of procuring some medicine. Here he seems to have come out strong in the character of a drunken man. The native Assistant-Surgeon, having a sufficient apprehension of the nature of the disease under which Mr. Cooney was labouring, ordered one of the compounders to prepare an emetic strong enough to restore the afflicted railway guard to a state of convalescence. Mr. Cooney took the powder under the singular impression that it was a cheroot or cigarette, and accordingly rolled it up, lit one end of it, and commenced smoking. From this moment he appears to have been utterly oblivious as regards the circumstances in which he was placed. He demanded his watch, but was told that he had not brought one to the dispensary. He next insisted upon the compounder of medicines giving him some Old Tom, which request was, of course, refused on obvious grounds. Mr. Cooney on this seized an empty beer bottle which was on the table, and walked away, followed by the compounder, asking for the restoration of the bottle. The railway-guard now proved to be mad drunk. He first assaulted the compounder with the bottle. He next half murdered a chuprass with the same bacchanalian weapon. He then, being surrounded and attacked by a number of native servants, was rescued by Mr. Hampton, the magistrate of the station, and taken to a bungalow, where, under some other delusion, he suddenly started up and assaulted Mr. Hampton. Accordingly Mr. Cooney was taken into custody, was tried for his offence, and sentenced to be imprisoned for twelve calendar months, at the end of which period he will probably come out of confinement a broken and a ruined man.

SUICIDE.—The Sub-Assistant Surgeon of Cooch-Behar, Shamachurn Sircar, has committed suicide. The late Rajah died rather suddenly, and a rumour had been industriously circulated that he had been poisoned. The Sub-Assistant surgeon who had attended him in his illness, feared that he was suspected of the crime; and the terror of being disgraced or dismissed, so preyed on his mind, that in despair he hanged himself. The particulars are given by Colonel Haughton, Commissioner of Assam, in a letter to the Secretary of the Bengal Government.

RETURN EMIGRANT COOLIES.—A recent police case in Calcutta gives us a glimpse into the condition of return emigrant coolies. Ramdial, a returned emigrant from the Mauritius, has been committed to the sessions, charged by four of his fellow-emigrants with the theft of Rs. 653-12 and a sovereign. Return coolies have, occasionally, much larger sums than this, but, as a rule, they only demoralise their native villages with the money, and return to the colony to labour again more reckless than before.

DR. WEBB.—We regret to learn the death of the late Allan Webb, whose ability as a surgeon and physician had placed him in the foremost rank of his profession in Calcutta. Esteemed by all who knew him, his loss will be particularly felt by the native community, who largely benefited by his skill and experience. Dr. Webb died young, being little over fifty years of age—the dangerous Indian age.

BRETHREN OF THE MYSTIC TIE.—The Grand Master of Bengal and the Worshipful Master of a Lodge at Cawnpore had, we learn, come to an open quarrel, during which the doors of the Lodge were forcibly broken open. The Lodge was called Harmony—but the proceedings mentioned seem but an indifferent commentary on the name.

LIEUTENANT WHEELER.—We learn from a Punjab paper that Lieutenant F. Wheeler, 39th N.I., has been appointed inspector of the fourth, or frontier circle of the educational department of that province. Sir Robert Montgomery was expected to leave Murree on the 21st, and to reach Lahore on the 23rd.

DR. B. SIMPSON, of Darjeeling, well known as a first-rate amateur photographer in Calcutta, and whose pictures obtained a medal at the late London Exhibition, is to accompany the Hon. A. Eden in his Mission to Bhootan as medical officer. The appointment is unexceptionable.

TROOPS AT MEEAN MEER.—Meean Meer is filling with troops for the formation of the Army of Exercise. The following is the programme as definitively settled:—

COURT OF ENQUIRY.—We learn from the Oudh Gazette that a court of enquiry, composed of Lieutenant-Colonel Aplin, H.M.'s 48th Regiment, Major Baring, H.M.'s 107th, and Major Gough, v.c., assembled at the Mess House of the 3rd N.I. on Monday last, to investigate certain charges, arising out of a recent police case against a billiard marker, under which Captain J. B. Smith, of the last-mentioned corps, is under arrest. The court was instituted at the request of Captain Smith.

THE POLITICAL AGENT OF MEYWAR, as we learn from an up-country paper, has applied for a small force of fifty European infantry and a troop of cavalry from Neemuch, in addition to two companies of the Meywar Bheel Corps from Kharwarra, to keep the peace during the Dusserah festival. It is insinuated that some dissatisfaction has been caused by the investment of Major Eden with judicial powers.

ANNUITIES OF THE BENGAL MEDICAL RELIEF FUND were assigned to the following gentlemen on the 2nd of November:—Inspector-General W. Thompson, and Surgeon-Majors T. W. Wilson, W. Shillito, C. G. Andrews, C. M. Henderson, and H. Irwin (retired).

BY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

Home Dept., Fort William, Oct. 28.—No. 6,838.—The services of the Rev. T. H. Burn, domestic chaplain to the Lord Bishop of Calcutta, are placed at disposal of the Govt. of the N.W.P., from 1st prox.

Revised Staff Salaries.

MILITARY DEPARTMENT.

BY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA.

Under the authority and direction of the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, as conveyed in his despatch, No. 311, dated Aug. 31 last, a revised table of staff salaries for the three presidencies is published, and the extracts of Sir Charles Wood's despatch on the subject, as given below, are promulgated for general information.

2. Officers whose appointments are not specified in the table of revised salaries will draw pay as at present, and further orders will hereafter be issued with respect to the office establishment of those staff officers who have hitherto drawn an office allowance, such as asst. adjt. gens. of divisions and majors of brigade.

3. With reference to para. 29 of Sir C. Wood's despatch, it is announced that the despatch was received by H.E. the Gov. gen. on Sept. 30. Increased pay, where granted by this order, is therefore claimable for the month of September.

Para. 1.—Your several letters noted below, relating to the salaries to be attached to offices held by military officers in India, have been under my consideration in Council, and I have now to communicate to your lordship the decision which, after an attentive perusal of the several papers which accompanied your letter, H.M.'s Government have arrived at upon this subject. [Financial despatch, No. 70, May 20, 1862; Military despatch, No. 10, Jan. 3, 1863; Military despatch, No. 24, Jan. 19, 1863; Financial despatch, No. 23, Feb. 19, 1863; Military despatch, No. 160, May 22, 1863.]

2. The Committee of Secretaries appointed by your Government to consider the subject have gone very carefully into the whole question, and have submitted a very valuable report, which has greatly tended to facilitate and simplify the consideration of this important matter.

3. They observe of the Royal Warrant for the formation of the staff corps in India that, after fixing the scale of pay to be received by officers attached to them while in India, and when out of India, it further provides that every officer when in active employment will also receive, in addition to the above pay, such a sum as will make his total pay and allowances up to the sum assigned by the Government of India, with the approval of the Secretary of State for India in Council, as the consolidated pay of the office which he may hold.

4. Having consulted the several Governments, as well as the chief political and military officers of the Government, the committee proposes for adoption the following principles:—

1st. That the salaries of military officers holding appointments connected with the civil administration of the country should be consolidated and fixed without reference to the rank of the incumbent.

2nd. That in the case of military officers in staff employ a certain salary should be fixed for every appointment, and that the incumbent should receive such fixed salary in addition to the staff corps pay of his rank.

3rd. That this latter principle should apply to the department of public works.

5. I concur generally in the principles here laid down, with some exceptions to be hereafter pointed out as regards the officers in military staff employ.

10. I have considered it necessary to deviate in some respects from the rates of salary proposed by the committee, and I now forward, for the information of your Government, a table of salaries which her Majesty's Government have resolved upon for the several offices enumerated in their report.

11. You will observe from the Table that, while adhering generally to the principle of allotting a staff salary in addition to staff corps pay, it has been determined to fix the salaries of some few of the higher offices at a consolidated sum.

12. In the case of the other appointments, it is to be understood that the staff salary now fixed, plus the staff corps pay due to the officer's rank, will constitute the maximum amount to be drawn by an officer of that rank holding the office in question, whether such officer belong to the staff corps or not. In the case of appointments held by officers belonging to H.M.'s British forces, such maximum amount will include any pay or half-pay that may be paid to them in England.

13. I approve of the rule proposed by the committee that, in all cases where any allowance for "office" is made, as in the case of assistants adjutant general, brigade majors, and others, it should be distinctly understood that the allowance is to be drawn only by officers actually discharging the duties of the appointment, and that no further charge can be allowed for providing an office.

14. It is desirable that, whenever possible, the public offices should be located in public buildings, and it should be a standing rule that all bills for office allowance should be supported by a certificate from the proper authority, that no public building was available for such office.

15. I am of opinion, however, that office establishment should, as a general rule, be maintained according to a regulated scale and should be paid on abstract, supported by the usual monthly muster roll.

18. The principle laid down in the 4th clause of the same paragraph has, you will perceive, been observed in the rate of salary allotted to the heads and subordinate members of departments at the several presidencies, but I have extended to the deputies of army department at head quarters in Bengal the benefit of the rule which gives to the chief of those departments a higher rate of salary than at Madras or Bombay.

19. In the 2nd clause of the 10th paragraph the committee observe that, "referring generally to the expensive rates of living in presidency towns, we think that the principle of allowing house rent may be generally adopted at the rates given below, and we would recommend that it should be made applicable to the presidency town of Madras, as well as to Calcutta and Bombay."

[Colonel, Rs. 125; major, Rs. 100; captain, Rs. 75; lieutenant, Rs. 40.]

20. I approve of the proposed scale, which will apply to officers at each presidency not drawing consolidated salaries.

29. The scale of salaries now sanctioned will be brought into operation and made to apply in all cases where there is no reduction in the present aggregate salary, on the payment due on the 1st of the month succeeding the receipt of this order.

30. Reduction of salaries effected by this order are not to be made to affect present permanent incumbents, or those who are officiating for such permanent incumbents, being temporarily absent from their duties."

4. Separate orders will be issued regarding the staff salaries to be allowed to officers serving with native corps.

SCINDE, PUNJAB, AND DELHI BANK.

WE are glad to lay before our readers so satisfactory a report of the proceedings of the Scinde, Punjab, and Delhi Bank as will be found in another part of our paper of this day.

MANUAL OF MILITARY LAW.

THE great court-martial now held at Aldershot will make many persons, who never before troubled themselves about military law, desirous to understand something of the subject, and it happens very opportunely that Messrs. Allen and Co. have just published a new and revised edition of a "Manual of Military Law for all Ranks of the Army and of the Militia and Volunteer Services; comprising an Account of the Constitution, Composition, and Procedure of Courts-martial," by Colonel J. K. Pipon, Assistant Adjutant-General, who is taking such an active part in the present proceedings at Aldershot, and J. F. Collier, who is a barrister-at-law. The book has obtained the sanction of the highest military authorities. We are glad to see that the manual has a very full and complete index, for such a work, however full of information, without a good index would be comparatively useless.

THE NEW GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

THE day after we went to press with our last number it was announced in the morning papers that intelligence had been received, by a telegraphic communication to the 14th ult., to the effect that the Governor-general of India was in a dying state, and had expressed a desire that his successor should be appointed. It is possible, but not at all probable, that Lord Elgin may be yet amongst the living; but at all events it is a sad certainty that the services of this able and judicious administrator are lost to India for ever. If he be still alive he will be hurried back to Europe, that he may "husband out life's taper to the close, and die at home at last." He has suffered from some disease of the heart, and has had a painful experience amongst the Himalayas of what Byron describes "as the difficult air of the iced mountain tops." A few days before his illness he had ascended a pass to the height of 13,000 feet, and complained that he had breathed with pain. His predecessors, Lord Dalhousie and Lord Canning, his old friends and schoolfellows, may be said to have died in their Indian harness, though they were just allowed to breathe their last breath in their native clime. But Lord Elgin, it is feared, has been laid in a foreign grave, like Lord Cornwallis, the only Governor-general in the long list of British Indian rulers before him whose relics were laid in Indian soil. A cenotaph was erected over the remains of Lord Cornwallis on the banks of the Ganges, at Ghazeepore, near Benares. If Lord Elgin is dead, he has probably been buried at Simla.

When Lord Elgin reached India he was no novice in the art of government. He had been Governor of Jamaica, and Governor-general of Canada, and had given great satisfaction both to the people who were under his rule and to those ministerial potentates at home to whom he was responsible for his conduct. In his mission as Plenipotentiary to China he exhibited a rare union of firmness and moderation, and brought the insolent "inside barbarians" to their senses. He entered the city of Peking, and lowered the almost insane pride of the Chinese authorities to his will. Lord Elgin, by his prompt attention to the appeal of Lord Canning for the loan of the troops intended for service in China, may be said to have had some share in the suppression of the great Indian mutiny. He was in the fifty-second year of his age when he was seized with his last illness.

The Times, in speaking of Lord Elgin, describes him as the third of a remarkable list of men who, "after having governed India with transcendent brilliancy and ability, have been removed without an interval granted them to repose on the greatness they have achieved." Lord Dalhousie, with all his faults, may be admitted to have exhibited "transcendent brilliancy and ability" in his Indian administration; but we should hesitate to speak in the same terms of Lord Canning, who was more noticeable for his caution and "clemency," and great conscientiousness and fairness, and sound sense and judgment, than for any qualities to which the epithet brilliant could be applied; and still less, we think, could such an epithet be applied with propriety to Lord Elgin, who assuredly has not lighted up his brief reign in India with "transcendent brilliancy." The local press complains of his "petty policy," and of "the last two years of apathy or retrogression." We must allow for some exaggeration in this complaint, and we must also admit that Lord Elgin, in his short Indian career, had not been tempted by any great opportunity for the full display of his powers as a statesman and ruler. But with the greatest respect for his substantial merits as a governor, we must still think that it is quite a mistake to speak of his Indian rule as affording the slightest indication of "transcendent brilliancy," of gubernatorial genius. Sir John Lawrence, his so promptly appointed successor, will in all probability soon prove himself, as her Majesty's representative in India, entitled to the praise which we reluctantly withhold from Lord Elgin. He has already, in the government of the Punjab, shown us what he could do in a narrower sphere. When the news of the supposed fatal illness of Lord Elgin reached England the public began to speculate upon his successor, and perhaps the general opinion was in favour of Lord Stanley, under the impression that, as heretofore, the selection would be confined to the most distinguished members of our aristocracy. Lord Stanley would have been eminently suited to the post. There can be no question of that. We are inclined to think that in peaceful times he would surpass Sir John Lawrence as an Indian administrator. He has visited India for information, and has studied its general interests very closely, and is well acquainted with all official details connected with it. He has a clear, sagacious, and reflecting mind. We should say that Lord Stanley is altogether a more intellectual man than Sir John Lawrence. But Sir John Lawrence's services in India were of so extraordinary a nature—in a terrible emergency he was so prompt and energetic and successful, and so great a change towards liberalism has come over British statesmen with respect to all Indian questions—so many old and narrow prejudices have been vanquished, that the public are greatly pleased, and not altogether taken by surprise, to find that a member of the middle class of society, owing nothing whatever to any aristocratical connection, has been selected for this honour on account of his past services and his supposed fitness to fill so high a post. When the late Lord Metcalfe had such distinguished claims upon the State that all liberal men thought he ought to be allowed to retain permanently the post of Governor-general, in which he acted for a brief period on the departure of Lord William Bentinck from India, the Court of Directors objected to him, on the ground that he was a member of the Indian Service, and there was a rule that no servant of the East India Company, however able and meritorious, should ever govern the country. A titled stranger who knew nothing of India was then thought preferable to the most experienced Anglo-Indian who spoke the languages of the country, and was thoroughly familiar with the character and habits of the people. But, as we have said, our Indian policy has undergone a vast change. It is now essentially liberal and fair. The natives are admitted into the Council of India, they are brought to feel that they are really our fellow-subjects, and may share the same privileges; our own countrymen are no longer excluded from all right to purchase land and settle in the country, and there is no longer a most offensive line of demarcation between the covenanted and uncovenanted services. Merit of all kinds and in all conditions has now a chance of recognition. India is Anglicized.

Sir John Lawrence left England for India by the steamer of the 4th. We take it for granted that the gorgeous durbar and military display at which Lord Elgin was to have presided in the Punjab will be postponed some weeks, to enable his successor to take his place on that grand occasion. Sir John Lawrence's appearance as the Viceroy of India on the very theatre of his former triumphs will be peculiarly interesting and appropriate. He will be regarded by the natives as the living "Lion of Lahore." As to his deficiency of English rank, that will not be noticed by the people as a diminution of his greatness, for they have been accustomed to see the lowest caste men in Hindostan take possession of thrones and high places, and they will not think of what his position there once was, but what it will be now. Besides, though formerly only a commissioner—only one of the many servants of the Governor-general—he had proved himself in the Punjab to be a great power, and was acknowledged on all hands to be a most distinguished Englishman; and if the British Government think it necessary to attach an aristocratic handle to his name they will, probably, soon find a just excuse for doing so in the conduct of this able and energetic administrator. Everyone will watch his government in India with deep interest and glowing expectations, and yet not wholly without fear and doubt; for there is just one rock before him on which his greatness may be wrecked. We allude to his strong religious feeling as a Christian. It is understood that it is quite possible he may feel it to be his duty to act with something like the same promptitude and decision on this point as on questions which may be fitly settled by the sword. If he should do so, it will be the ruin of his reputation, and undo all the good that he has done in India. He is a daring and resolute man, and partial to strong and decisive measures, and we cannot forget that he gave his cordial sanction to the but too memorable proceedings of Mr. Cooper, whose wholesale butchery, in cold blood, of the men of the 26th Regiment N.I. so shocked all England, a transaction which Lord Stanley, then Secretary of State for India, in his place in Parliament, begged the House "to pass over with that silence which is sometimes the most judicious comment." This certainly did not look like a high compliment to Mr. Cooper. It meant something very different from the words of the poet—

"Come, then, expressive Silence, muse his praise."

We trust that on religious questions Sir John Lawrence will check his natural impetuosity. We are not willing to believe that his religion borders on fanaticism. We venture to hope that he will let general education and the advance of civilisation work that gradual and wholesome change in the minds of the people which is the only safe and prudent course when religious prejudices are to be combated. There can now be no doubt whatever that one of the main causes of the Indian mutiny was a suspicion, confirmed by the greased cartridges, and the punishment of the Meerut Mutineers, that the British Government were prepared to use any amount of physical force that might be deemed necessary to abolish caste, and overthrow the ancient religions of the country. The most effectual mode of putting a sudden stop to the progress of Christian conversion in India, and nullifying all the past labours of Dr. Duff and the Educationalists, would be to once more frighten the natives into the conviction that we are resolved at all hazards to abolish their religion, and replace it with our own.

CONTINUATION OF THE COURT-MARTIAL ON COLONEL CRAWLEY.

WE continue our report of this long-drawn trial, and shall not be sorry when it comes to a conclusion. The public have not yet lost their interest in subject, but they are beginning to be impatient for the fall of the curtain.

TENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Colonel Crawley had not quite done with Surgeon Turnbull on the ninth day of the trial, and he was accordingly recalled and again cross-examined. In reply to the Colonel's questions, he admitted that the quantity of brandy which Sergeant-major Lilley is said to have consumed during his arrest was calculated to produce a predisposition to an apoplectic seizure in a man of plethoric habit, but there was no indication in the post-mortem appearances which would lead him to suppose that he had died of excess of drink, nor had he noticed any indications of inebriety in him during his lifetime. The witness admitted that when Colonel Crawley called his attention to the quantity of liquor supposed to have been consumed by Lilley, and asked him if he chose on that account to make any alteration in the detailed medical report, he at first absolutely refused to do so, but, on receiving confirmatory information from Surgeon Barnett, he, two hours afterwards, sent in the addenda. The Commander-in-Chief in Bombay had censured the witness for having in the first instance sent in an imperfect report that implied a charge against his commanding officer. Colonel Crawley now endeavoured to show that the witness had stated to other parties that there was nothing in his medical report that reflected blame on his commanding officer. He referred to a letter Dr. Turnbull had written to Colonel Haythorne, dated September 8, 1862, but the witness objected to the production of that letter, as it was a strictly private communication. The witness admitted having written a letter to Sir Hugh Rose, "which conveyed that meaning, he thought."

Captain the Hon. E. Roden Bourke was next sworn and examined by the prosecutor. He merely acknowledged the authorship of a letter in which he testified to the character of Lilley, whom he described as a non-commissioned officer for whom he had the greatest respect. After the witness withdrew, Surgeon Turnbull was again recalled. He had been asked before why a certain report in the hospital book concerning the illness of Sergeant-major Wakefield had been erased. He said he did not know. As the evidence is of great importance here we must give it verbatim. We must premise that the witness admitted that the entry with respect to Wakefield's case was not in the Hospital Case-book when that book was submitted by him to Colonel Crawley. It was entered the next day by the apothecary from Dr. Turnbull's private memoranda.

Colonel Crawley: Did I not express great surprise that you should furnish to the Commander-in-Chief a medical case which had no existence in the hospital books till after it was called for?—You did at that time.

Did you not on the 29th of June show me another hospital case-book, containing another abstract of Sergeant-major Wakefield's case?—I cannot remember whether it was the next day, but about that time.

Has the date in that abstract been erased, and the 5th of June substituted for the 25th of May?—The date of the 25th of May has been erased, but I cannot call the circumstances of the case to mind at present. I may be able to explain it by referring to my own notes.

Who erased the date of the 25th of May?—To the best of my recollection I made the erasure there.

Do not the two entries which have reference to the case of Sergeant-major Wakefield bear date in the month of June, stand between two others in the month of May? Are there other entries not consecutive in the date?—That I cannot say. I do not think they are, but that is easily explained, the registers are not filled up consecutively. (Witness look through the book.) Here I see a transfer from another page.

Question repeated.—I think it probable there are.

Did I not on the 6th of July put certain written questions to you, and did you not give me written replies to them, in reference to the arrest of the sergeant-major and to Sergeant-major Lilley's case?—You did on or about that date.

Did you not give me written answers to these questions, which you afterwards took away, promising to send me copies?—Yes.

Did you send me the answers?—No.

Will you produce those answers, or copies of them?—Yes, I can, if desired by the Court.

The President: You can produce them.

Witness: Yes, if the prosecutor has no objection.

Colonel Sir A. Horsford: There can be no objection if they contain anything relative to the case.

The President: They had better be produced.

Witness: Mr. President, may I call the attention of the Court to this book; I find that the entries are not consecutive.

The President: That is in reference to a former question?

Witness: Yes.

Colonel Crawley: I wish the Court, sir, to examine this writing (handing the register). The date is unintelligible as it stands.

The President: It is impossible to ascertain by this light. Produce it on Monday morning.

The Court then adjourned to Monday.

ELEVENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

On the reassembling of the Court Surgeon G. A. Turnbull was again called to undergo a still further cross-examination by Colonel Crawley, who is as formidable a questioner as the most practised barrister. We cannot afford space for all the questions and answers, but we hope we shall omit nothing important. "How came you, Mr. Turnbull," said the Colonel, "on the 5th of June to date the hospital entry of Sergeant-major Wakefield as on the 25th of May?" Answer: "When I entered the previous history of Sergeant-major Wakefield, on the 5th of June, for the three days he had been detained in hospital (from the 25th to the 28th), I put the entry as the 25th at first, taking it from my memoranda. I afterwards rubbed out the 25th of May, and put the 5th of June, as the proper entry of the case for that day. There was no entry that I remember in the hospital case-book on the 25th of May. I never stated that the sergeant was not in hospital on the 25th of May. I never said that he was at the time 'a raving maniac.'"

The witness was asked how long it was since he had seen and heard from Captain Smales. He admitted that he had seen him a week ago. He did not recollect the date, but he thinks—he could not state positively—it was not after his examination in the present court. Colonel Horsford, at the close of the cross-examination of this witness, asked him if he wished to modify his statement on a previous examination that when he requested Colonel Crawley to let the prisoners be allowed to sit in the open verandahs the permission was granted at once. The only modification he wished to make was that Colonel Crawley replied in a harsh tone of voice, as if he felt annoyed at his having asked for the indulgence. The colonel had said, "The sergeant-majors have morning and evening exercise, what more do they require?"

Colonel Charles Cameron Shute, of the 4th Dragoon Guards, was now called by the prosecutor to speak to the character of Lilley. The following letter was read:—

"Sir,—I knew the late Sergeant-major Lilley from the date of his joining the 6th Dragoons to the period of my leaving the regiment, between two and a-half and three years ago. I considered him a thoroughly sober, well-disposed, good man.—I have the honour to be, sir, your obedient servant,

"C. C. SHUTE, Col. 4th Dragoon Guards.

"November 16, 1863."

The proceedings were here interrupted by the court adjourning for half an hour to consider the legality of some question handed to the court by the prisoner. On their return Colonel Crawley asked Colonel Shute whether he had not received a censure from his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge for the condition of the 6th Dragoons, then under his command. The prosecution objected to this, unless the official record of the censure were produced. Colonel Shute said that for his own part, though he himself was not on trial, and he only came to speak to the character of another, he had no objection to save Colonel Crawley the necessity of producing the official document. Colonel Crawley, however, preferred applying to the Adjutant-General for it, and Colonel Shute was allowed to withdraw until it was produced.

John Hardy, late a sergeant in the 6th Dragoons, identified a letter as his in which he describes Lilley as always a very steady, sober soldier, and he believes that he was never drunk during the whole time he knew him, which was from the date of Lilley's joining the corps to the year 1860. When he knew him in the Crimea he used to see him night and day, and at the mess and at private parties, and never saw him exceed his second glass of grog.

Lieutenant and Adjutant Davis, in answer to a question from Colonel Crawley, deposed that he had no recollection of Surgeon Turnbull ever having applied to Colonel Crawley for an inquest on the body of Lilley. He never received any complaints from Mrs. Lilley, and he always asked her husband if he had any complaint to make. He could not state positively that Surgeon Turnbull had told Colonel Crawley that Wakefield was not in hospital on the 25th of May. Some conversation took place between the Colonel and the Doctor about Wakefield; but he could not remember what it was, it was so long ago.

Colonel Horsford here recalled Assistant-surgeon Barnett, and, with permission of the Court, asked him to give Mrs. Lilley's exact words respecting the amount of brandy taken by her husband. Colonel Crawley protested against the question. The Court adjourned for nearly an hour to consider this protest. The Court, on returning, allowed the prosecutor to repeat the question, and censured the prisoner for the tone and manner of his objections—for such expressions as "blowing hot and cold," "playing fast and loose," as altogether unmilitary and unusual, and begged that such phrases might not be repeated. Colonel Crawley, oddly enough, said he was requested by his counsel to say that he was solely responsible for the language of the protest, and wished to consider that the Court's censure applied exclusively to him (the counsel), who bowed to the opinion of the Court and would conform to it. "Very well," said the President, "but we cannot acknowledge him, you know." As soon as the question was put a second time to Dr. Barnett the prisoner a second time protested against it, and entered at considerable length into his reasons for the protest. His chief reason was that the answer would involve what had already been called, by the prosecution, hearsay evidence. But the prosecutor, on second thoughts, concluding that the evidence would be of importance to them, now urged what they had first rejected, as the worst kind of hearsay evidence. The prosecutor explained that in spite of the objection to this question in the first instance the prisoner had put it himself, and the answer was improperly recorded, and thus the prosecution have now the right to have the evidence put into a legal and proper form. The prosecution had consented to the report of Mrs. Lilley's conversation with Dr. Barnett being given, if it were given entire—if all her statements were admitted in evidence. The Court again withdrew, and remained some time in consultation, and when they returned the President stated that there was so much difference of opinion amongst them, that it was resolved to refer the matter to the Judge Advocate General.

The Court then adjourned.

TWELFTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The letter of censure on Colonel Shute had been applied for by Colonel Crawley, but received by the Court only. Colonel Shute was not present this day, and the letter was not produced. The expected answer from the Judge-advocate-general was not alluded to. Questions relating to the sentries on Sergeant-major Lilley were now put.

Sergeant Alexander Adams, 6th Dragoons, deposed that he had visited the sentries on duty. The sentries were told, he said, to allow Lilley no communication with anyone except his native servant and the medical officer, and his native servant was to be searched in going in or coming out. Lilley bore a good character. In reply to Colonel Crawley, he stated that he could not see Mrs. Lilley in her bedroom from the place where the sentries were posted. Lilley never made any complaint.

Sergeant Eleazar Eyland deposed that the sentries had orders that no communication with anyone should be allowed to Lilley, and that his servant going in and out should be searched. He always thought Lilley a sober, steady, upright man. In answer to Colonel Crawley, the witness said that the placing of the sentry was left to his own judgment. Neither Lieutenant Fitzsimon nor Sergeant-major Cotton accompanied him. He never received any complaints from Lilley.

Corporal Parr had been in the regiment nearly nine years. Lilley bore a very good character. He posted the sentry in the servants' room. He was told that Corporal Blake had been under arrest for not posting the sentry inside. In answer to Colonel Crawley, the witness admitted that the sentries had orders not to follow Lilley into his wife's bedroom. Lilley never made any complaints.

Corporal James Barry had been upwards of nine years in the regiment. Lilley was thought a sober, steady man. This witness gave the same testimony as to the orders about searching the servants, &c. In answer to a question from the Colonel, he said he could not see through the chick of the bedroom unless he went close up to it. There was a covering over the centre of the chick. He never saw Mrs. Lilley's bed. He never received any complaints from Lilley.

Corporal James Cowan had been seventeen years in the regiment, and testified that Lilley bore a good character for sobriety and soldierly conduct. He gave the same account as the previous witnesses of the orders for the sentries. He never saw Mrs. Lilley in her bed. To the best of his recollection he never saw her at all during her husband's arrest.

Private John Stone's evidence was in favour of Lilley, and, as to the orders received by the sentries, it was to the same effect as that of the immediately preceding witnesses. He could see through the chick figures moving when the light in the bedroom was strong. He never saw Mrs. Lilley in her bed.

Sergeant Samuel James, who had been in the regiment eight years, testified to the good character of Lilley. The sentries were not to lose sight of Lilley. Neither Lilley nor his wife made any complaint.

Corporal John Condy had been five years and four months in the regiment. Lilley, he said, was a sober steady man. The orders were, that the sentries were not to lose sight of him on any account, except when he went into his wife's bedroom. He could not see over the chick if he went close to it. He saw Mrs. Lilley on the 25th of May in her night-dress. Not finding the sentry where he had posted him, he called out for him, and heard some one say "come in." He lifted up the chick, and found the sentry with his arm at the back of Lilley's neck supporting him in the bed. Lilley was then dying. There was no medical man then with him.

At this stage of the proceedings Colonel Crawley addressed the court, and insisted that the letter of censure on Colonel Shute should be produced, as it was in the last degree essential to his defence. The President replied that the prosecutor would conduct the case as he thought best, and he believed he would think it more regular to go on with the examination of the witnesses. Colonel Horsford said that he had told Colonel Shute his attendance would not be required this day. Before the case was concluded Colonel Shute would be recalled.

The examination was resumed. Private Patrick Gaffney: When he was on sentry Lilley once asked him to do him a kindness, which was to go outside the bungalow while his wife undressed, as he wanted to rub some liniment on her breast. He did so, and returned to his post when Mrs. Lilley was dressed again. This witness admitted that he was now a prisoner for drunkenness, and had often been in trouble for the same offence. He had been eight years in the regiment. Here Colonel Crawley objected to this witness, on the ground that his name was not in the list of witnesses furnished to him. Colonel Horsford explained that since that list was given it had been advisable to produce him, and that it was only a few days ago the prosecutor had any knowledge of the man. The Colonel himself, it seems, had summoned this man as one of his own witnesses.

Private Michael Christy had been eight years and a-half in the regiment. Lilley, he said, had always borne a very excellent character. He had been sentry over him; he was not to lose sight of him. The witness was never in Mrs. Lilley's bedroom, and never saw her there.

Private John Scott gave much the same evidence, as did also Private William Poole.

Private John Knight remembered seeing Mrs. Gibson in the first bungalow talking to Mrs. Lilley. He then held the rank of sergeant. Lilley made no complaint.

Sergeant Thomas Robinson testified to the good character of Lilley. He never saw Mrs. Lilley in her bedroom.

Corporal Samuel Summers also testified to the character of Lilley as a sober, steady man and good non-commissioned officer.

The Court then adjourned.

THIRTEENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Considerable excitement was produced this day by the announcement that the letter about Colonel Shute and the Enniskillen Dragoons, containing a censure of the Colonel, was to be withheld altogether, in consequence of some hint from the Horse Guards to the effect that the interests of the service required that it should not be produced as evidence on this occasion. Perhaps this will hardly satisfy the public, or be thought fair play towards the prisoner, who already, it must be confessed, stands thus far in a very different and much better position than that which he occupied before the trial.

Private Gaffney, though a prisoner at present, was again produced in court, that Colonel Crawley might cross-examine him if he pleased, as this witness had given evidence about the rubbing of the liniment on the breast of Mrs. Lilley; but Colonel Crawley declined putting any questions to him. Several other privates were now questioned, both by Colonel Horsford and Colonel Crawley, but their answers contained nothing new, being virtually to the same purpose as those of preceding witnesses, who testified that Mrs. Lilley's privacy was respected, and that Lilley was a steady, sober man, and that no complaints were made.

One witness, Private John Atkins, was asked by Colonel Crawley if Lilley had ever made any complaints. The witness acknowledged that Lilley had often done so, but had requested him not to report the complaint, as he should himself complain before the court-martial.

Private John Bryant, who was Sergeant-major Lilley's servant while under arrest, deposed that the sentries gave no annoyance to Mrs. Lilley.

Colonel Crawley now requested that Colonel Shute might be called, and that the letter to him regarding the state of the 6th Dragoons when he commanded it should be read.

Colonel Horsford explained that he was informed by the Adjutant-general that the letter was considered confidential, and that its production would be detrimental to the public service. Colonel Shute was ready to be cross-examined.

Colonel Crawley, as the letter was withheld, and he had been taken somewhat by surprise, was unprepared to examine Colonel Shute that day.

The Court adjourned.

FOURTEENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Colonel Crawley made another attempt today to obtain the reading of the letter of the Commander-in-Chief addressed to Colonel Shute, on the state of the 6th Dragoons while under his command, but the Court decided that it should not be produced, and Colonel Crawley then declined to cross-examine Colonel Shute. The opinion of the Judge-advocate-general of the legality of the question put to Dr. Barnett was to the effect that it might be put by the Court or the Prosecutor. The prosecutor was willing that it should be put, but the Court decided against it.

Several privates were now called as witnesses, but they had nothing new or important to say on either side, and some of them were not even questioned for the prosecution or defence, but were merely produced because they were on the list of witnesses.

Private Nye deposed that when there was a light in Mrs. Lilley's room he could just discern the bed through the chink.

Private John McKee deposed that he was unable to see the bed through the chink.

A more important witness was now produced, Paymaster-sergeant Beaven, who admitted that he had taken money from Mr. Smales to Sergeant Bernard during the arrest of the three sergeant-majors. The money was for Sergeant-major Wakefield. He deposed that Sergeant Bernard, who lived next door to Wakefield, told him that there was a hole in the wall of the latter's quarters. He did not say that he had made one himself for the purpose of passing money through it. He (the witness) never conveyed any verbal or written messages to Sergeant-major Lilley during his arrest. He recollected that Paymaster Smales had told him that he had correspondence almost every day with Sergeant-major Lilley while under arrest. He had himself no personal knowledge of the fact. We now pass over several unimportant witnesses that seem to have been called only to lengthen out the proceedings, or simply because they were on the list.

Private Charles Ewing saw Lilley drink about a wine glass full of brandy in a tumbler an hour before he was taken ill. Mrs. Lilley asked him to bring in Sergeant-major Cotton, but he could not come, owing to an accident to his foot; Mrs. Cotton came. Mrs. Lilley called witness into the bed-room; he found her husband on the ground. He lifted him up, when Lilley struggled with him, and both fell. He at last put him into bed, and Sergeant-major Cotton then came in and said he (the witness) had better send for the doctor. Mrs. Lilley now gave witness a wine glassful of brandy for Sergeant-major Lilley. Witness gave him part with a teaspoon, but he could not give all, as Lilley kept his mouth closed. Lilley was taken ill about one o'clock. Dr. Barnett came to him about half-past two. He died at about half-past three. The same witness remembers seeing Sergeant-major Lilley's servant bring two bottles of brandy to his master's bungalow on the 18th or 19th of May. Mrs. Lilley was allowed the brandy as a medicine.

Lance Corporal Holman deposed that on the 23rd of May, the day before Lilley died, he took a bottle of brandy from under his couch, from which he drank, and asked the witness to drink with him. The bottle of brandy, to the best of witness's recollection, was taken from a long boot. After he drank from it a second time witness threw away the empty bottle, at Lilley's request. The next day Lilley complained of pains and cramps in the stomach.

Lilley sent for the doctor. He drank the brandy, he said, because he was depressed in mind.

Private Robert M'Vay deposed that he was at first posted as sentry outside the verandah of the first bungalow, and had complained, not to the sergeant of the guard but to the men on guard, that he could not carry out his orders where he was posted. Other men on guard made a similar complaint—that is, that if posted outside they could not take care never to lose sight of the prisoner, and prevent all communication with him.

The Court then adjourned.

FIFTEENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

On the opening of the Court this day Lieutenant-colonel Fitzwygram, of the 15th Hussars, who once commanded the 6th Dragoons, identified a letter of his to the Deputy-Adjutant-General, which bore the highest testimony to the character of Lilley. As regimental sergeant-major, "he was the best man he had ever met." He could not have been addicted to drink without the witness's having some knowledge of it, or, at least, some suspicion of it.

Several unimportant witnesses followed. These we pass over.

Sergeant-major Garraway deposed that Lilley had kus-kus tattles, or wetted grass screens, to three open windows, to cool the air inside. He knew that Lilley was in the habit of regularly taking stimulants. He drank brandy. He had known him in one morning take seven or eight glasses of brandy and water. This witness, when the prosecutor asked him if he respected Lilley, replied in the affirmative.

Private William Malings, clerk to Sergeant-major Wakefield, admitted that Sergeant Bernard conveyed to Sergeant-major Wakefield written communications through a hole in the wall of Wakefield's quarters, and held verbal intercourse with him in the rear. Wakefield was not "raving mad," but slightly delirious from drink, on the day that Lilley died. He had often seen Wakefield the worse for drink. Liquor was passed to him by Bernard through the hole in the wall.

It was here proposed by the prosecutor to put in evidence the Regimental Order Book, and, after a great deal of discussion for and against this proceeding, only a few pages of the book were allowed to be read as evidence. The passages objected to were those parts of the proceedings of the Mhow Court-martial which referred to Smales's protest against the arrest of the three sergeant-majors, as they were his witnesses, Lilley's evidence against Colonel Crawley's harsh manners to himself and to the commissioned officers, and Colonel Crawley's assertion about the deficiency of Lieut. Fitzsimon's eyesight. In one extract Sir Hugh Rose's remark was given, to the purport that Sergeant-major Lilley, "although in a state which required medical attendance, had purchased for his use, within the short period elapsing between his arrest and his death—that is, from the 26th of April to the 25th of May—the extraordinary quantity of twenty-three bottles of brandy, twelve pints of ale, two bottles of port wine, and a bottle of gin, quite enough in combination with Indian summer heat to compromise the life of a man in exercise and rude health." At p. 154 of the Blue-book Colonel Crawley is reported to have said:—"With regard to the Regimental Sergeant-major Lilley, and Troop Sergeant-majors Wakefield and Duval, I put their evidence out of Court altogether, as they have all been guilty of conspiracy against me, their commanding-officer, and against my authority, as already reported to this Court and his Excellency the Commanding-in-Chief, by whose orders the two + latter still remain under arrest on this very charge of conspiracy against me and my authority." [+ Released this day, June 7.]

"The Court will have in their remembrance the report I made to the President, on or about the 7th of April last, on the subject of the communication to Sergeant-major Lilley of the proceedings of this trial on the first three days, and the secret and clandestine manner in which the sergeant-majors had communicated them to several other non-commissioned officers with closed doors, and at a late hour of the night, thereby showing the guilty knowledge of the illegality and impropriety of the act they were committing. The President, on receiving this report from me forbade the proceedings being made public any more until the case was closed, as such an extraordinary proceeding, he said, could only be intended to bias the minds of the witnesses on one side or the other and thus prejudice the matter under investigation. When this order became known to the non-commissioned officers concerned, Sergeant-major Wakefield, who was one of them, swore a dreadful and sanguinary oath that he would 'poison the man who gave the information, or in some other way make away with him, for he was not fit to live,' and that 'if he was called into court and sworn, he would swear he had never seen the proceedings on the trial at all.' On Sunday, April 20, being the day before the prisoner read the opening statement of his defence before this Court, a copy of it was supplied to Sergeant-major Wakefield (who, it will be recollected, on his cross-examination by me on Friday, May 9, stated that he supposed the papers had come from the paymasters' bungalow), by whom it was given to Sergeant-major Lilley, and handed on to Sergeant-major Cotton, Sergeant-major Moreton, and, I believe, other non-commissioned officers. I had certain information of all that was going forward among these non-commissioned officers, and on the night of Wednesday, the 23rd of April, the Regimental Sergeant-major Lilley made use of some of the most gross, opprobrious epithets respecting me on the open barrack parade-ground, in presence of several non-commissioned officers, that could well be imagined. It was not long before I was acquainted with this circumstance also, and I felt it my duty to acquaint the major-general commanding the division with it, for the information of the Commander-in-Chief. A few days afterwards I obtained more precise information, which I considered would enable me definitely to bring home to the regimental sergeant-major and the others, his accomplices, the conspiracy in which they were engaged against me and my authority. I investigated the matter thoroughly, by the examination of Sergeant-majors Lilley, Moreton, Wakefield, and Duval—separately in presence of three officers of the regiment, two of them being the captains of the troops to which two of the sergeant-majors belonged, and the third an officer who was casually at my house on business. The result of the investigation was that I placed Sergeant-majors Lilley, Wakefield, and Duval under arrest, on a charge of conspiracy against me, and that I obtained the sanction of the major-general commanding the division to place them in close arrest, to prevent their being tampered with, and also to prevent the carrying out of the sanguinary threat uttered by Sergeant-major Wakefield on the former occasion."

A discussion now ensued as to whether the question was to be put to Dr. Barnett which the prosecution think of much importance, respecting the full report of all that Mrs. Lilley had said about the quantity of liquor taken by her husband. The prosecutor had been hampered by his own admission of the illegality of mere hearsay evidence, and was twitted with his inconsistency by the prisoner, who objects to the question being put. The Court say they gave no pledge, and it seems probable that they will put the question themselves, though the decision is postponed to another day. The case for the prosecution is now all but closed; the question respecting Dr. Barnett's report of Mrs. Lilley's conversation being, perhaps, the only matter that remains to be disposed of.

The Court adjourned to Monday morning.

INDIA—ITS PROSPERITY AND ITS COST.

A strange and melancholy discord pervades our last intelligence from India. Prosperity and its cost are reported together, and side by side with the picture of our successes we receive an illustration of the price at which they have been accomplished. Yet it is singular that the penalty should have become so heavy at this particular period of our rule. Our statesmen fall victims to the responsibilities of government just when its cares and trials have been apparently alleviated by a thousand results of political and military progress.

In past generations an Indian statesman was, indeed, an exile. The communications between India and England were so difficult and tedious that we should now regard such conditions of intercourse as utterly impracticable. Life in India was a new life altogether, with scarcely a touch of European character about it; and yet in those days men sustained the trial more securely. One Governor-general, and one only, found a grave in India, and a conspicuous monument commemorates the remarkable event. Now, however, though the mother country and its dependency are linked so closely together that a brief fortnight serves for the transmission of news, though all the appliances of Eastern existence are tempered and adapted to European wants, though railroads render travel easy, and salubrious retreats are accessible to all, the sufferers are more numerous than before. It is deplorable to think that the too probable death of Lord Elgin should have been abruptly announced at the very moment when the general condition of India could be described as our correspondent describes it.

In two months from this time the railroad will be open from Calcutta to Delhi—a distance of fully 900 miles. To appreciate the advantages flowing from this marvellous enterprise we have only to look on the picture presented in our correspondence. The people of Bengal are too eager and too excited at present to think much about trade or commerce, or political consequences, or military results. They are wild for change of scene, for fresh air, for country rambles, and historical sight-seeing. To the mass of inhabitants in the Lower Provinces, cities and places of which the names are familiar to every educated European, have hitherto been known by reputation only. They heard of them only as a New Englander hears of Canterbury and Westminster, of Bosworth Field and Battle Abbey. At length comes the railway, and at the first snort of the iron horse everything is changed. There is a rush to the station, and so rapid is the transition from one scene to another, that in a few hours the parched and exhausted Bengalee finds himself cheerfully shivering in the fresh breezes of the hills. Our correspondent describes the scenery of the Middle Ganges as a traveller in China might describe the scenery of the Yang-tze-Kiang. It is a new world opened to view, and the view in a very short time will be immensely extended. Already the people of Calcutta are talking of a pleasure trip to Lahore, at the very opposite extremity of India. It is but a few years since the Sutlej was as fabulous a river to us as the Hydaspes to the Romans, and now we have a "Great Exhibition" expected on the other side of it which all India intends to go and see. Even the mysterious regions beyond the Indus will be reached by the display. "The effect on Central Asia will be most healthy, and the glitter will have a most beneficial effect on our own subjects and feudatories." But in the midst of all these joyous sounds the knell of death is heard. The great feature of the anticipated spectacle disappears while we read the programme. The Legislature may be there, and the Commander-in-Chief, and the select army, but the Viceroy, whose presence was to characterise the festival, will be absent. The fate of his predecessors has been his. He escaped some of their trials, but there was one trial which was inevitable—the ever-present strain which the government of an enormous empire occasions, and which appears almost too much for mortal endurance.

Never, otherwise, was India more prosperous. Deficits are things of the past. The revenue is flourishing beyond example, and the prospects of the country would be incredible if they were not exhibited in so substantial a form. Bombay received from us, for cotton alone, during the twelve months ending with April last, upwards of £16,000,000 more than had been received in the year previous. Of this enormous excess nearly £14,000,000 came in the shape of bullion. It is said, indeed, that during the last thirty years India has certainly taken and absorbed precious metals to the amount of £200,000,000, and we are assured, to complete the marvel, that its capacities in this way have scarcely yet been felt.

"Our trade, till last year, has not touched even the middle classes. The peasantry have hardly begun to feel its profits." What, then, are we to expect when all the countless millions of that mighty land shall begin to toil and sow and reap for us in earnest, to despatch cargoes upon cargoes of cotton and tea, and to give us all the Eastern products we can ask for in exchange for Australian gold?

But if all this prosperity comes, as it certainly does come, from free trade, unshackled enterprise, and European agency, what are we to say to the apparently increasing insecurity of European life? We know that Calcutta is one of the unhealthiest places in the world, but it is not more unhealthy than it used to be, and, indeed, is probably less so, while the facilities for leaving it and exchanging its noxious atmosphere for a more wholesome climate are infinitely greater than in times gone by. We know and understand that as India is now governed, under the eyes of England and the check of opinion, its government may be a very different thing from the administrations of sixty years since. With extension of territory we have inherited extension of care, and the spread of education has at length created a public opinion even among the listless and passive population of Hindostan. But there are compensating conditions on the other side. Life in India is exile no longer. Society there is gradually assimilating to society at home; communications are easy, rapid, and constant; and, as India comprises all varieties of climate, and the railroad opens up all parts of India, a languishing sufferer ought soon to find relief. We fear, however, that the truth of the case is contained in one of the exigencies of modern government. It is now held that the right men for India are not necessarily men who have grown up from boyhood in Indian traditions and studied exclusively in Indian schools. A good statesman at home will be a good statesman in Calcutta, and the habits of British administration are precisely those which may be applied with the best effect to the administration of India. But these conditions of selection presume an administrator not only of mature judgment but of ripened age, and at that period of life the climate of India is peculiarly trying. The rulers of India in former days were for the most part men who had become acclimated in their youth, and to whom Indian nature was as second nature when they succeeded to power. Now an approved and accomplished statesman steps abruptly from one sphere to another, and the change proves overwhelming. To neutralise it we must improve as far as possible the terms of Indian residence, and we believe that no greater advance could be made in this direction than by terminating the necessity of residence in Calcutta.—Times.

SCINDE, PUNJAB, AND DELHI BANK.

The first ordinary general meeting of the shareholders in this company was held at the London Tavern, on Tuesday, the 1st inst., Mr. W. P. Andrew presiding. There was a large attendance of shareholders.

The Chairman opened the proceedings by observing that as this was the first meeting of the company he could not but express his gratification at seeing so numerous a gathering of their influential proprietary. The bank had only been in operation a little more than a year, and the directors could not therefore at present say much more than that they had good hope for the future. The bank had been established with the view of developing the resources of those recently acquired and important territories which were drained by the Indus and its tributaries; but although this was the more immediate object, it was contemplated that the field of operations should be extended, so as to embrace the whole commerce of India, and the still more vast and densely peopled empire adjoining. It was also contemplated to include in their future operations the great rising and important colonies of Australia. The company was instituted with the greatest economy, and no money was paid to anybody for services rendered previous to its establishment.

He stated this, not with the view of obtaining any credit from the shareholders, for the directors merely considered that they had acted in the matter as honest men, and in accordance with their duty, but as an earnest of the manner in which they would deal with the pecuniary resources that might be entrusted to their guardianship—(hear). They had already started two branches of the institution in India. Up to this time they had driven a safe and profitable business—(hear, hear). They did not, on the present occasion, give any figures, inasmuch as any statement of the kind would be very imperfect, and it would be unreasonable to expect a balance-sheet should be furnished in so short a period. The commerce of India, which they proposed to assist in developing, had amounted in the past year to no less than £100,000,000 sterling. Nearly twenty years ago a statement of the commerce of India was compiled under his direction, in the India House, and he had compared the then state of things with what it was at the present day. The result was most remarkable, and the rise, he believed, unprecedented in any other country in the world. In the year 1833 the whole sea borne commerce of the three presidencies amounted to little more than £15,000,000; in 1843 the amount was in round numbers £30,000,000; ten years ago it had risen to about £50,000,000; and the present amount was £100,000,000, exclusive of the settlements in the Straits, and also of the cargoes landed and re-exported. Judging from the past, therefore, and looking to the improvement in the laws, particularly as regarded the promptness and simplicity with which justice was administered, the facilities given relating to the sale of land, and looking also to the rapid means of conveying intelligence by the telegraph, the establishment of prompt, easy, and safe communication from one end of the country to the other by means of railways, and the anxiety of the Government of India to assist in giving a free course to the spread of intelligence, education, and commerce, all over the country, he could not but look forward with confidence to the future of their bank. The trade of Central Asia alone had excited great attention in the minds of British statesmen for many years, and lately had achieved a signal triumph, from which, in the course of a year or two he ventured to predict remarkable fruits; that trade which had been hitherto monopolised by Russia, that trade which had gone by the Caspian to Novgorod and Astracan—that trade, in spite of every difficulty, an almost prohibitive duty levied by the native chiefs, the attacks of banditti, and danger from torrents, had continued to come into India through the passes, and had gone on increasing in the face of these obstructions; and now a great future awaited it. By recent intelligence it appeared that treaties had been concluded with the native chiefs, by which a free passage of persons and goods, or a passage at a low duty was provided; bridges had been constructed, and everything had been done that enlightenment could bring to bear to smooth the rough paths and make easy for the merchant that route which would not only be the means of enriching traders and spreading civilisation in those distant countries, but of establishing such profitable relations with the tribes on our borders as would induce them to become traders instead of marauders, and assist us here with their products, and in India by giving business to our banks and railways, instead of employing our statesmen and soldiers in devising means for their coercion and destruction. He had alluded to the resources of India, and the vast field afforded for banking operations, merely with a view of showing how inadequate were the present banking facilities for that most productive country. At present the capital of all the banks in India amounted to little more than £8,000,000, which was a very small amount indeed for such an enormous commerce, banking being the oil of commerce, and for a population of 150,000,000, all capable of useful employment and given to industry, if they had only a fair remuneration for their labour, and a fair rate of profit for their merchandise. Having established their bank in the field of operations proposed in the first instance, and having on their direction gentlemen who were well conversant not only with the resources of India but of China and Australia, they might rely upon it that the experience and knowledge of those gentlemen would be brought to bear to advise, when the proper time arrived, the extension of their undertaking to more distant and perhaps still more lucrative fields of enterprise—(hear, hear). They had a first-rate body of shareholders, numbering 550, and constituting a most satisfactory and substantial basis, and the capital had been most promptly subscribed. Every share of the first issue had been at once taken, and the shareholders had responded liberally, though not to the full extent, to the fresh issue, of which 10,000 shares had been taken, leaving 2,500, which would be sold for the benefit of the bank—(hear, hear). It was proposed to make a call of £3 on the new shares almost immediately, so as to place them in the same position as the old, and he thought it very probable that a call would be made on both old and new in the month of April next. Having equalised the two issues, and having made this call, he thought the directors would be in possession of sufficient funds to give the shareholders a little breathing time—(a laugh). The bank had made a good beginning, and its future was one of great promise—(hear, hear). He concluded by moving the adoption of the report which had already been published.

Sir S. A. Donaldson, in seconding the motion, expressed a very high opinion of the prospects of the undertaking. Looking to the success of other similar institutions, and noticing that the £50 shares of the Agra and United Service Bank stood at £116, the £25 shares of the Oriental Bank at £60, the £25 shares of the Chartered Mercantile Bank of India at £71, and the £20 shares of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China at £37, he could not but look forward with confidence to the future of this bank. In two or three months Delhi would be in railway communication with Calcutta, and what was there too great to expect from the opening of the trade of the Punjab? It was also an important feature in their prospects that Sir J. Lawrence was going out as Governor-General, the cradle of whose fortunes was the Punjab, for it was there he saved British India—(hear, hear).

Mr. Conybeare, on the part of the shareholders, expressed his confidence in the prospects of the undertaking, and congratulated the directors upon having broken through at so early a period the narrow field in which it was first proposed to conduct their operations.

In reply to a Shareholder,

The Chairman stated that all the shares of the first issue were taken and paid upon in this country; but the bank being received with so much favour in India, instructions had been sent out to the managing director to place a considerable number there, and a register had been established to enable transfers to be made in India.

The motion was unanimously agreed to.

On the motion of Mr. Lightly Simpson, the auditors, Messrs. W. Dent and J. E. Anderdon, were reappointed.

The Chairman wished to remark, in reference to Sir J. Lawrence, that in the very height of the mutiny he was as anxious about the introduction of railways and the establishment of steam vessels on the rivers of the Punjab as though he had nothing else to occupy his mind. It was from a very admirable and statesmanlike despatch of Sir J. Lawrence that he (the chairman) was enabled to get the sanction of the Government in this country to the Punjab Railway; and it was a remarkable instance of the self-possession of the man that he was able at such a time to write the best despatch that had ever been written on railways in the Punjab—(hear).

A cordial vote of thanks to the chairman terminated the proceedings.

THE PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.

The twenty-third annual meeting of this company was held on Friday, at the offices, Leadenhall-street, to receive a report from the directors, and to declare a dividend; Mr. A. Anderson, the chairman, presided.

Mr. C. W. Howell, the secretary, read the report, which stated that the accounts related to the financial year, commencing the 1st of October, 1862, and terminating on the 30th of September last. The capital account showed that the company stood possessed at the latter date of stock in ships, less the amount deducted for depreciation, £2,371,020; also of freehold and leasehold property in England, and docks and premises at Calcutta, Bombay, Singapore, and other stations, £134,202; and stock of coals, naval and victualling stores, amounting to £239,611; also cash at bankers, investments, bills receivable, balances in agents' hands, and debts due to the company, £785,804—making the total assets £3,531,546. The capital received from the proprietors at that date amounted to £2,100,000, and there had been received on debentures £500,000—together £2,600,000. The liabilities of the company in bills payable and otherwise amounted to £552,320—making the total capital and liabilities £3,152,320, leaving a surplus of £379,226. This surplus was represented by the balance at the credit of the general reserve fund. The gross revenue from freight, passage-money, postal service contracts, charter money, and other sources for the 12 months ending the 30th of September last amounted to £2,206,305. The expenditure and charges on revenue, including interest on debentures, with the reserves made for insurance, wear and tear, and depreciation for the same period, amounted to £2,060,850, leaving a net profit of £235,455. From this was deducted the dividend of 3½ per cent. and additional payment of 1½ per cent. for the half-year ending the 31st of March last, £105,000, and for the half-year's dividend of 3½ per cent., now recommended with an additional payment of 2 per cent., 115,500, leaving a balance of £14,955. The balance of proprietors' underwriting account, after deducting £72,000 for the loss of the Colombo, amounted to £33,000, out of which it was proposed to pay the proprietors £31,500, being at the rate of 1½ per cent., leaving a balance of £1,500 for the general reserve fund, which amounted to £379,226. The company's fleet consisted of 59 steam and sailing ships, having an aggregate tonnage of 88,018 tons and 17,701-horse power, including 10 sailing transport, store, and coal ships, of 14,064 tons in the aggregate. The revenue account exhibited a satisfactory result of the year's operations; and the directors were consequently enabled to recommend the usual dividend of 3½ per cent., and an additional payment of 2 per cent., leaving a balance of £14,955 to be deducted from the capital account for depreciation, in addition to the ordinary reserve of 5 per cent. for depreciation. The amounts payable to the shareholders by warrant, free of income-tax, on the 28th inst., would in all be 7 per cent.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said they would observe by the statement of accounts the improvement in their financial position as compared with the last annual statement of accounts. Their revenue had increased by about £70,000, and their expenditure had somewhat diminished. He thought this result had been caused by circumstances which he considered temporary. The war in America had caused a great increase in the production of cotton in Egypt and India. It was requisite to pay for this produce in gold and silver, which had occasioned a very large shipment of specie to India for some time past, and that had, of course, increased their revenue. The demand for shipping in India to bring cotton thence had enabled them to send coals to their Indian station at less cost than formerly. They could not regard those circumstances as being permanent. When the inhuman war in America was brought to a close they could scarcely expect to benefit so largely by the trade to India as they had done lately. He then adverted to an offer the company had made six months ago to Government to give a double line of communication to Australia. The offer was made at the request of the Government, and the directors had every reason to believe the Government would have considered it a very moderate one, and desirable to accept it. Recent advices from Australia informed them that it was so considered there, and that Sydney itself, which had always looked to the Panama route, was also desirous of accepting the offer; but although three mails had arrived at Australia since the offer had been made by the company no communication had been received from the Government by the local authorities there on the subject. The directors had not pressed the matter at all, because the company was quite as well off with a single line, and rather better, than they would be with a double line. There was a prospect of increased trade with the East, which was likely to arise out of the new connection with Japan. They had occasionally despatched a vessel to ports there; their agent had been to Japan, and he thought it advisable to establish a regular line twice a month in connection with their China line. This would be done provided the Government would give them a moderate subsidy for carrying the mails. The admiral on the station was anxious they should do so in order to save him the trouble of employing ships-of-war on that service. They were now in a good condition, and would endeavour to keep so. He concluded by moving the adoption of the report, which was seconded.

Mr. Gliddon said he was glad that they had not felt anything from the competition of the French steamers.

Mr. J. Jones said he was not satisfied with the result of their operations, because the passenger traffic had shown a decrease of £50,000 in the year. He thought the passenger traffic should have increased with increase of specie. He believed that the French line of steamers affected their receipts for passengers, and he had heard they were carrying passengers at a lower rate, something like 30 per cent. below the company's prices. He understood from the Postmaster-General's report that the offer of the Belgian Government to perform the British portion of the mail service between Dover and Ostend was lower than that of their company, and had been accepted; and also that they were negotiating with the French Government to carry a portion of the English mails. He thought that was an anti-national policy, that ought not to be carried out. He had no doubt that they should be independent of foreign aid in carrying their mails.

The Chairman explained that a large portion of the increase in the revenue was for the conveyance of specie. He believed that Mr. Jones had examined the accounts in detail respecting the passenger traffic. It was true the French ships had carried some proportion of the passengers, but, independent of that, there had been a year of peace in India, and consequently there were nothing like the number of passengers carried to and fro that had been in former years. Another reason for the reduction in the number carried was that their French competitors had relieved them of carrying a small number of passengers at a particular period of the year when it was usual with the company to despatch one or two extra ships to bring them home and to go back empty. They had relieved them of that service and saved them the expense. As to the French packets carrying the mails, he believed they had afforded an opportunity to take some of them. A convention had been entered into, and it appeared subsequently that a proposition had been entertained to the effect that they should take out some part of the mails to China, but a representation was made from this company and the matter dropped. The French ships only went monthly, while the Peninsular and Oriental Company's ships started weekly. The Government could not break up the present arrangement with the company without seriously affecting the commercial arrangements of the country. As to removing the packet station from Marseilles to other ports, the company were quite ready for any change that might be necessary. With regard to the French ships reducing the fares, they had done so in a few instances, but it was a mistake, and had been rectified. They had no reason to suppose there was anything like bad faith, and they were still working on amicable terms with the French company.

After some further observations, the report was unanimously adopted; a dividend at the rate of 3½ per cent., an additional payment of 2 per cent., and a payment of 1½ per cent. on the underwriting account, making together 7 per cent., for the half-year ending the 30th of September, were unanimously agreed to, payable on the 28th inst. in a single warrant, free of income-tax.

The retiring directors, Mr. W. F. De Salis and Mr. J. George, M.P., were unanimously re-elected; and also the Earl of Leven and Melville, and Mr. A. Mackenzie, the retiring auditors.

On the motion of Admiral Coffin, seconded by Mr. Gliddon, thanks were unanimously voted to the chairman and directors for their able management, and the proceedings terminated.

INDIAN TRAMWAY COMPANY (LIMITED).

The half-yearly meeting of the proprietors was held at the London Tavern, on Wednesday last, Mr. W. A. Rose, M.P., in the chair.

Mr. Scott, the secretary, read the report, which stated that at the last meeting the directors were authorised to execute a short line from Arcnum junction on the Madras railway, to Conjeveram, 17½ miles, at the estimated cost of about £80,000. A considerable portion of the rails and permanent way, materials for the line, had been shipped, and the remainder, with the rolling stock, would be on the way out by an early date. The company's resident engineer arrived in Madras at the end of September to make the necessary preparations. The chairman of the company, Sir Macdonald Stephenson, had just proceeded to India on his own affairs, and would use his exertions to further the works and arrange satisfactory terms with the local governments for undertaking other lines, the particulars of which would be laid before the proprietors.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, congratulated the meeting on the commencement of the company's operations for constructing cheap lines of communication in India by means of tramways for feeding railways, and adapted, according to local circumstances, to cattle or locomotive power. The line between Arcnum junction and Conjeveram had been surveyed, and the materials were now on their way out to India. Their engineer reported that the line was very easy, that the gradients were light, and that two rivers only had to be crossed, presenting no engineering difficulties. The materials would arrive by January next, and the works would at once be pushed vigorously forward, in order that the experiment might be properly tested, and the country accommodated with the new mode of transit. It was fortunate that the chairman had proceeded to India, at no expense to the company, seeing that personal superintendence was far better than the most voluminous correspondence. Sir M. Stephenson would carry out all the negotiations that were necessary, and any further engagements that were required. He felt convinced that the establishment of tramways in India would prove a remunerative investment to the company, and develop the industrial resources of a vast region of our Indian empire.

General Alexander seconded the adoption of the report, and it was carried unanimously.

Mr. Bell said that having recently returned from Calcutta, and from his knowledge and experience of the country, he felt convinced that with proper management the Indian Tramway Company would be a great success. The advantages, however, of the undertaking must be brought clearly before the natives of the Presidencies to enable them to appreciate it, both commercially and as an investment. The labouring classes in Calcutta, Bombay, and Bengal lived four and five miles out of the cities. At present there was no means of communication for them except by expensive carriage, and to them the tramway communication would be a very great boon, as well as for the transmission of goods from the navigations and the custom-house. He trusted that with this view the directors and Sir M. Stephenson would put themselves in communication with the Calcutta committee.

A Proprietor inquired whether the sum of £80,000 would be sufficient for the line between Arcnum and Conjeveram.

The Chairman said, Yes. The estimated cost per mile was £3,500, but it would be made for £2,500, thus giving them a margin of £1,000.

Sir C. Fox, the engineer, said there need be no apprehension as to the labour market. The fact was that Government supplied them with the road, and consequently the labour necessary for the construction of the works of art resolved itself into laying down the permanent way, building simple stations, and furnishing the rolling stock.

The Chairman said the suggestions made by Mr. Bell should receive the serious attention of the Board.

The retiring directors, General Alexander, and Messrs. Allan, Braine, and Brockett, were then re-elected, and Messrs. Franklin and Smith as auditors. A vote of thanks to the chairman and directors closed the proceedings.

MADRAS IRRIGATION AND CANAL COMPANY.

The half-yearly meeting of this company was held on Saturday, the 29th ult., at the London Tavern; Mr. Thomson in the chair.

The report (an abstract of which appeared in our last) was taken as read.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said that during the half-year the want of labour had been severely felt, and formed one of the greatest difficulties in the construction of the works. There was a strong prejudice in India to emigrate in search of work. The Government had, however, taken up the question of emigration, and he hoped that steps would be taken to restrict it in some measure. Owing to the delay in the negotiation with the Government and the want of labour the cost of the works would somewhat exceed the estimate. If the company had been in a position to procure sufficient labour they would have been in a position to open a great portion of the land for irrigation purposes. The construction of the canal from Mittacondal to the junction with the river would, it was hoped, proceed rapidly. Every exertion would be made to execute the works on the Nellore section. The engineer had been actively engaged upon a survey of the Toombuddra River and its feeders for reservoir sites, but in consequence of the nature of the climate the work could only be carried on during a portion of the year. After a careful consideration of the affairs of the company he did not see the slightest grounds for any discouragement. Of course in works of such magnitude as the company were carrying out slight accidents would occur, but ultimately he believed that the works would be successfully completed. Both the Government and the company worked together in an amicable spirit. He had every confidence in the future prospects of the company, and he hoped that before long the directors would be in a position to declare a dividend.

Mr. Bouverie, M.P., seconded the motion for the adoption of the report, which was agreed to.

The retiring directors were re-elected, and a vote of thanks to the chairman closed the proceedings.

EAST INDIA IRRIGATION AND CANAL COMPANY.

The fifth ordinary general meeting of this company was held at the London Tavern on Monday, the 30th ult., Mr. James Thomson in the chair.

The report (an abstract of which appeared in our last) was taken as read.

The Chairman commented on the satisfactory progress made by the company since the last meeting; and after detailing the nature of the works in contemplation, said that he hoped, during next year, that they would have sixty miles of water communication from Calcutta towards Madnapore, and ninety-one miles in the direction of Balasore. The whole cost of the initiative works was estimated at from £500,000 to £600,000, and when completed would render the remainder more easy of execution and more profitable to the company. It would be necessary to make a call on the shareholders in the course of a few months. The chairman then moved the adoption of the report.

Mr. P. P. Bouverie, M.P., seconded the motion. The report was adopted and the retiring directors re-elected, as was also the retiring auditor.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LORD ELGIN.—On Friday a telegram was received at the India Office to the effect that, up to the 17th ult., no intelligence had reached Calcutta of the death of Lord Elgin, though that sad event was daily expected. The above information is two days later than that furnished by the despatch published last week, which brought the first news to this country of the alarming illness of the Governor-General of India. A later telegram is expected on Tuesday or Wednesday next.

PRIVATE SECRETARY OF THE NEW GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA.—Sir John Lawrence, the new Governor-general of India, has appointed Dr. Charles Hathaway to be his private secretary. Dr. Hathaway has long been recognised in the official blue books as an active inspector general of prisons in the Punjab. In October, 1861, in consequence of the fatal outbreak of cholera among the soldiers at Meeran Meer, he was appointed special sanitary commissioner; and most of the practical suggestions contained in his report with respect to ventilation have already been adopted, by order of the Commander-in-Chief, in the barracks and cantonments of India.

THE INDIAN COUNCIL.—Sir George Clerk has been appointed to the seat in the Indian Council vacated by the appointment of Sir John Lawrence to the Viceroyalty of India. Sir George Clerk, it will be remembered, has been twice Governor of Bombay, and is one of the most distinguished civil servants of the Indian service.

THE ORDER OF THE BATH.—(War-office, Nov. 27.)—The Queen has been pleased to give orders for the appointment of Edward St. J. Neale, Esq., Acting Chargé d'Affaires in Japan during the absence of H.M.'s Minister, to be an Ordinary Member of the Civil Division of the Third Class, or Companions of the Most Hon. the Order of the Bath.

PEGU PRIZE MONEY.—Prize rolls for the 80th Regiment of Foot (only), on account of the operations in Pegu in 1851-52, have been received at the Royal Hospital, Chelsea, containing the names of those whose shares have been remitted to the commissioners of this hospital by the Government of India. The distribution commenced on the 2nd of December.

BILLS ON INDIA.—The biddings for 50,00,000 rupees (£500,000) in bills on India took place at the Bank of England on Wednesday last, and annexed are the official particulars:—The proportions allotted were—to Calcutta, Rs. 27,00,000, to Bombay, Rs. 21,00,000, and to Madras, Rs. 2,00,000. The minimum price declared was, as before, 1s. 11½d. per rupee on Calcutta and Madras, and 1s. 11¼d. on Bombay. The applications within the limits amounted to 172 lacs. Tenders on Calcutta at 1s. 11½d. will receive about 94 per cent.; on Bombay, at 2s. 0½d., about 38 per cent.; on Madras, at 1s. 11½d., about 10 per cent.; and all above these prices in full.

MURDER OF SHIPS' OFFICERS.—A Monte Video despatch, dated Oct. 28, received by telegraph from Lisbon, states that a ship, supposed to be the Flourery Land, from Liverpool to Singapore, is reported to have been purposely sunk by the crew, after murdering the master, mate, and other persons. Fourteen supposed culprits were prisoners at Monte Video.

APPOINTMENT.—(Foreign-office Nov. 28.)—The Queen has been pleased to approve of Mr. Alfred Bauer as Vice-Consul at Singapore for his Majesty the King of Hanover.

AN ORIENTAL JEW AN ENGLISH LANDOWNER.—Thirty years ago there arrived at Poonah (India) a homeless wanderer, driven forth by Persian fanaticism from his country. This quondam exile since become a merchant prince at Bombay, and a prominent benefactor of his adopted country—we allude to Mr. David Sassoon, the founder and promoter of several of the most useful public institutions in the presidency—has just purchased the noble estate at Walton-on-Thames known as Ashley park, formerly the residence of Sir Henry Fletcher, Bart., for his eldest son, now residing in England. The price paid for the mansion is £50,000. Great preparations are being made on the estate for the reception of the new proprietor.—Jewish Chronicle.

THE STEAM SHIP "HYDASPES."—PLYMOUTH, Dec. 1.—The East India and London Shipping Company's ship Hydaspes, Commander George H. Forster, R.N., from London for the Cape of Good Hope, Madras, and Calcutta, was off the Eddystone at one o'clock this morning; all well. Wind, S.S.E. She has a mail for the Cape, and a full cargo, including a marble monument to the late Captain Sir W. Peel, R.N., to be erected in Calcutta, and a quantity of rare birds and animals under the care of an officer from the Zoological Society. It is only three weeks since this ship arrived from the East Indies; eight days were occupied in refitting, and the remainder in discharging and loading. She takes eighty-eight cabin passengers. The Hydaspes got as far as thirty-four miles to the westward of the Eddystone by 6.30 A.M. this morning, when the wind began to blow very hard from S.S.W., the weather became thick, and the barometer stood 29.08. She accordingly put back to the Sound, and started again on Wednesday morning.

THE HOSTILITIES IN JAPAN.—The following extracts from a letter from Japan, addressed to a friend of the writer's in Edinburgh, and dated "Yokohama, September 23, 1863," are published in the Scotsman:—"This Japan business is a very awkward one. Russia has a very large navy out here, cruising about, and should war with Poland ensue, she would do England a great deal of harm in Japan. It may seem a very improbable thing for me to know, but about 250 miles north of Hakodadi, the most northerly port we have open in Japan, the Russians have an arsenal, dockyard, hospital, and rendezvous, situated round a bay with an entrance to it about half a mile wide, and commanded by batteries which would sink any ship. This is no yarn; it will come out, no doubt, in time, and more than likely when we have been hit hard first. The civil war in Japan is in a fair way of commencing. The Prince of Soso has taken one of the Tycoon's steamers, and fired his batteries where she was lying. If he appeals to us for protection we must join, as Soso and Satsuma are cousins. There is no doubt a hard campaign will ensue, and there is a rumour going about, founded upon a sound basis, that every available man-of-war on the China and East India stations are to muster at Yokohama on Christmas-day. The late action at Kagosima has been productive of nothing. It has proved the uselessness of Armstrong guns at 400 yards, or rather a short distance; and established the fact that eight gun steamers and gunboats are the best class of vessel for attacking sea-walled batteries. The Armstrongs were a failure, and many of them burst from a very peculiar cause. On board the flag-ship, or any ship, the cannon-balls are scrubbed and cleaned every Saturday. Well, the Armstrong shot are covered with a lead coating all lined, in order to fit into the grooves with which the interior of the gun is fitted. Jack is told to clean Armstrong shot and shell, and, seeing these lines, scrapes them down level. When they are rammed home the grooves don't fit the ball, and the consequence is, on account of windage, the ball drops out at the muzzle into the water, or else sends the vent piece flying in a hundred bits."

THE PEACE SOCIETY AND THE BOMBARDMENT OF KAGOSIMA.—A memorial has been presented to her Majesty the Queen by the Home Secretary, on behalf of the Peace Society, expressive of "the feelings of deep sorrow and shame with which they have read the accounts that have recently reached this country of the proceedings of the British squadron on the coast of Japan." The memorialists review the history of the dispute with Japan. The Japanese Government had made the formal apology and paid the £100,000 indemnity demanded for the barbarous murder of Mr. Richardson; but beyond these it was thought necessary to call upon the Prince of Satsuma to give up those persons of his suite who were believed to have been concerned in the murder. The Prince hesitated to comply with the demand, as he should have to deliver up his own father to condign punishment; and Lieutenant colonel Neale, her Majesty's chargé d'affaires, at once ordered Vice-Admiral Kuper to adopt measures of coercion. "In the execution of these orders, Vice-Admiral Kuper not only seized the Prince's steamers and shelled his palace, as the Foreign Secretary had indicated, but destroyed the whole town of Kagosima." The memorial then goes on to point out the barbarous cruelty of destroying, without warning, a town densely populated by 150,000 or 180,000 inhabitants, including, of course, aged persons, infants and children, the sick, the helpless, and the dying. This act of vengeance, continue the memorialists, cannot be justified by the laws of war or international law, not to speak of the principles of justice and humanity. Such acts "dishonour our Christian profession before the face of the world; and may we not justly apprehend that they may expose us to the righteous displeasure of Him by whose signal favour our country has been raised to such unexampled power and prosperity? The Committee of the Peace Society, therefore, most humbly, but most earnestly, entreat your Majesty to withhold your Royal sanction from this great outrage, perpetrated in your Majesty's name, on the unoffending people of Kagosima."

MILITARY EXAMINATIONS.—The examination of candidates for admission to the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, before the vice president (Major-General F. W. Hamilton, C.B.), and the other members of the Council of Military Education, takes place on Thursday, the 17th inst., at the Royal Hospital, Chelsea. The medical examination will also take place on that day. The examination will extend over six days. The next examination of candidates for admission to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, will commence on the 4th proximo, at the Royal Hospital, Chelsea, before the Vice-President and Council of Military Education. The examination will terminate on Wednesday, the 20th of next month.

TELEGRAPHIC EXTENSION.—The Cospatrick transport vessel, having adjusted compasses, left the Thames on Friday, the 27th ult., with the remaining portion of the electric telegraph to be laid down through Persia to India.

EXPORT OF SPECIE.—The amount of specie taken out by the Ripon, which left for the East on Friday, the 4th inst., represents £188,348, of which £183,890 is in gold and £4,458 in silver. Out of this sum £180,954 is to be forwarded in gold to Alexandria, £500 to Ceylon, and £2,435 to Madras; in silver Penang is to receive £1,150, Singapore £230, Foo-chow £1,300, and Shanghai £1,175.

THE INDIAN TELEGRAPH.—Colonel Stewart, Sir Charles Bright, Captain Stewart, Mr. J. C. Laws, and Mr. F. C. Webb have arrived at Malta in the steamship Faetta, from Marseilles, and passed on in the same vessel for Alexandria, for the purpose of superintending the laying of the electric cable in the Persian Gulf. The five ships forming the squadron for conveying the cable to its destination will rendezvous at Bombay, whence they will proceed to lay their respective sections. The submergence of the cable is to commence as soon as possible after their arrival. The staff of electricians, telegraphists, &c., have been sent in the various cable ships, all of which have left England, and the early ones must now be near Bombay. The submarine line will be laid in four sections between Bussorah, at the head of the Persian Gulf, and Kurrachee, having intermediate stations at Bushire, Khasab, and Gwadel. The land line from Bussorah to Bagdad, and thence through Asia Minor, is being proceeded with with all possible despatch. The persons connected with the undertaking who passed through Malta said that they expected to have the line in working order within six or seven months from the present time.

COFFEE CULTIVATION IN COORG.—The Mysore Recorder notices the progress and the drawbacks of coffee cultivation in Coorg. The coffee bug, which is generated by weeds, is doing damage. On one estate more than fifty cwt. of coffee fell off the trees this year owing to the ravages of the insect. With this exception, caused by the scarcity of labour, coffee planting in Coorg is prospering. Three estates at Muddanad are expected to yield little short of 100 tons this year, and other estates in proportion.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!—

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Mortan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.

MR. EPHRAIM MOSELY'S IMPROVEMENT in the CONSTRUCTION of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES, on an INDIA-RUBBER BASE, are secured by Letters Patent, dated December, 1852, whereby the continual outlay of new teeth is avoided, alterations from the absorption of the gums, or any other cause, being easily remedied, and the first outlay no greater than for ordinary kinds. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted as under:—It consists of one continuous piece of Prepared India-rubber. The Artificial Teeth present an uniformly even surface to the action of the tongue, preventing lodgment of food and all accretions, so much complained of in the present system. No gold or any other metal being required, all springs, wires, and fastenings are wholly unnecessary; sharp edges are avoided, a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity hitherto wholly unattainable, and a fit perfected with the most unerring accuracy, are secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums. The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the prepared india-rubber; and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may be retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being at the same time provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

GERMAN LIFE AND MANNERS, as Seen in SAXONY at the Present Day; with an Account of Village Life—Town Life—Fashionable Life—Domestic Life—Married Life—School and University Life, &c., of Germany at the Present Time. Illustrated with Songs and Pictures of the Student Customs at the University of Jena. By HENRY MAYHEW, Author of "London Labour and London Poor," "Great World of London," &c.

The above book attempts to draw a contrast between the comfort, refinement, and domestic happiness of the several classes in England, and the squalor and misery prevalent among the same grades of society in Saxony; and to point out what is the reason of the extreme difference. The author, having paid some attention to the state of the poor in his own country, was astonished to find even the middle classes of Saxony living harder lives and in the receipt of smaller incomes, as well as being worse housed and worse fed than the ordinary labourers of the country were in a more wretched condition than even the poorest "bog-trotters" in Ireland—living on potatoes, black bread, and an infusion of burnt carrot powder, as a substitute for coffee, from one year's end to the other. He shows the English reader not only how little the people get in Saxony, but also how much of that little is wasted in unnecessary enjoyments—giving the statistics of beer and spirit drinking, as well as the returns as to the ordinary amount of money squandered upon amusements by both the men and the women of the country, and then setting forth how very small a proportion of the small incomes of the gentry and working classes is left for the maintenance of the comforts of home, and the consequent wretched state of the homes of the people. The book, however, while making the exposition of the state and causes of the misery of the German folk as contrasted with the happiness of those of England, the "burden of its song," does not treat the matter in a mere dry, didactic manner, but seeks to enforce its object by presenting various graphic pictures of the several forms of society, and so allowing the English reader to institute the comparison for himself. Further, it deals not alone with the life of the present time, but treats of the ancient customs and religion of the people, citing many of their strange legends and tales of diablerie, as well as pointing out in an odd chapter upon the paganism of the old inhabitants of Thuringia, the mythical meaning of the interesting feast of "Summer's Victory," still held every year in the Thuringian capital. Again, while dealing with the University customs of the students at Jena, the author quotes the laws of some of the student clubs there, so as to show the effete chivalrous character of such institutions, and explains, when detailing the beer usages of the Jena "boys," how their drinking customs partake more of the character of ancient orgies than mere intemperate revelries; though even here we have the scenes of the duels and drinking-bouts (the latter given with all the songs and frolics of the "boys"), at which the writer was present, pictured by the pencil as well as the pen, rather than being set forth in a mere dull description of the University forms and ceremonies. The marriage customs of the country, as well as those at birth and death, are presented to the English public, so as to draw attention to the looseness of the matrimonial contract and family ties in a land where divorces may be had on the most trivial pleas for a matter of thirty shillings, and where, according to the wits of the nation, "an allowance is made if a quantity be taken." Lastly, the author portrays some of the English curiosities to be met with abroad in the form of his own countrymen, and concludes with treating us to a written photograph of an English clown, as well as to an odd picture of the circus performers in a foreign land. In fine, the book has been purposely kept of a thoroughly various and light character—now giving the experiences of the author while living at a small village on the borders of the Thuringian forest—then introducing us to a fashionable ball at the Klemda in Eisenach—next treating us to a chapter on the unsavoury comounds concocted in the German kitchen—after that describing how an Englishman is nearly "worried to death" by the gaucherie of the Saxon servant maids—here contrasting German babies with English ones, and there comparing the treatment of German wives and the conduct of German young ladies with those of his own country—and finally, after describing the rude kind of aquatic and equestrian sports indulged in by the Jena students, letting us see how odd Germany and the Germans appear in the eyes of an English clown abroad.

EXTRAORDINARY CURE of a COUGH.

The following letter has been received:—"Nightingale-hall, Edmonton. Dear Sir,—I have recently suffered much from a most violent cough, proceeding from a tickling in my chest, which no remedy, out of many I resorted to, could allay. My head was constantly aching and my whole frame entirely shaken. Having seen the good effects of your Balsam of Aniseed in several members of my family, I purchased a small bottle, and when going to bed at night took a teaspoonful in two tablespoonful of water, just warm. The effect was immediate; it arrested the tickling in my chest, I slept well, and arose perfectly restored in the morning, with the exception of debility, arising from fatigue by incessant coughing for some days previous. My cough entirely left me, and has never returned. Having since heard of a lady in the neighbourhood who for a long time had laboured under a most distressing cough, and who had resorted to every remedy within her knowledge, I sent the remainder of the bottle to her; and that long standing, obstinate, and (as she thought) incurable cough was perfectly cured.—I am, my dear sir, yours very truly, WM. BOARDS. To Mr. Thos. Powell."

POWELL'S BALSAM OF ANISEED,

For Coughs, Colds, Shortness of Breath, Asthma, Tickling in the Throat, and all Pulmonary affections, this medicine will be found invaluable.

Prepared and sold by THOMAS POWELL, at 16, Blackfriars-road, London. Sold by all Chemists and Medicine Vendors in the Kingdom; also in Australia, New Zealand, Cape of Good Hope, North and South America, &c., in bottles at 1s. 1d., 2s. 3d., and 11s. each.

CAUTION.—Observe the words "THOMAS POWELL, Blackfriars-road, London," on the Government Stamp, without which it cannot be genuine.

Ask for Powell's Balsam of Aniseed.

IF you GREASE or STAIN with PAINT any Silks, Cloths, Curtains, or other article of Household Furniture, or Wearing Apparel, the best and most effectual agent for removing it is the BENZINE COLLAS, which will not alter the colour or injure the texture.

Sold by SANGER and SON, 150, Oxford-street, W., and all respectable Chemists. Price 1s. 6d. per Bottle.

IMPORTANT TO PEOPLE RETURNED

from INDIA.—The only really effective relief for torpidity of the liver, bile, and all those weak feelings arising from the change from a hot climate, is SANGER'S TASTELESS ANTHILLIOUS POWDERS, a trial of which will satisfy the most sceptical. They are invaluable for chronic bile, and do not weaken the system by violent purging, or saturate it with mercury, which most remedies for the bile do.

Sold by J. SANGER & SON, 150, Oxford-street, W., in packets, at 1s. 1d. and 2s. 9d., or by post for fifteen or thirty-six stamps.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—PROSTRATION OF

STRENGTH.—When the system is weak and the nerves unstrung, disease is certain to present itself, unless some purifying and strengthening means be resorted to to avert the threatening mischief. In such cases no treatment can equal that by these excellent Pills; no other plan can be pursued so well devised for ejecting all impurities from the blood without straining or weakening the constitution. Holloway's Pills so fortify the stomach and regulate the liver, that they raise the capability of digestion, and thus create new power. This is the reason why Holloway's Pills have gained their present popularity, and why they have been lauded throughout the globe as a "fresh source of life and strength."

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE present mail from Calcutta brings intelligence from that city to November 9, but we have received news by telegram from Bombay to the 29th of that month, so that we have no later news from the scene of action in the North-west.

The Calcutta papers speak of Lord Elgin having been very seriously ill, but that the last accounts were much more favourable. All flattering hopes, however, were soon extinguished, and Lord Elgin closed his career at Dhurumsala on the 20th November. His Lordship's tour, before he was taken ill, was highly interesting, and if he had not suffered from an affection of the heart—pericarditis—a disease which is increased by high mountain air, his general health would probably have received great benefit from his trip. His Excellency had left Simla on the 26th of September, and visited the tea plantation in the Kangra Valley on the 30th of October. He had travelled about 300 miles, through some of the finest scenery in the world.

We give at the end of our summary the telegraphic intelligence of the very serious skirmish that took place on the 20th of November with the Hill tribes on the North-West frontier. We can no longer regard the tribes in that neighbourhood as altogether contemptible enemies. Though they were defeated on this occasion, we bought our victory at a heavy cost. Two lieutenants killed (Saunderson and Peel), and five officers wounded, including the commander of the force, Brigadier Chamberlain, who is hors de combat, and one hundred and twenty-eight men on the list of killed and wounded, gives this wild warfare a very serious aspect, and will perhaps help for the moment to confirm the silly native prognostication mentioned by the Rev. Dr. Caldwell, who says that the people are expecting the advent of a native King and the expulsion of the English in 1865. A written prophecy to this effect is now, it is said, circulating from village to village, and any certified copy is supposed to have the sanction of some divine authority. It is said that General Garcock has temporarily succeeded General Sir Neville Chamberlain in his command. There has been such hard work and severe fighting, that though a larger force numerically is not called for, a relief is deemed necessary of some portion of the troops who have suffered most from fatigue and wounds.

The Commander-in-Chief had been going over much the same ground as the late Governor-general, with a rapidity characteristic of his nature.

Sir Robert Napier, President of the Council, had returned from his visit to the Andaman Islands.

Colonel Phayre, C.B., the Chief Commissioner of British Burmah, and all his fellow-passengers, had had a narrow escape from a watery grave, as their vessel, the Baltic steamer, was wrecked on the Alguada reef, at the entrance of the Rangoon river.

The Bishop of Calcutta had left Calcutta on his first visitation as Metropolitan of the dioceses of Madras, Bombay, and Colombo. He was honoured on his departure with a long resounding military salute, though a preacher of peace and Christian humility. His lordship is to be absent three months.

Dr. Duff had somewhat recovered his health, but was to leave India about Christmas.

Sir Charles Trevelyan, who had succeeded, just before his recall from his Madras governorship, in establishing a People's Park at that presidency, is employed with characteristic energy and earnestness in obtaining a People's Park for Calcutta. The noble maiden or large open plain to the south of Calcutta amply provides fresh air for its inhabitants on that side of the city, but the northern neighbourhood is deplorably deficient in similar sanitary accommodation. It is proposed to have the park in a spot bounded on three sides by the Circular Road, the Eastern Bengal Railway, and the Circular Canal. It is to include a zoological garden, a cricket ground, and gymnasium.

A programme of Revised Rules for the Sale of Unassessed Waste Lands in the Lower Provinces of Bengal, and for the redemption of the revenue of such lands already granted for a term of years, is published. The main purpose of this re-publication is the simplification of the existing rules by the consolidation into one code of the rules heretofore issued, partly by the Government of Bengal, and partly by the Board of Revenue, under authority from the Government of Bengal. In Rule 3 a provision has been introduced to enable the Board of Revenue to relax, upon sufficient cause shown, the rule which limits the length of road or river frontage in each grant to one-half the depth of the lot. The relaxation is intended to meet the case of allotments on the borders of very winding roads or rivers to which the old rules could not be literally applied.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

DEATH OF LORD ELGIN.—REVOLT OF THE HILL TRIBES.

(Via Suez.)

BOMBAY, Nov. 29.

Lord Elgin died on the 20th inst., at Durbarsalla.

Sir William Denison has gone to Calcutta.

More hard fighting has taken place on the frontier. All the Hill tribes have risen against the British rule.

General Chamberlain is still unable to advance. The British loss in officers has been very heavy.

The following is the latest intelligence received in Bombay:—

Sir Hugh Rose telegraphs from Lahore on the 26th instant that on the 20th the tribes again attacked our position with much determination, and took a picket, which was, however, regained, and the enemy gallantly driven back. Two English officers were killed, and five wounded, including General Chamberlain and Colonel Hope. One hundred and twenty-eight British and native troops were killed and wounded. Since this repulse the enemy have not again attacked.

General Chamberlain reports that he does not require reinforcements, only relief. He is confident of final success. The troops are in a commanding position, with thirteen guns. The health of the men is good, and provisions and ammunition are plentiful.

THE CAWNPORE "DIFFICULTY."

The following is a statement of what occurred on the night of the 28th April, 1863, in connection with the visit of Mr. Warrand and Lieut. Franks to the mess-room of her Majesty's 46th Regiment:—

I had gone to the mess on the invitation of an honorary member, and at about 11.50 p.m. was engaged in a game of billiards with Dr. Fagan, of her Majesty's 46th Regiment. At that time Dr. Fagan, Dr. Power (attached to the regiment), and myself were the only persons present besides the marker. Just then Messrs. Warrand and Franks drove into the compound, and pulled up at a short distance from the billiard room door. I heard them inquiring of a servant whether I was there. On receiving a reply in the affirmative they both got down and came towards the door. Dr. Fagan, who was standing at the head of the table close to the door, turned round, and in the most cordial manner asked them to come in and sit down, and immediately afterwards offered them refreshment, which they accepted.

Dr. Power was at this time sitting at the further end of the room, and joined in the conversation. We all remained there for about two and a-half hours, during which both Doctors Fagan and Power played billiards with Messrs. Warrand and Franks, and offered them more refreshment. We then separated in the most amicable manner, Messrs. Warrand and Franks being the first to leave the room. I was intimately acquainted with all parties, and the impression produced on my mind certainly was that Messrs. Warrand and Franks were not only invited in, but cordially welcomed.

I know that Dr. Fagan had been previously acquainted with both Messrs. Warrand and Franks, and that Dr. Power had met Mr. Warrand several times, and on the night in question did not appear to consider Lieutenant Franks an intruder.

These being my impressions, I was much surprised on seeing the letters which were received by Messrs. Warrand and Franks from the mess president nine days after; and, believing that there must have been some mistake, I accompanied Mr. Warrand on the following morning to learn what could have led to it. We saw Drs. Fagan and Power, showed them the letter, and asked what they thought of it. Doctor Fagan replied, "Well, you see, they don't like fellows coming in so late." Doctor Power merely said, "I don't remember anything about it," or words to that effect. This is all that I know of my knowledge.

PEOPLE'S PARK FOR CALCUTTA WALLAHS.

Few holiday-makers, we suspect, will have reason to look back upon the late vacation with as much self-satisfaction as the financial member of the Viceroy's Council. During that brief repose from the carking cares of official life, Sir Charles bethought him of the sad lot of the vast multitude of natives located in the northern and eastern divisions of the town, far removed from the Maidan, or any other open space suitable for recreation. He has accordingly addressed a letter to the chairman of the municipality, suggesting the formation of a People's Park near the Scaldah Station, between the Canal and the Circular-road. It is at present a waste, unproductive site, hideous to the eye, and a nuisance to the neighbourhood, but quite capable, with a very trifling outlay, of being converted into a fine open park, tastefully laid out and planted with ornamental trees and flowering shrubs. No man is better entitled to write on such a subject than Sir Charles Trevelyan, for it is to him that Madras is indebted for a People's Park, on a spot that was previously an eye sore and a disgrace to the community. The advantage to every large city of possessing such

"lungs" is too obvious to be dilated upon. The benefit conferred upon the hard working dwellers in the east of London by the formation of the Victoria Park can only be fully realised by those who remember what that neighbourhood was only twenty years ago, and what it is now. The same may be said of the Battersea Park, and in a less degree even of the Regent's Park. One seemingly inevitable result of all such ornamental clearings is the improvement of all house property within a considerable distance, and a corresponding improvement in the appearance of the working men and their families. Sir Charles's further suggestion that a Zoological Garden should be established, is deserving of the hearty co-operation of both natives and Europeans. Instead, however, of a gymnasium and a cricket ground, we should greatly prefer to see a Polytechnic Institution. It is only by such means as these that persons born and educated in this country can learn to form original ideas. Book knowledge is, of course, very desirable, so far as it goes, but it will never suffice to enable a man to travel out of beaten paths, or to escape from the ancestral groove. The education of the eye is far more fruitful than any sort of education by rote. Shakespeare and the musical glasses will not do now-a-days. Men must see for themselves and then they will think for themselves, and no longer be content to repeat like parrots what somebody has written or said some hundreds of years before them. Is there no "Mr. Ready-money" in Calcutta? No munificent merchant-prince to make a start? Or must we send to Bombay and beg for donations and subscriptions? —Bengal Hurkaru, Nov. 7.

LAWRENCE ASYLUM.

The establishment of a divorce court having naturally produced an unusual number of marriages, and consequently of spasmodic emotions of mutual love and goodwill, no more felicitous season could be chosen for an appeal to the charitable feelings of the Christian community of Bengal. The Lawrence Asylum at Sunawur, excellent in every other respect, is defective in this, that it closes its doors upon the orphan children of Romanist parents. And yet fully one-third of the entire British army in India is composed of Roman Catholics, the bravest of the brave, than whom none are more loyal or more ready to shed their blood in defence of our common rights and interests. But their orphan children are uncared for by the State, and unheeded by the Protestants for whom their fathers fought and died. Is this—can this be right? Is it fair to ask men to expose themselves to imminent, deadly danger, without the hope of the slightest provision being made for their bereaved offspring? It is not a question of faith, but of love. The orphan children of Roman Catholics have bodies to be nourished, minds to be trained, souls to be saved, quite as much as those of Protestants. About that there can be no difference of opinion. It only remains, then, to ask—shall these little ones be cast adrift upon the world, without a belief in God, without love for their fellow-men, without hope in heaven, and with only misery on earth, when the slightest effort, involving no act of self-denial, will suffice to give them that resting-place in this world which shall prepare them for another and a higher life? It is simply a matter of pounds, shillings, and pence. The Government allows five hundred rupees per mensem towards the expenses of a military Catholic orphanage to be established at Simla; but the orphanage itself does not exist. A building must first be erected, and towards that the Government, with ill-judged economy, will not subscribe one farthing. Perhaps it is as well that it is so. An institution of this kind should be truly catholic, truly universal. It is for the public at large to evince their gratitude to the gallant hearts who give them peace and security by the free expenditure of their lives, by providing for their helpless orphans. Let no one hang back because his donation may be small compared with the lavish munificence of the wealthy. Let him give what he can, and it will be a comfort and happiness to him hereafter, if peradventure he read of hard stricken fights in which his Romanist fellow-countrymen acquitted themselves with characteristic valour and devotedness. Donations and subscriptions, large or small, will be gratefully received by the Very Rev. Father Lewis, Bishop's House, Agra, or by the Catholic chaplain of the nearest station; and we refuse to believe that another cold season will pass over without sufficient funds being collected to make an auspicious and hopeful beginning.—Bengal Hurkaru.

JUSTICES' JUSTICE IN CALCUTTA.

The daily papers of yesterday contained the report of a police case in which it is difficult to say whether the magistrate or the superintendent of police displayed the greatest incapacity. The son of the ex-King of Oudh had, it seems, charged his mistress with having robbed him of some jewellery, but subsequently withdrew the charge, and the accused was released. The jewels were restored to the complainant, who then went his way in peace, and took back his "sociable evil" as if nothing had happened to disturb the harmony of their unlawful loves. Obviously enough, the superintendent was not authorised to act in this irresponsible manner, nor was this the extreme measure of his offending. The charge was not even signed by the complainant, and consequently the officer had no right to take the accused into custody. Still less was he entitled to give up the property alleged to have been stolen, and thus lend himself to the compounding of a felony. For these grossly irregular proceedings a severe reprimand was very properly administered by the magistrate; but, unfortunately when once started, Mr. Roberts does not always know where to stop. On this occasion, not satisfied with reproofing the erring police officer, he must take upon himself to enunciate a theory, accounting both for the institution of the charge and its sudden withdrawal. He had discovered by intuition—founded on long experience of the native character—that the young woman had grown weary of her lover, and longed to change her venue. The gentleman, however, was, strange to say, the less fickle of the two, and, therefore, opposed the idea of her leaving him. And when fair words had failed to produce the desired effect, love prompted him to take the unmanly and desperate measure of charging his inconstant mistress with stealing the jewels with which he himself had decked her person. Intimidated by the prospect of going to gaol, the poor girl resigned her short-lived dream of liberty, and returned to her former bondage. All this might be true, but it might also be purely fanciful, and the mere creature of Mr. Roberts's too lively imagination. In any case, it is no part of a magistrate's functions to build up theories and interweave probabilities into the form of a romance. He has only to deal with the evidence adduced before him, confining himself to facts and eschewing vain fancies. Besides, can Mr. Roberts have so completely forgotten his Latin Grammar as to need to be reminded that the quarrels of lovers is the renewal of love? Had he only bethought him of that wise and pithy saying, he might have imagined quite another fiction, and dwelt upon the intensity of the prince's love, on the waywardness and delightful caprices of women in general, and of this peccant fair one in particular, and finally on the rapturous joys of reconciliation. He did nothing of this, but he did what was very much worse—he asked the superintendent in what sort of predicament would he have found himself had any one written an anonymous letter to the Commissioner of Police, accusing him of having received a bribe to release the young woman. In the first place, this is very like an underhand way of insinuating that he himself more than half suspected Mr. MacMahon of having been induced in some such manner to act as he did. Mr. Roberts's question further implies that he believes Mr. Wauchope capable of acting upon anonymous communications, and of listening to the slanders of a nameless accuser. Mr. Wauchope, we fancy, will not feel particularly grateful to Mr. Roberts for imputing to him such ungentlemanly conduct, and may perchance be inclined to think that that worthy magistrate would not himself be over scrupulous about doing what he believes others would do. It is with unfeigned regret that we pass these strictures upon the foolish exhibition made by Mr. Roberts on Saturday last. There is not a more assiduous, painstaking, or conscientious magistrate in the country than this very gentleman. According to the light that is in him he labours honestly to do his duty by all men, but unhappily he knows not when to be silent. He carries far too much top gear to keep an even keel, and loves to crack on with every sail set, regardless of wind and weather. Truly, the tongue is an unruly member.—Bengal Hurkaru.

UMRITSUR RAILWAY.

On the 10th of May, 1862, the railway was opened which connected Umrtsur, the commercial, with Lahore, the political capital of the Punjab. Since then the service between the two places has been performed by two ordinary trains, so carefully that not a single accident on the line involving injury to passengers, rolling stock, or property conveyed, has occurred. It is very desirable that the railway officials connected with the line between Sealdah and Kooshtea should borrow a copy of the "instructions" upon which those in the Punjab act, with a view to the discharge of their functions with less detriment to individuals, and through them to the public, than we have been lately accustomed to see. The screws that are at present unmistakably loose, will, in that case, be removed, and more efficient and serviceable ones substituted. As matters stand, folks rarely enter a carriage altogether free from unpleasant forebodings of a "collision" or trip "off the line" not contemplated when tickets were purchased. The Umrtsur trains ran 45,000 miles during the year, and deposited their living freight sound in wind and limb. We hope the time is not distant when our friends at Sealdah may be able to say as much for the manner in which they run their carriages. It is a singular fact that, although the Scinde Railway to Kotree is one hundred and five miles in extent, whilst that to Umrtsur is only thirty-two miles, the passenger traffic on the longer is considerably less than it is on the shorter one. There were only 105,063 individuals carried throughout the year between Kurrahee and Kotree, whilst 368,315 were conveyed on the Lahore and Umrtsur line within the same period. The reason for this remarkable difference is not very apparent, the proportion being as three to one in favour of the latter! Ere the line had been open a little more than eleven weeks the profits of receipts over working expenses amounted to Rs. 12,165; but during the half-year ending 31st December, 1862, the profit was Rs. 17,095 only, showing a considerable falling off. This, it is said, was caused by an increase of full fifty per cent. on the working expenses, in consequence of the wood which had been originally used proving unfit and defective. We are sorry to see, however, that progress on the Lahore and Mooltan line is still exceedingly unsatisfactory. Nearly four years have elapsed since the work was commenced, and we find, from the report before us, that only 105 miles, out of the 250 which stretch between those two important stations, have been completed—or something very like twenty-six miles per annum! The difficulty which we know exists in procuring sleepers can scarcely account for this extraordinary and discreditable delay in finishing a line which traverses a country as level as a billiard table, and singularly free from engineering difficulties. This "difficulty" appears to have been made the subject of a report to Government, who therefore sanctioned the laying, first of forty miles, and again of eighty-five miles of the main line with Greaves iron pot sleepers (whatever they may be), and so we may look for a happier state of things at last. But it strikes us that if matters were looked at more closely, official indolence would be found to have not a little to do with this delay. For instance, we are told in the 211th paragraph of this report that a large number of these pots had arrived at Kurrahee, and that they will probably be delivered on the line at the end of the year—that is, six entire months are required by the authorities of the railway to convey a cargo of iron pots by steam to Mooltan, and convey them thence along the line! If this is to be met with on so simple a tract, what delays and "difficulties" may we not look to encounter on the Delhi one? This line is not, as our readers doubtless know, to be taken direct from Umballa or Kurnaul to Delhi, but through the richer, more populous, and more important districts of Saharunpore and Meerut, and to join the East India Railway at Gazeoodeennugger. The report before us concludes with a tabular statement, showing the amount of expenditure on the railways in the Punjab up to 30th April last, which is represented as Rs. 62,61,066.—Bengal Hurkaru.

LETTER FROM SIR CHARLES TREVELYAN ON PEOPLE'S GARDENS.

The following letter from Sir Charles Trevelyan was read at a meeting of the Calcutta justices:—

"MY DEAR MR. SCHALCH,—Dining at the Bishop's Palace yesterday evening, Mrs. Cotton remarked to me that it is a great hindrance to the recovery of the patients in the Medical College Hospital that they have not the same advantage as the patients of the General Hospital of an open place like the Maidan, where they can have fresh air and pleasant change of scene. This remark, and the opportunity of this holiday time, induces me to lay before you a subject which I have long had at heart.

"The advantage of open park-like spaces for public health and recreation adjoining great towns is now fully admitted. Aristocratic Hyde Park has been supplemented by the popular Regent's, Victoria, and Battersea Parks, and Birmingham, Manchester, and almost every thickly-inhabited place in England has now one or more 'People's Parks,' which have been purchased and embellished partly by municipal funds, partly from public subscriptions, but, more than all, by the munificence of individuals.

"The institution has also been successfully introduced at Madras. The promenade on the beach was too distant to be available to the majority of the population, and a desolate salt swamp between Black Town and Vepery has been converted into an ornate pleasure ground and zoological garden, where a band plays every evening, and family parties of every creed and race may be seen by hundreds enjoying the air and scene within an easy walk of their homes.

"The southern part of Calcutta is amply provided for by the noble Maidan, but in the northern part this great resource is entirely wanting. One of the most painful pictures which became impressed on my mind in years long gone by was, the European or East Indian taking his dusty unrefreshing walk in the Circular-road, and the family groups confined to their balconies for want of some healthy cheerful place of out-of-door resort. The case is now far worse, for the Christian population in that part of the town has greatly increased. I allude especially to them, because their habits make the absence of any place where they can even take a pleasant walk a serious deprivation; but the example of Madras shows that if the English park is properly introduced, it will be appreciated by the natives, like our railways and many other institutions.

"Great improvements are about to be made in the northern part of the town, but they will all be incomplete without this addition, and will only make the want of it more seriously felt.

"I write to you as representing the municipality, and having pressed upon you this great desideratum, I might safely leave the details of the subject to your superior means of information; but having given the matter much consideration, I may mention that the space bounded on three sides by the Circular Road, the Eastern Bengal Railway, and the Circular Canal, appears to me to be the best suited to the object, as the nearest available space to the most populous parts of the northern division of the city. One side of it is broken into irregular mounds of railway 'spoil'; but although this renders it less valuable for other purposes, it only makes it more available to be laid out in the picturesque English mode in imitation of nature. A Zoological Garden ought certainly to be included in the plan. It is strange that this cheap and delightful medium of instruction should as yet be entirely wanting in such a city as Calcutta. There ought, of course, to be a cricket-ground and gymnasium.—Believe me, very truly yours,

"C. E. TREVELYAN.

"Calcutta, Oct. 23, 1863."

The Chairman was happy to say that, within a very short period, good drainage, good ventilation, good roads, and good water, would be enjoyed by the Calcutta public.

One of the Justices spoke highly and approvingly of Sir Charles Trevelyan's "wise and judicious plan," and briefly referred to the want of a good road for pedestrians, and to the improvement of the Circular-road.

Baboo Prosoono Coomar Tagore referred the chairman to one of Lord Dalhousie's minutes, stating that it was in contemplation to convert a portion of the northern part of the Strand into a park. His intention apparently was to revive the subject, "without intending to depreciate Sir Charles Trevelyan's plan." The northern part of the Strand alluded to by him was from the Mint to Nimtollah.

THE GANGES CANAL.

The department of public works has for long been afflicted with a variety of disorders, productive of serious loss to the Imperial treasury, and of no little annoyance to the community at large. But of these several diseases perhaps the two most prejudicial to its health and reputation are extravagance and dilatoriness. The former will not allow it to place one stone upon another except at a cost which nobody else ever dreams of paying, and the latter retards progress to an extent of which he alone can form anything like an adequate conception who has been in a position to inspect personally the working of the machinery. Weary months are suffered to elapse ere a "report" is indited; there is then some recondite cause by which its despatch is hindered; and when, finally, this has been removed, then secretaries of Government, acting apparently under some occult "spherical predominance," need nearly a lustrum to comprehend and reply to it. We have a case before us. Upon our table lies the Report on the Revenue Returns of the Canals under the Superintendent-general of Irrigation, North-Western Provinces, for 1860-61. This document is dated 11th August, 1862; its receipt is acknowledged by Colonel Beadle, Secretary to the Government of India, P. W. Department, on the 25th of March, 1863, and it is finally printed in October of the same year, so that three months were occupied in preparing it, eight months in furnishing it with a reply consisting of precisely four short paragraphs, and seven months in printing it! But if we are disposed to quarrel with the department for a delay so preposterous and unreasonable as this, we are well pleased with the information which this pamphlet supplies. We desire to call particular attention to that portion of it which is concerned with the cost and results of the Ganges Canal. The former, up to the close of the year under review, was Rs. 1,87,48,279, or £1,874,828 sterling, and the area of land brought under irrigation was 536 square miles. The area of actual cultivation by means of the canal is not small, and gave peaceful occupation to many thousands of cultivators and farm servants belonging to no less than 3,483 villages. We are not, therefore, surprised to learn of the thankful feeling which the people entertain towards Government for having enabled them, during a period of severe famine, not only to hold their own, but to prosper to such an extent in many cases as to be able to liquidate debts with which they had been encumbered for years, and which inspired the usurious bankers with the hope of being able to sell them out of house and home in the hour of their distress. Who does not remember the controversy which raged in the columns of our contemporaries in those days when famine was slaying her thousands, whether the Ganges Canal was likely to prove of any, the slightest, assistance in helping the wretched cultivators to tide over the crisis? In the absence of everything like reliable ground for one's calculations, the vaticinations of our friends were naturally of a somewhat hazy character. The report before us proves now, however, that the canal did all and more than was ever hoped for from it. In the Northern, Upper Central, and Lower Central Divisions it gave occupation to no less than 30,65,815 labourers. The Cawnpore, Etawah, and Boodlunshuhur branches furnished food to 27,89,809 peasants, and the Dhoon and Rohilcund Canals, with that of the Eastern Jumma, supplied the means of life to 7,43,084 ryots. So that, in all, no less than 65,98,708 human beings were not only saved from perishing by a slow and cruel process, but were enabled to maintain themselves in something more than their usual position. Of course we are not to be supposed to assert that the canal and its branches have been useful only in this indirect way, but simply to call attention to the terrible loss which the population would in all likelihood have suffered if this means of relief had not been at hand to dissipate so terrible a threatening. They who passed through the stricken land at the time of which the report before us treats are not likely soon to forget the sandy waste, the arid soil, the desolate fields, the deserted villages, the abandoned wells, the brazen sky, and the iron earth which greeted them so far as the eye could reach. Only in those villages which fringed the line of the Ganges Canal and its branches was the heart of the spectators gladdened with the sight of green joyous crops, which appeared to wave defiance to the terrible influences under which lands more remote had succumbed. In some places the state of desolation was so complete that it is difficult to conceive anything more so. Not a blade of grass was to be seen; not a drop of water in the village tanks; and where a well did contain any, it was of the filthiest and muddiest description. This was the "water" which the unhappy ryots gladly drank, and of which their wretched cattle were only too happy to partake. With a soil thus bound and parched to the last degree, the character of the relief which the Ganges canal afforded to thousands perishing for want of it is not to be easily calculated. That this relief should be administered as promptly and extensively as possible was in accordance with the wishes of the Government, and these were met with great alacrity and zeal on the part of the canal officers.

But whilst the Government was thus consulting the interests of its afflicted subjects, its own were necessarily in some degree preserved. If, on the one hand, 5,37,655 men, 5,37,655 women, and 5,37,655 children daily for a whole year were kept from starvation—if fodder was produced sufficient for the preservation of the cattle of all the districts through which the canal runs—and if a large circulation of corn was thereby caused—the Government was likewise saved from remissions of revenue to the extent of nearly twenty lakhs of rupees.

But it is necessary to see whether the Ganges Canal is in itself a profitable speculation of Government. On this point, Colonel Turnbull's report is very satisfactory. The total outlay on this gigantic work, together with that expended on its maintenance and repairs, may be represented at Rs. 3,23,86,636. The direct revenue paid into the Government treasury was Rs. 1,42,45,258, or not far from one-half of the outlay; and the indirect revenue in the shape of the value of crops to the country for one single year amounts to no less than Rs. 6,03,06,287, or nearly double the whole outlay—including maintenance and repairs for several years. If, then, we place the interest on capital and cost of maintenance and repair on the debtor side, and the revenue realised on the creditor side, the department will be shown to be returning 5 per cent., and to possess a reserve fund, besides, of Rs. 75,66,276-11-5. It must be acknowledge that this result disposes pretty effectually of the question whether canals are a failure or a success in this country. Addle-pated scribblers, dilettanti engineers, and ill-advised provincial journalists, have endeavoured to enlighten the Government of India on this point, and have proved, doubtless to their own satisfaction, that the Ganges Canal is a "folly," and that Sir Proby Cautley is something very like a "humbug." All such nonsense must be now hushed. Colonel Turnbull has shown that the canal has produced grain sufficient to feed a million and a half of people, and fodder for cattle for an entire year, besides a large crop of sugar and cotton, which is equivalent to a further additional supply of food. It has moreover caused the circulation of coin to the amount of £1,512,264, and has saved Government from making remissions of land revenue to the extent of £200,000, and (looking at it no longer with a huxter's eye) it has drawn closer the bonds of union between the Government and the governed, thus securing a point of the very last and greatest moment.—Bengal Hurkaru, Oct. 28.

DISTURBANCES IN THE NORTH-WEST—AN OFFICER'S JOURNAL.

October 10.—The General did not join till yesterday; he is a fine, soldierly-looking fellow, full of fight, with a determined face, as though he might have a temper; he has an eye like a hawk. What he is going to do with us no one but himself knows. We are to do some dodging thing to-night; our first bugle goes at 12, the second, at 1 A.M., but what is then to become of us is very doubtful. The enemy are within about eight miles of us, fortifying a pass into the hills, so the General has sent two regiments and eight guns to watch them there, which will make them concentrate their forces, and we shall probably go through the mouth of the pass in the night, leave them all watching over the two regiments, and enter the hills at some point where there is nobody to stop us. This is, however, all conjecture, for General Chamberlain's right hand does not know what his left is about—and such being the case, he would not be likely to tell us.

Mahabun is the mountain we have to take to begin with, and if we get through the pass in rear of the enemy, before they are aware of our intention, half the business will be over without firing a shot. We are so strong now that they will probably sue for terms. The force consists of ten native infantry regiments—Punjabees, Sikhs, Afreedees, every sort of border ruffian going, cavalry and infantry of the Guides, Probyn's Horse, three European regiments, no end of artillery, with mortars, 9-pounder guns and 24-pound howitzers, native allies of all sorts and kinds. You never saw nor dreamed of such a wild crew in all your days. Our camp is above two miles long; first you see a forest of spears sticking upright in the ground, the little horses picketed near them neighing and stamping, and the wild, savage, handsome horsemen lying about on charpoys smoking, cleaning their arms, or baking chupatties on huge round iron plates three feet across. Then you come on Punjabees in dirt-coloured coats and ditto knickerbockers, then on Sikhs in red, or more Punjabees in yellow, then Englishmen in red coats and blue hats and trousers, then on gunners in their shirt-sleeves loading ammunition into mule boxes, or drilling elephants to carry 9-pounder guns on their backs, to which the said elephants most strenuously object. Then a field forge where they are repairing arms or making horseshoes, then rows of bullocks, and hundreds of mules tied head and heel, then a hospital with its tents and row of doolies, then more Europeans with their bazaars in rear (rows of dirty little tents surmounted by a portentous blue and white, or red and blue flag), then guns, Sikhs, Punjabees, more spears, and beyond the general's tent, and the bare open plain, dotted as far as the eye can reach, with flocks and herds for the feeding of the multitude, and camels to carry their tents and baggage, masticating the prickly shrubs of the desert, which no other beast will touch.

Over all this great camp hangs, from "morn till dewy eve," a dense cloud of choking dust, through which you hear now a bugle, now the native pipe of the regiments from Bunnoo, now the Scotch bag-pipes, great war-pipes sounding five miles off, and again the roll of the infantry drums, or a blast from a cavalry trumpet, while backwards and forwards all day long go every description of officer known to Indian civilisation. There rides a Pathan native officer on a prancing, snorting, fidgetting, half Arab horse, wearing two swords—an English one for show, a native one for fighting—a pistol or revolver in his belt, a shield on his back, and an enormous roll of blue striped cloth round his head, with one end hanging over his shoulder; and here comes an orderly, with a spear sixteen feet long, at a hard racing gallop, the safety of creation apparently depending on the amount of dust he makes; here a commandant of Irregulars, then a subaltern of Europeans, whilst nondescript gunners in quaint attire gallop past nondescript guides and queer devils of every colour under heaven; and all this parade and fuss to exterminate a few wretched mountaineers!

I must turn in now for an hour's sleep before we march, as I have to serve out ammunition to my party, pack four mules, load my revolver, and move to the head of the column before anyone stirs: it is now striking eleven, and I shall have to be up before 12.15. I had no sleep last night, nor have I been off my legs to-day.

Oct. 20.—We started at one in the morning, and marched over most awful ground, through a pass five miles long, where none of us had ever been before. It took us till five P.M. next day—all this time we had no food. I had no work, only heard one shot fired. But the advanced column was engaged, lost no one, but killed and wounded about twelve hill men, and drove them clear of the pass.

Most of our fellows went to sleep at ten o'clock at night without any food. I was very cold and hungry, having walked twenty-five miles over rocks and hills with my party, so I got a pound of raw beef and made a fire, over which I cooked it on my sword, grubbed, and then, rolling myself up in the cover of a tent, went to sleep on the ground. There was a little firing in the night, but no one was touched, and we slept till morning. Still no grub till twelve, when some mess things arrived, and we got a plate of stew and a loaf each, and I've been torpid under a tree ever since. My things have not come up, and we march again directly. I've not heard from you. They say there is some panic in the daks. We've no tents now, and probably they won't come for some time, but I'll take a rug next march.

Oct. 24, Umbeylah Pass.—I have been unable to send any letters, for the pass has been blocked up with luggage behind us. You never saw such a place; it is about eight miles long, and the road by such as know both said to be worse than the Khyber. In fact, in parts there was barely room for one man to get through. We should have had some trouble had not the General taken them by surprise by starting in the middle of the night, and marching twenty-five miles straight on end. We passed the evenings in complete barricades at a place where, had they been in force, they might have given us much trouble. As it was, there were not half-a-dozen shots fired the whole way, until the leading column came through it this (east) end, when they had a slight skirmish, and killed some seven or eight of them—the rest bolting.

I hurried up my men, but was not in time to see it. The rocks on both sides of us are steep here, and we've had several alarms, but except the night before last nothing to signify. However, (the 22nd) we sent out a reconnaissance which fell in in the evening with some little force, about five miles lower down, lost seven or eight men, and retired. It was just dark, and the niggers followed. I came in with the rear guard about two miles, and the brutes, to do them justice, behaved very pluckily, charging up to within twenty yards and firing matchlocks at us. One of them took a deliberate pot at me, but missed, as usual. I gave him two shots in return, and hit him, but it was too dark under the tree where he went to know what became of him. When we got back to camp we found the whole force up defending the camp, and we had to stay out all night fighting. The firing at times was very heavy; now a couple of companies of Europeans firing altogether, now a whole regiment of Punjab infantry, a 24-pounder howitzer, or a whole lot of mountain train-guns, and the matchlocks popping away in the bush in front. I was nearly coming to grief at one time, owing to the way in which we were all mixed up. I was standing about the centre of the position, near General Chamberlain, watching proceedings, when there was a call for an officer to get some men together and cover the guns. There was no one else about, so I went, got the men, and posted them on the left of the guns, on a small ridge, just under another ridge, where some more of our men were placed, and then stood talking to the Quartermaster-General and another officer. Presently the enemy charged out on our front, when bang went the rifles of the company above us, right among us all. We were covered with dust, and shouted to them to cease firing. I, turning round, saw old ——— on his face a yard off. I thought he had gone down to avoid the fire, and the position being a tempting one, gave him a smack, saying it was all serene. He, however, answered by a feeble groan, and said he was hit in the eye; he was only stunned by the bullet, which just grazed his eyebrows, and in ten minutes was all right again. One poor young fellow of the artillery got killed close to his gun; they say he'd not been married a year altogether. We had about seventeen killed and wounded. The bush in front had lots of their killed in it in the morning. They acknowledge to have lost fifty, and have in all probability actually lost more than double this number, as they were howling like fiends in great numbers on our front, where there were cannister and rifles playing on them.

Yesterday nothing happened. We took up positions for the night, but no one interfered with us, having, I fancy, got enough of it. There were not a dozen shots fired. I, being bilious and seedy, went to bed. To-day we are still here; why, no one knows. I am still seedy from fatigue and sleeping on the ground with no tent. A packet of your letters came yesterday.

Oct. 25.—I've just come in from a little fight in which we lost nobody, killed or wounded, but which involved so much climbing and shooting that I can't write a bit. I was down with fever yesterday and the day before, and did not know what the matter was till the doctor found me under a rock, walked me over to hospital, and gave me fifteen grains of quinine in one dose, after which I crawled under a blanket stretched on sticks, got better, and went out on picket duty all night. I was just coming in to write, when an order came for me to go up hill at once, and put myself and men under the orders of the officer in command on the top. This proved to be three miles off, and about 6,000 feet high, and we were tolerably done by the time we got there. However, we took the range of the evening, gave the distance to the Artillery, and covered the advance of Coke's regiment till they reached the opposite height, the enemy bolting in about a quarter of an hour. They fired some matchlocks at us, but did no damage; we only heard the bullets whizzing overhead. The officer in command desired me to thank my men for the steady way in which they covered his advance; so I drew them up, made a little speech, and came back again; we killed several. The 1st Punjab Infantry got a standard, round which they danced a sword dance, and we gave them three cheers as we went by. We are hard worked just now, out almost every night, and ready to turn out all day. There's an officer going back through the Pass who'll take this. Not a moment to lose.—Lahore Chronicle, Oct. 31.

THE "AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF A SEPOY."

The "Autobiography of a Sepoy" is again the only noteworthy article in Chesson and Woodhall's Miscellany. The "military promenade" to Candahar forms the burden of the last instalment, and is described with a certain degree of picturesque. The sufferings of the invading army, the superstitious terrors of the sepoys, and the utter indifference of Shah Soojah's subjects, are told with forcible simplicity and evident truthfulness. But what is more to our present purpose is to draw attention to this intelligent veteran's opinion of the native army as now constituted. The service, he says, has become universally unpopular. Hindoos, Mussulmans, Sikhs, Pathans, and Doogras, all equally dislike the frequent innovations, and complain that they can never learn their work. The drill of yesterday is not the drill of to-day, and that which was acquired this morning will have to give way to another fashion to-morrow. They object, also, to the examinations, and maintain that promotion by merit is only another name for promotion by commanding officer's favour. The Punjabees and Sikhs, he continues, have no real reverence for the Sirkar. All they look to is the chance of plunder, whether in India or China; but now that peace is firmly established it is very difficult to induce young men to enlist. The foot soldiers are dissatisfied that no increase has been made to their pay, notwithstanding the rise in the prices of all necessaries of life, and the augmentation of the cavalry soldiers' allowances. The enhanced cost of living they attribute to the ill-advised tolerance shown to the Bunnias, who are allowed to charge what they please. The Mussulmans, we are assured, still hope one day to recover Hindostan from the Feringhees, forgetful of the lesson taught them at Delhi, when, with a large and well-appointed army, they were unable to hold a fortified city "against four or five regiments of Europeans and a few hastily-raised regiments of dirty Punjabees." And with regard to the Sikhs, "I also know that if the people of the Punjab should rebel and fight the Sirkar, 100,000 Hindostanees would be only too glad to take service against them, if it were merely to pay off old scores." This is so far satisfactory, but let us now see what "A Sepoy" has to say on the subject of brigading native corps:—

"The practice of the Sirkar, of keeping several regiments of native troops together at the same station, is not wise. It is then that the young men get mush, and swagger about in the bazaars, pulled up with vain conceits, and talk of things they had better not. They forget the giver of their salt. There are always plenty of budnashees (rascals) in every large city, and in most sadder bazaars, to encourage the men in every villany. This idle habit has increased much since the mutiny. Before that time I never heard much about it, but now that arfat (calamity) has befallen Hindostan, it is their constant practice. These bazaar nimuk-harams (scoundrels) have nothing to lose, and they think that in times of confusion and disorder they may gain advantage, as many of them did during the rebellion. Meerut, Cawnpore, and some other cities are full of these men, who escaped punishment for their evil deeds, and make a boast of it. Some bad men will be found in every regiment, and their influence should be well guarded against—especially among young soldiers."

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LORD BISHOP OF CALCUTTA has delivered his first charge as Metropolitan, in the Calcutta Cathedral. As the charge has to be again delivered in the Cathedrals of Madras, Bombay, and Colombo, it will not be published for some time. It was able, liberal, and sound, but dealt little with the educational questions raised by the Bishop of Madras.

CAPTAIN W. H. J. LANCE, of the Staff Corps, is appointed to command the escort of the Hon. A. Eden's mission to Bhootan, and Captain H. H. G. Austen, of the G. T. Survey, to be assistant to the envoy.

THE HOLIDAY QUESTION, which had once been decided by the Governor-General in Council, has been reopened. Sir Charles Trevelyan, we hear, has again taken it up, and has called for all the papers and correspondence on the subject. It is probable that the number of holidays granted in the year to the several secretariats, if not those allowed to other public officers, will be curtailed.

THE MEERUT COTTON PRESSING COMPANY (Limited), as we are informed by the local journal, commenced operations on Thursday, the 29th October. A bale "containing a little over three maunds of cotton was compressed without the slightest trouble into the space of 8½ cubic feet," while "the time occupied in pressing, including lashing and sewing, did not exceed thirty minutes." A large concourse of natives assembled to witness the working of the iron screw, and expressed their profound astonishment to see so large a quantity of cotton compressed into so small a space. It was the old story of the Geni squeezing himself into the casket on the shore practically illustrated.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE ASSUMPTION OF THE DIRECT GOVERNMENT OF INDIA by the crown was celebrated on Monday night, at the Dalhousie Institute by three ladies and fifty-three gentlemen. The entertainment, in truth, appears to have been somewhat meagre. Signore Pompei, indeed, whom our contemporary calls Signor Pompeii, and whom he evidently regards as first cousin to Signor Ercolano—seems to have done his best to enliven the dullness of the evening; but what could any man do with an audience of fifty-six Anglo-Indians? And then the speechifying! Sir Charles Trevelyan invited Mr. Facing-both-ways Beadon to take the chair as president elect, and hoped that the institute would one day or another be suitably lodged. Mr. Facing-both-ways Beadon, though overpowered by emotion, took the chair, and spoke of the paulo-post-future. Colonel Beadle discovered that the institute was like a tadpole, and had no doubt that when the tail fell off the legs would grow. Mr. Walter Brett then remarked that a Christian dynasty is as much superior to a Mussulman one as is the Dalhousie Institute to the Taj-Mahal. On his return to India he hoped to find that the "young men" had grown up. Mr. Nichol proposed to offer prizes as an incentive to "young men" to grow up. Mr. Parker and Colonel Beadle took the same view of the case, and suggested that the "young men" should at once be enrolled into a sub-committee. Mr. F. B. W. Beadon said that the resolution was irregular, but he would propose it to the council. As he did not quite agree with it, he would of course support it. The only way to keep "young men" out of the committee was to put them into a sub-committee. The subject of "young men" growing up should be "taken into consideration." He then sang the National Anthem as a solo—"Rule Britannia" being substituted as a chorus by the audience, led off by a "young man" with blue eyes, straight nose, and hair parted down the middle. The monthly expenditure of the institute exceeds the receipts by rather less than 150 rupees.—Hurkaru, Nov. 4.

MOULMEIN AND RANGOON.—We have received files of Moulmein and Rangoon papers of the respective dates of October 24 and 27. The total loss of the steamship Batic on the Alguada Reef on the night of the 16th is almost the only event recorded in these journals that has any interest for our Calcutta readers. The night, though very dark, was calm, and thus the passengers, crew, and mails were on the following morning safely landed on Negrais Island, whence they were conveyed to Bassein. Sir Robert Napier, K.C.B., is reported to have arrived at Moulmein on the 23rd, and was to leave on the 26th for Rangoon. We understand that Sir Robert remained eight days at Port Blair, and made a searching investigation into the manifold irregularities that of late have characterised that penal settlement. Very sweeping reforms are consequently anticipated. The Arracan arrived in the river yesterday.—Hurkaru, Nov. 8.

NEW BANK AT CALCUTTA.—A prospectus of the Victoria Bank of Calcutta (Limited) has been put forth. The capital is to be Rs. 50,00,000, in 10,000 shares of Rs. 500 each, with power to increase. The business of the bank will include loan and discount.

DEATH OF CAPTAIN DEVERILL.—We regret to announce the death of Captain T. P. Deverill, 90th Regiment. The melancholy event occurred yesterday morning.—Mofussilite, Nov. 3.

REPORTED RETIREMENT OF BRIGADIER CHAMBERLAIN.—According to the Friend of India it is the intention of Brigadier Chamberlain to retire from the service at the conclusion of his present Hill campaign. Colonel Wyld, of the Guides, is spoken of as Sir Nevill's successor in command of the frontier force, while Colonel S. Browne, of the 2nd Punjab Cavalry, is mentioned as likely to succeed Colonel Wyld.

HOSTILITIES IN PERSIA.—Very important intelligence has reached us from Persia, by telegraphic communication through Bagdad, for which we are indebted to our Turkish official contemporary, the Djeride-Hawadis. The telegram is from Herat on the 4th ult. Mohamed Cherif Khan, son of Dost Mohamed Khan, had declared himself independent chief of Herat. Azful Khan's party in Cabul gained strength, and Chir Ali Khan, the recognised chief at present in Candahar, is marching on the capital. The Turcomans, aided and abetted by Mohamed Cherif Khan, had committed great depredations on Persian territory; and Murad Mirza, the King of Persia's uncle, had marched with a powerful force to stop their progress. The British and Persian Governments are in perfect accord on this question.—Levant Herald.

BRITISH BURMAH PLANTATION COMPANY.—A prospectus has been published of the British Burmah Plantation Company (Limited), having for its object the development of the agricultural resources of British Burmah. The capital, three lakhs, is in three thousand shares of Rs. 100 each. The great bulk of the shares having been taken up in Calcutta, 500 only are available for Rangoon.

FURLONGS AVAILABLE.—There are at present thirty-two Bengal civil servants absent on furlough, and there are nineteen furloughs available for the season 1863-64. Of these nineteen, seventeen are unassigned, while fourteen more will lapse between this date and October 31.

TOTAL LOSS OF THE SHIP "UNDAUNTED."—We have received news by the Reiver of the total loss of the ship Undaunted, of London, commanded by Captain Clare, and bound from Sydney to Calcutta. She struck upon a coral reef about five miles from Cockburn Islands, in Torres Straits, on September 4 last. The passengers and crew were taken off the wreck just as they were about to abandon her, on September 6, by the barque Cornwallis, Captain Blick, bound from Queensland to Java. The passengers for Calcutta were Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Dickens, Captain Macdougall, of the late 10th N.I., and Mrs. Chappell. They were forwarded on by the British Consul at Sourabaya, and the three first-named passengers reached Calcutta yesterday in the Reiver, with only the loss of much of their baggage.—Englishman, Oct. 30.

NEWSPAPER EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.—There must be something in the Indian climate which prevents the proprietors and editors of newspapers from pulling pleasantly together. Only the other day we had occasion to notice the eccentric conduct of the shareholders in the Bombay Saturday Review Company (Limited), which resulted in the triumph of the editor. We now quote a most extraordinary paragraph that appeared in a recent number of the Mysore Recorder. It runs as follows:—"THE BANGALORE RACES.—We had written a proper prepared account of the first day's races. We are extremely sorry to say that the apathy of our proprietors and the stupidity of our printers prevents (sic) at three o'clock this morning, its insertion. If any gentleman imagines it is any fault of ours, the proof sheet of the copy given in hand at eleven o'clock yesterday is open for inspection.—HARRY LANCE HUGHES." A schism of this kind can only be got over, in a sort of Irish way, by making it still wider. Mr. Harry Lance Hughes, we imagine, will now, imitating Coriolanus, turn his back upon his unappreciative compatriots and console himself with the reflection that "there is a world elsewhere."—Bengal Hurkaru.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.—The Serampore journal speaks approvingly of the accommodation afforded to travellers on the East Indian Railway, which will not surprise any one who has had an opportunity of observing Mr. Batchelor's intelligent and indefatigable devotion to his duties. Some American sleeping carriages have now, we hear, been put on the line, arranged with double berths, each compartment containing a small table and furnished with a bath-room. All that is now wanted, observes our contemporary, is a series of marble bath-rooms every eighty or a hundred miles; but does he mean that the train should stop every three or four hours till all the passengers have washed and refreshed themselves? At that rate, they are not likely to reach Delhi within a week.

STATE HONOURS.—The Secretary of State for India directs the publication of the following rule for the disposal of the Insignia of the Orders of the Bath and the Star of India:—"On the decease of a Knight Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath the Collar and Badge appendant of the Order worn by him should be returned to the Lancaster Herald, but the investment Badge and silver Star are retained by his family. On the decease of a Knight Commander of the Bath the whole of the Insignia of the Order worn by him are the property of his family. On the decease of a Companion of the Bath the Insignia worn by him are to be retained by his family. On the promotion of a K.C.B. to a higher class in the same division of the Order, the Insignia of the lower class are returned to the Herald's College. On the decease of a Knight of the Star of India the Orders worn by him are returned to the College."

A DETACHMENT OF H.M.'s 20th Regiment, consisting of about four hundred and fifty men, arrived at this port on Sunday, the 1st inst., on board a merchant vessel which left Gravesend in August last. The head-quarters of the regiment are expected by the latter end of this month. The detachment now arrived will be quartered for the present at Chinsurah Depot.—Hurkaru, Nov. 5.

INDIAN FINANCE.—Messrs. Whiffin and Foster have already entered upon their new duties, and have, for the present, opened their office at their private residence at Chowringhee. The salary of each of the two above-named officers has been fixed at Rs. 40,000 per annum, and that of their two assistants, who have accompanied them from England, at Rs. 1,000 each per mensem.

DR. H. BAILLIE.—We are informed that Dr. Herbert Baillie, now officiating as surgeon and superintendent of the Native Chandnee Hospital, Dhurrumtollah, has been confirmed in his appointment, vice Dr. Allen Webb, deceased.

DR. WYLIE. Officiating Superintendent of the Meerut Central Prison, has been appointed Residency Surgeon at Meywar, and will be succeeded by Dr. Pilcher, from Bolundshuhur.

LOSS OF THE SCHOONER "SUPPLY."—We are authorised to announce the loss of the schooner Supply on Saugor Sands. We regret to add that nothing is yet known of the fate of Captain Long and seven men belonging to the hapless vessel.—Hurkuu, Nov. 7.

H.M.'s 19th HUSSARS were to commence their march from Lucknow to Meerut on the 2nd Nov. The relieving corps is the 8th Hussars.

MADRAS.

QUEEN VICTORIA THE TRIBUTARY OF THE NIZAM.

The greatest potentate in Asia is His Highness the Nawab Uzfool-ood-Dowlah Asoph Jah Bahadoor, Nizam of Hyderabad. He alone can boast with truth that the Queen of England is his feudatory. What are the solemn state of the Mikado of Japan, the wide-stretching power of the Emperor of China, the tinsel glory of the Shah of Persia, or even the stern despotism of the Czar who rules all Northern Asia, compared with his dignity? In all seriousness, with as much right as that by which the oldest sovereigns of Europe hold their titles, the Nizam of Hyderabad, only a century ago a Lieutenant-Governor of the Great Mogul, might adopt the oriental title of king of kings. He has taken in reality the place of Padshah of India, claimed to the last by the Emperor of Delhi, for the English Viceroy as representative of Queen Victoria is his tributary. We cease to wonder that so great a prince indignantly refuses to enter the Viceroy's durbur, and continued long to spurn the insignia of the Order of the Star of India. We are almost inclined to acknowledge the injustice we have been guilty of in asking that the English resident at his court should no longer be required to appear in shoeless feet and humble mien before his throne. The Queen of England "holds in trust" from the Nizam of Hyderabad the province of Berar. The Queen of England's viceroy is responsible to the Nizam for the surplus revenues of Berar every year. There can be no mistake as to the fact. The words of the Treaty of 1800, which Lord Canning and Sir C. Wood reproved the late Colonel Davidson for making, are most humiliating. We ceded Shrapore "in full sovereignty" to the Nizam. We "cancelled the debt" of half a million sterling due by the Nizam to us on the sole condition that we should not produce the accounts of past transactions between us. We gave him districts yielding a net annual revenue of Rs. 21,49,822 for lands worth only Rs. 8,20,833, and we agreed to pay him the surplus revenue of these lands. After having humiliated ourselves by receiving Berar "in trust," we so far degraded ourselves as to give up our intention of governing Berar from Nagpore, because the Nizam said that would be annexing his province to a Mahratta

State ever his implacable enemy; and because, if under the Resident of Hyderabad, it would still be administered by "an officer of his own court" and "his honour and dignity as a sovereign would remain unimpaired in the estimation of both friends and enemies." Nothing, not even the sale of Cashmere, has ever been so disgraceful to our diplomacy, or is such a blot on the escutcheon of our Sovereign. It was long before Lord Canning could swallow the bitter pill.—Friend of India.

VALEDICTORY ADDRESS TO MR. WARD, C.S.

To SAMUEL NEVIL WARD, Esq., Civil and Session Judge, Coimbatore.

"Sir,—We the undersigned inhabitants of the town of Coimbatore and its suburbs, respectfully beg permission to present to you this our Valedictory Address.

"During the time the administration of the justice of this district has been confided to your care you have ever evinced a most anxious desire to render justice accessible to all classes of the community, allowing no private influence to take part in your judicial proceedings; and as a judge nothing was lost sight of on your part that could on all occasions tend to the convenience of all parties. In short, the good results of your judicial administration of this district, which extends over a period of nearly seven years, have been felt and enjoyed by all, from the highest to the lowest.

"It is only justice to add that the promptness with which you heard our complaints and redressed our wrongs, the facilities afforded to all parties in seeking remedy at your hands, and the zeal with which you carried out your important judicial functions, as also the remedy and liberal support of all measures tending to promote the general good, such as educational and other charitable institutions in the town, have rendered your name more and more familiar to us, besides having a strong call upon our sense of gratitude. "In conclusion, we beg to state that as an administrator of our justice, and as a friend of our education, you have earned our good wishes, and that you hold a prominent place in our esteem, which will undoubtedly make us remember you with reverence and gratitude ever after your return to your native soil, and we wish you a hearty farewell and safe voyage to your native land, where peace and happiness, with unclouded lives, may attend upon you and Mrs. Ward and children.—We beg to remain, sir, your most obedient and grateful servants,

(Signed) "SHAIK ABDUL RAHEMAN, and 350 Others."

"Coimbatore, 24th October, 1863." Mr. Ward, in reply, thanked the gentlemen who formed the deputation for the kind wishes conveyed to him in the address, and assured them that it will ever be his earnest desire to pray for the welfare and prosperity of India, and especially of the inhabitants of this district, for whom he has sincere regard.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BANK OF MADRAS.—The directors of the Bank of Madras considered it expedient this week to put up the rate of interest one per cent. all round. Applications for loans having been received to some extent, it was necessary to be prepared for any after events. It is generally expected that the present demand for accommodation will not last long.

TROOPS FROM ENGLAND.—We understand that the head-quarters of H.M.'s 21st Foot, from England, have arrived at Masulipatam by the ship Surrey, but that in consequence of the bad state of the roads, owing to the Monsoon, between that port and Bellary, to which station the regiment is destined, it is unable to proceed on its march. The 21st has therefore been directed to return to Madras by the same vessel, and will, on landing, be taken up by train to Arcot, there to be quartered until the close of the north-east monsoon. The Surrey is expected to arrive in Madras in a day or two.

A NEW OFFICE FOR THE REVENUE BOARD.—We have been given to understand that an eligible site has been fixed upon, on the east face of the Dewan Khana, Chepauk, for the erection of a building to be used as an office for the members and secretary of the Board of Revenue. Government have sanctioned the outlay of a sum of Rs. 10,400 for that purpose.

DEATH OF MR. E. C. SMITH.—It is with deep concern that we record the melancholy event of the death of Mr. E. C. Smith, the postmaster of Madras, a public servant to whose ability and untiring zeal the community owe most, if not all, the improvements that have been effected in the postal department of this presidency during a great number of years past. To find a worthy successor to him will be no easy task, but we trust that the choice will fall on the fittest of the employés in the department generally who have long borne the burthen and heat of the day together with the deceased gentleman. To bestow the office on any outsider would be an act of injustice, as well as of disregard for the public interests, which we should greatly lament to see committed.—Overland Athenæum.

CHOLERA.—We regret to learn that this terrible scourge has broken out in the cantonment of Arcot. Some cases have occurred in the past week, but principally confined to the natives. Orders have been issued, we understand, that, in the event of the slightest symptom making its appearance among the men of the 21st before their removal from the station, they should be dispersed at once. Cholera is also prevailing at Coimbatore, in the Madras Presidency, and the death of Mr. Ward, son of the judge of that station, is reported.

RAILWAY TRAFFIC RECEIPTS.—The receipts of the Great Southern of India Railway for the week ending October 31, 1863, amounted for passengers, &c., to Rs. 2,813-6-0; and for luggage, goods, &c., to Rs. 2,875-13-0; making together Rs. 5,689-3-0, or an average receipt per mile of Rs. 72-0-0. During the corresponding week in 1862, the receipts were Rs. 5,110-3-0, or an average receipt per mile of Rs. 64-12-0.

H.M.'s 21st Foot.—The head-quarters and first company of the detachment of this regiment now at the Mount, and the whole of the detachment at Arcot, have been ordered to proceed to Bangalore, as soon as the necessary arrangements for their removal have been completed. This removal is said to be on "public grounds," but what they are we have not learned. The detachment at Fort St. George remains stationary for the present. Another detachment of this regiment has arrived by the Sydenham. It was landed with considerable difficulty, owing to the strong wind and current prevailing at the time. The strength of the party consisted of Major Steward, Captains Winsloe and Bainbridge, Lieutenants Easkell, Lewis, Thornburn, and Fielden, Ensigns Patterson and Burr, Surgeon-major Mackintosh, and 357 rank and file. This batch left for Arcot by special train, in the course of the evening, in consequence of there not being sufficient accommodation for them in Fort St. George.

MADRAS MARKET REPORT.

(From the Madras Chamber of Commerce, Nov. 13.)
Stock and Share Mar.—Money still continues tight, but the pressure on the Bank of Madras has not been sufficiently severe to induce the directors to raise their rates since the 3rd instant, when they were advanced 1 per cent. all round. Government securities continued flat, and Five-and-a-Half per Cent. have been sold freely at 15 to 1½ prem.; Five per Cent. cannot be quoted higher than 6½ prem., and Four per Cent. 3 to 3½ discount. Bank of Madras shares are in very little demand, and the last sale reported was at 105 prem., but offers have since been made at 115 prem.

Exchange, owing to recent advices from Calcutta and Bombay, has rapidly advanced during the fortnight, and first-class credits cannot be sold under 2s. 1½d.; Documents, 2s. 1½d. to 1d. The banks have sold freely six months' sight bills, at 2s. 1½d., in anticipation of a further advance.

BOMBAY.

THE SIND RAILWAY.

We beg to draw the attention of our readers to the report of the directors of the Sind Railway Company and Indus Flotilla. This document announces that Government have sanctioned the survey of a line to connect Kotree with Mooltan, and that the project of running a line to the Bolan Pass is also seriously entertained. We hope the surveys for the extension will set every doubt at rest, if any should exist, as to the urgency of following the right bank of the Indus, instead of the left. We understand that Mr. John Brunton is expected out in India by the first mail in December, with sixteen engineering officers for the above survey. Mr. Edgar Swan is coming out with Mr. Brunton, but he will be most likely employed otherwise than on the proposed works. Every preparation is being made here for the reception of the surveying staff. Application has been made to Government for the purchase of eighty tents of various descriptions at prime cost, as there are no tents available in the market or at the Jubbulpore Factory. The proposed pier at Keamaree, to which the line, we are told in the report, is to be extended, has long been required to facilitate the landing of railway stores, and promises to be an extensive work, to cost not much less than half a lac. The proposed extension of the line to the pier will start from the "Bunder Head Deviation." While on the subject of railway improvements, we may add that the "Clifton Branch," which has already been opened in part of the harbour work trains, will be completed within three or four months, if not earlier. The store buildings and offices in course of erection by the contractors, Messrs. Dinshaw and Juggunath, are progressing rapidly, and will cost about Rs. 75,000. Every work, in fact, is being pushed on with energy, and the chairman, Mr. Andrew, pays a deserved tribute to the energy of the representatives of the company in India, when he says, "The conduct of Mr. Rawlinson, the agent, the heads of departments, and the engineering staff, continues to merit the entire approval of the board." The services of the officers of the flotilla are likewise acknowledged in merited terms of praise.

We regret to have to close this notice of the Sind Railway with the announcement of the death of Mr. A. J. Littler, C.E., resident railway engineer for the Kurrachee districts. This gentleman was compelled through ill-health to leave the station on the 20th of last July. He died ten days after his arrival in England.—Sindian, Oct. 21.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LATE JAMES GRANT LUMSDEN.—The career of this gentleman, member of Council in Bombay, is epitomised by the Bombay Gazette. He was placed in the Secretariat by Sir G. Clerk during his first Governorship, and continued to act as Judicial and General Secretary during Lord Falkland's tenure of office. A seat in Council fell to him on Lord Elphinstone's appointment, and since Mr. Willoughby's retirement there had been no abler man. In council, however, he became lazy, deficient in moral courage, disappointed his best friends, and retired two years before the expiration of his time. In private life he was universally esteemed.

GALLANTRY OF A CAPTAIN AND CREW.—A Kurrachee paper makes mention of a gallant action performed by the captain and crew of the Fortitude during a heavy gale and with a sea running high. The postal cutter, which was conveying the Persian Gulf mail bags to the Corringa, capsized and sunk some two hundred yards from the shore, and the four boatmen were thrown into "the waters wild." For a while no boat's crew could be persuaded to put off, notwithstanding the handsome reward offered by the postmaster. But no sooner did the captain of the Fortitude become aware of the extreme danger of the poor fellows who were buffeting the billows for dear life, than he and his gallant crew instantly manned a boat and saved them from imminent death.

EXPENDITURE IN SIND, 1861-62.—The total expenditure incurred in the province of Sind during the year 1861-62 on account of canal clearances and improvements, amounted, says Our Paper, to Rs. 6,33,099, or Rs. 71,111 in excess of that of the preceding twelve months. Of this increased expenditure Rs. 55,551 were disbursed for the enlargement of the Biggar canal, on the frontier of Upper Sind. The net canal revenue was no less than Rs. 22,54,486, while the gross revenue derived from land was Rs. 40,64,125, or Rs. 5,30,057 over that of the previous year, owing, in a great measure, to "an extraordinary overflow of the river Indus, the improved condition of the canals, and a timely fall of rain in the Kurrachee districts." The amount of remissions was no more than Rs. 41,571, being Rs. 33,332 less than in 1860-61, and one-half even of that sum was attributable to the failure of crops in the Thurr and Parkur. The current balances of revenue on the 1st August, 1862, are stated at Rs. 42,863, of which a large portion has since been collected. The area of cultivated land is estimated at 1,021,810 acres, or 272,890 in addition to that of the previous year. On the whole this annual report may be regarded as satisfactory, however tardy may have been its publication.

C. A. Kelly, assts. to the mag. and coll. of Tipperah and Burdwan, are placed at disposal of the board of revenue, with a view to their being employed in the completion of the survey of the Cachar district.

No. 156a of the 13th inst., the annexed scale of staff salaries hereafter to be allowed to officers serving with native regts. under the new organisation is published for general information, and with reference to this scale an extract (paras. 23 to 30) of Sir C. Wood's despatch, No. 311 of Aug. 31 last, is also published for information and guidance.

2. Detailed instructions will be issued by H.E. the C. in C. for the guidance of officers serving with native corps under the new organisation, and the present system of payment of troops and companies and for repair of arms, &c., will continue until a further order is issued by Govt. on the subject, the same officers as at present drawing any allowances now authorised for the payment of companies and repair of arms.

The new system of placing European officers in charge of squadrons and wings will, in all other respects, be brought into operation as soon as H.E. the C. in C. can issue the necessary subsidiary orders.

3. The despatch of the Secretary of State having been received by the right hon. the Gov. gen. on the 30th ult., increased pay is claimable from Sept. 1 by commandants, adjutants, and doing duty officers, as well as seconds in command of cavalry; but when higher pay may accrue from seconds in command or others obtaining new appointments, as wing, or squadron officers or quartermasters, such increased pay will only become due from the date of officers assuming charge of the duties of such new appointments under the orders of the Commander in Chief.

4. With reference to paragraph 26 of Sir Charles Wood's despatch instructions will hereafter be issued as to the scale of office establishment to be maintained by adjutants. Meanwhile the allowance of rupees 50 per mensem will be passed.

5. The pay now authorised is to be drawn in addition to staff corps pay only.

6. The rules now laid down are applicable to such corps under their Excellencies the Commanders in Chief of the Bengal and Bombay armies as now are or may hereafter be placed on the new organisation, and to the Punjab irregular force.

In other irregular corps no alteration is made in the establishment, position, or duties of officers, but commandants, adjutants, seconds in command, and doing duty officers are entitled to the increased pay.

7. The corps of regular infantry on the Bengal establishment will, under the orders of the Commander in Chief, be placed on the new organisation from Jan. 1 next.

Extract, Secretary of State's Letter, No. 311, dated Aug. 31, 1863, paragraphs 23 to 30.

Para. 23.—I have given much and careful consideration to these proposals.

24.—I am of opinion that the salaries attached to these regimental appointments should be such as to place them at least on a footing of equality with the average of the staff appointments commonly held by officers of similar rank and standing in the service, and while they should not be so far superior to the latter as to induce those to seek them whose natural tastes and qualifications might not otherwise incline them to this important branch of the service, it is important, on the other hand, that young officers who, on first joining the staff corps, will frequently be employed with native troops, should not, if naturally fitted for military service, be tempted to relinquish it by the attraction of superior emoluments of other staff employment.

25.—With these principles in view, and making due allowance for the advantages enjoyed by staff corps officers in regard to promotion, and the comparatively early period at which they will attain the pay of the higher ranks, I am willing to sanction the scale of staff allowances proposed by your Government for the officers serving in different capacities with native regiments, which, though liberal, will probably not be found excessive.

26. In the case of the regimental adjutant, however, it appears desirable that an office establishment should be prescribed, which should be maintained and paid upon abstracts supported by the usual muster rolls.

27. I learn from your despatch, No. 10, dated Jan. 8, 1863, that you have completed the native regiments in Bengal to six regularly attached and paid European officers, exclusive of the medical officers, as announced in your G.O. of Dec. 12, 1862, it being distinctly understood that the appointments made under that decision are held subject to such modifications as may be found necessary on receipt of my further instructions on the general question, and that you have authorised the Government of Bombay to extend the rule to such regiments in that Presidency as are formed and officered according to the new organisation.

28. I approve of these proceedings, and shall await the result of your reference to the Government of Madras upon the introduction of the new system into the army of that Presidency.

29. The scale of salaries now sanctioned will be brought into operation and made to apply in all cases where there is no reduction in the present aggregate salary on the payment due on the 1st of the month succeeding the receipt of this order.

30. Reductions of salaries effected by this order are not to be made to affect present permanent incumbents, or those who are officiating for such permanent incumbents being temporarily absent from their duties.

Absentee Allowances of Officers on Civil Employ.

No. 157a.—H.E. the Gov. gen. is pleased to publish the following extracts of a despatch from the right hon. the Secretary of State for India, No. 311, dated Aug. 31, 1863, regarding the absentee and actg. allowances of military officers in civil employ, the provisions of which are applicable to all the presidencies.

Para. 31.—With your Despatch, No. 28, in the Financial Department, you forward a further report from the committee of secretaries regarding the absentee and acting allowances of military officers in civil employ, with a note thereon by your financial secretary.

Para. 32.—You concur generally in the recommendations of the secretaries, with the amendments noted by the financial secretary, and propose the adoption of the following principles:—

1st. That every military officer in civil employ

* No officer to be without a small note-book and pencil.

when on leave should draw pay under the military rules; and

2nd. That every military officer when acting in any civil appointment should draw his civil pay under the civil rules.

83. Upon these two principles you propose the following rules for the officer on leave:—

A military officer in civil employ on leave, either in India or in England, shall draw precisely the pay which he would be entitled to draw under the military leave rules, except when on privilege leave, as hereafter specially provided.

Such pay shall be provided from the civil department, excepting only in cases where the allowances so drawn would exceed the entire civil pay of the appointment, when the excess will be paid by the military department. The staff salary of any officer shall be held to be the difference between the Indian pay and allowances of his rank and the full salary of his permanent appointment.

84. For the acting officer your Government proposed the following rules:—

A military officer acting for another in civil employ shall draw deputation allowance under the rule by which the allowance is granted to covenanted civil servants.

If the officer be in military staff employ, such deputation allowance will be given in addition to his military pay and allowances, plus half the staff pay of his substantive appointment.

If the officer hold no substantive staff appointment, civil or military, it will be given in addition to his military pay and allowances.

A military officer in civil employ performing the duties of his substantive appointment, and at the same time officiating in another, is entitled to his substantive salary, and in addition to a deputation allowance of 20 and 10 per cent. on the staff salary of the appointment in which he is officiating, provided the pay of the substantive appointment, with the addition of the deputation allowance, does not exceed the pay of the higher appointment.

A subordinate acting for his principal or for any other officer at the same station, is not entitled to deputation allowance for the first month while so acting, unless he is required to act on two occasions within a brief period (say twelve months), in which case he draws deputation allowance for the whole period during which he may have held the appointment in excess of one month as if he had acted continuously.

A military officer proceeding from one civil appointment to another shall be allowed to draw, during the authorised period of transit, out of the salary of the office he is about to join, a sum equal to that of his previous situation. This rule to be preceded by an order making the civil rules for joining time applicable to military officers in civil employ.

A military officer in civil employ can take three months' cumulative privilege leave (under the civil rules only), but he must earn it by thirty-three months' continuous service in the Civil Department alone.

85. These several rules are approved of.

PRICES IN BOMBAY.—The American war has made a few millionaires in Bombay, but great destitution exists there among certain classes, and a correspondent of the Times of India thus writes on the effect of the high prices prevailing: "The bare necessities of life have risen to even worse than famine prices. For instance, fuel, which was sold at Rs. 4 or 5 per candy, is now Rs. 15; meat, formerly at 1 anna per pound, now costs four times that amount; rice, which used to be ten or twelve rupees per bag, is now sold at fifty; with many other articles, all the very essentials of life, thus raised to most preposterous prices. The humbler classes are scarcely able to eke out an existence on these terms, and are actually at the point of starvation." The merchants are called upon to alleviate sufferings which in some instances have driven men to the abandonment of their families.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

DEATH OF LORD ELGIN.

THE friends of Lord Elgin and the public generally must have been perfectly prepared for the confirmation of the melancholy intelligence of his utterly hopeless condition. A later telegram received at the India House announces the sad fact that he died on the 20th of November, at Dhurumsala, and was buried privately on the following day. Dhurumsala is an obscure locality. Poor Lord Elgin's last home is more isolated than that of Lord Cornwallis, for though Ghazee-pore is a station of no great distinction, it is at least somewhat Anglicised, and many of his countrymen lie near him, and the monument there erected to his memory is seen daily by British eyes. What Lord Elgin might, or could, or would have done for India if his life had been spared it is difficult to say, for during his very brief Indian career he had not the opportunity, or did not avail himself of it, to exhibit any remarkable adaptability for his post; but he had exhibited so much energy and sound judgment, and so much administrative ability in other parts of the world, that his countrymen at home generally approved of his nomination to the Indian Government, and expected much from him in that high and arduous post. His countrymen in India, however, were a little unreasonably impatient for some striking measure, forgetful how much hard and useful work may be done quietly. The Friend of India complained his policy was pretty, and not progressive; nay, that it was even retrograde; and another paper said that "now and then he wrote a minute but nothing more, and how much did he draw for it? Nevertheless," continued the same writer, "we cannot do without Lord Elgin, for there may be a good time coming when he may bring his talents into play, instead of keeping them carefully concealed in a damask napkin. At present Lord Elgin is a mixture of Xerxes and Sardanapalus. This may be in consequence of having mingled with the Rose. We want despatches, action, energy, girding up the loins, and Lord Elgin is not too old for this work." Alas! "the good time coming" was never to come, and his Indian Government was doomed to be the least distinguished portion of Lord Elgin's career. He has, however, done enough for his country elsewhere to make his memory respected as an eminent public servant. Perhaps the disease of which he died, not properly called dropsy of the heart but pericarditis, had made him less demonstratively or physically active during the closing scenes of his Indian career than he had been in Canada and China. Sir John Lawrence will succeed to the Indian Government in sound condition, in full energy of mind and body, and with an unrivalled local knowledge of the country. We observe that in his reply to a complimentary address from the inhabitants of Southgate he rather significantly gives expression to a hope that he may be permitted to return to Southgate, and "that at no distant date."

PAYMASTER SMALES.

PAYMASTER SMALES seems to have triumphed over all his enemies, however potent—not his regimental commanding officer only, but the Commander-in-Chief in India, and his Royal Highness Commanding-in-Chief in England; for, though the Court-martial at Mhow sentenced him to be cashiered, and Sir Hugh Rose confirmed the sentence, and the Duke of Cambridge approved it, the Judge-Advocate General at home discovered irregularities in the proceedings which invalidated the soundness of the decision. It seems to have been considered that he was treated not only illegally, but with unreasonable severity. At all events, he has not only been pardoned by the Queen, but he has been placed on half pay from the day on which he was cashiered. He is therefore again in the service, and is eligible for active employment.

There is a fierce article against him in the latest number of the Calcutta Englishman, by the last mail, but we would fain hope that our Calcutta contemporary has been misled by erroneous information.

THE CRAWLEY CASE.

WE now see something like the beginning of the end of this long drawn out court-martial, so remarkable for its ever-recurring difficulties on questions of legality and usage. It is well that every court-martial is not conducted in the same tedious style, or certainly our army would have little else to do than to attend to such proceedings. The public now see pretty clearly their way to the issue; but we shall abstain from giving any opinion upon the subject till the whole case is closed. A new periodical called The British Army Review, states that Colonel Crawley has commenced an action for libel against Jacob Omnium (Mr. Higgins), on account of the article written by him in the Cornhill Magazine on the Mhow Court-martial.

Another paper, The Army and Navy Gazette, states that on the 28th ult. an application was made before Mr. Justice Williams in chambers, by Mr. Prideaux, on the part of Mr. Wakefield, one of the Sergeant majors imprisoned at Mhow by Lieutenant-colonel Crawley, during the progress of the trial of Paymaster Smales, for an order to administer interrogatories to the defendant under the Common Law Procedure Act. The application was most strenuously resisted by Mr. Knight, counsel for Lieutenant-colonel Crawley; but the judge ultimately made the order, the plaintiff undertaking not to use the answers, or allow them to be used, before the court-martial now sitting at Aldershot.

CONTINUATION OF THE COURT-MARTIAL ON COLONEL CRAWLEY.

WE continue our abbreviated report of the proceedings of this court-martial.

SIXTEENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The question to be put or not put to Dr. Barnett about Mrs. Lilley's conversation with him respecting the brandy drank or supposed to be drank by her husband was again the subject of tedious discussion. The Judge Advocate-general had already decided that it was perfectly legal and that it ought to be put, and even the Court agreed that it should be put, but not at this stage of the proceedings; but as the prosecutor said he had no other important evidence to produce, and the case for the prosecution could not be closed until Mrs. Lilley's communication to Dr. Barnett was received, the President, after having retired for consultation, decided to refer the matter once more to the Judge Advocate-general, and directed that the cross-examination of witnesses should for the present be proceeded with.

Sergeant Mills was recalled, and again asserted that he had frequently seen Sergeant-major Lilley drunk. The conflict of evidence on this point is something marvellous, but happily the testimony in favour of Lilley's sobriety as yet immensely predominates. Mills affirms distinctly that he had seen Lilley drunk at Nottingham, at Newcastle-on-Tyne, at Balaklava, at Scutari (where he, the witness, on Christmas-day, pulled off Lilley's boots, put him to bed, and covered him up), at Durham, at Mhow, and at Berhampore. He once saw him drunk on the line of march, and on one occasion when he (the witness) was orderly sergeant, Lilley "ordered him away like a dog, so that on that day he got no tea." Witness does not know that on this occasion anybody else saw Lilley drunk.

Lieutenant and Adjutant Fitzsimon had now to undergo another severe cross-examination. He was now cross-examined by the Court. The witness admitted that when Colonel Crawley gave him a written order respecting the posting of the sentry he did not himself visit the sentry at his post in the first bungalow, but he believed he was posted according to orders. In the second bungalow he saw the sentry at his post. He confessed that so far as not going to see the place where the sentry at the first bungalow was placed he had failed in his duty. He had called the sentry to him to speak to him, but it never struck him as necessary to ask him where he was posted, though he should say it was the duty of an adjutant to know distinctly the posts of all sentries; "and yet," said the Court to witness, "you have stated that you did not like to see where the sentry was posted on account of Mrs. Lilley's sickness?" "The reason I have given," replied the witness, "was the reason why I did not go in to see where the sentry was posted." "But," said the Court again, "was Mrs. Lilley's sickness a reason why you did not ask the sentry where he was posted?" "No." "Would not that sickness be an additional reason to see carefully to the position of the sentry that Mrs. Lilley might not be annoyed?" "I should say so." On a question being put by Sir Alfred Horsford to the witness, who was reminded that he had stated before that he was certain that the sentry annoyed Mrs. Lilley, he replied, "that he had come to that conclusion from the fact that the sentry was ordered never to lose sight of her husband day or night, and that he must therefore have had Mrs. Lilley in sight also. He was not aware that the sentries had received orders not to follow Mrs. Lilley into her bedroom."

The Court adjourned.

SEVENTEENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The Court this day deliberated for about twenty-five minutes before the witnesses were produced, and when they entered the public room Colonel Phipon said that the Court trusted that neither the prosecutor nor the prisoner would unnecessarily press questions that had no direct reference to fresh matter elicited from the cross-examinations.

Colonel Crawley said he had no further questions to put to Lieutenant Fitzsimon, so that gentleman was not recalled.

Dr. Turnbull was recalled and examined by the Court. Dr. Turnbull stated in reply to the questions put to him that he considered the advantage of exercise in the case of Lilley was nullified in a great measure by his sense of the degradation of being marched up and down as a guarded prisoner. The doctor did not make any representation to the commanding officer on this subject. It was a matter of discipline which he thought he had no right to interfere with. When called upon to show how he reconciled his misstatements—one that he had never seen Lilley during his arrest, and the other that he had never visited him in his first quarters—he replied "that he saw him frequently between the date of his removal from his first quarters to the day of his death." He could not state how often before the 18th of May. The statement of Colonel Crawley about the quantity of liquor drunk by Lilley, and Dr. Barnett's report of what Mrs. Lilley had said on the subject, caused him to make the addition to his report. His impression at the time was that Mrs. Lilley confirmed the Colonel's statement about the liquor.

Dr. Barnett was now recalled. He stated in answer to questions from the Court that he did not think four or five glasses of brandy a-day were a "considerable quantity" for Mrs. Lilley in her exhausted state and with such irritability of the bowels that she could not take solid food or nutritious broth. Mrs. Lilley had stated to him that her husband had taken brandy and soda-water every day, but not enough, she thought, to do him any harm. He (Dr. Barnett) "hoped it did not." Mrs. Lilley did not say exactly how much brandy her husband took. He was satisfied at the time with the completeness of the investigation he had made, but he had omitted to take into consideration the amount of the brandy which was consumed by Mrs. Lilley herself. Mrs. Cotton was present at the conversation on the subject with Mrs. Lilley. If the witness had in his medical report conveyed an idea that Lilley was a drunkard he was sorry for it, for Lilley was not a drunkard. His brain showed no sign of drink, nor did his breath smell of drink. The witness had prescribed three or four glasses of brandy daily to Mrs. Lilley. Mrs. Cotton, in presence of Mrs. Lilley, had shown him a bill for the brandy used, and he looked over it at the time.

Major Swindley was next recalled. He had heard that Mrs. Lilley was inconvenienced by a sentry being posted inside her house.

Corporal Frederick Holman said that when he saw Lilley drinking brandy he heard Mrs. Lilley say, "My dear man, don't drink so much; it will only do you harm."

Private Francis Drabble deposed that Mrs. Lilley on seeing her husband drinking brandy told him "to give over and go to bed."

Sir A. Horsford here said that this was the case for the prosecution.

The President asked Colonel Crawley if he was ready for his defence.

The Colonel replied that the case for the prosecution was substantially the defence. He had only to produce a few witnesses to supply missing links, and to supply some documentary evidence, when he would ask for an adjournment to enable him to prepare his address. He asked for Sir Hugh Rose's Historical Memoirs of the 6th Dragoons, which would furnish additional proof of Lilley's misconduct before his arrest.

The Court said they would consider this request.

Before going on with his defence, Colonel Crawley wished for a copy of Sir Hugh Rose's letter to the Duke of Cambridge, dated July 26, 1863, in which his Excellency entered fully into the case of Lilley and the particulars of his arrest. Colonel Crawley had been allowed to take copies himself of the documents alluded to, and he was permitted to read them to the Court. He was about to read one of them when the hour for adjourning the Court had arrived, and he was interrupted.

The Court adjourned.

EIGHTEENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The proceedings of this day occupy five closely-printed columns of the Times newspaper. The length and voluminousness of this trial is perfectly overwhelming, and it is indeed lamentable that so much irrelevant matter, and so much unnecessary discussion should be suffered to make law and justice in the army only obtainable at such a disproportionate expenditure of time and money, and at such a loss of the ordinary daily services of men in the employ of the State.

The long justificatory letter of Sir Hugh Rose, the Commander-in-Chief in India to His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief in England, dated head quarters, Simla, occupying in an abbreviated form about two columns and a-half of close print, was read this morning. This document, as far as Sir Hugh Rose's testimony is concerned, is intended to show on documentary proofs that the statements of Mr. Fortescue and Mr. Coningham in the House of Commons about the supposed cruel treatment of Lilley, and the supposed inconveniences to himself and his wife from an unwholesome residence, and the position of the sentries posted at it, are wholly without foundation. Sir Hugh Rose adduces the testimony of Dr. Linton, C.B., late Inspector of Hospitals, Dr. Turnbull, and Dr. Burnett, that Lilley drank daily a considerable quantity of spirits, which had a fatal effect. His Excellency also asserts that he was so anxious about the health of the troops that they were never exposed to any movements, parades, or drills contrary to medical advice. The authority of medical men in such matters was supreme, and that he never received any report of Lilley's suffering from his confinement, and that a word from his medical attendant would have procured him release from close arrest and transferred him to the hospital. His Excellency also testifies that there are official reports which show that Sergeant-major Lilley had misconducted himself before his arrest, and that he was by no means the sober and steady and good non-commissioned officer that he had been represented to be. Major-general Farrell was informed by Sir William Mansfield, Commander-in-Chief of Bombay, that for reasons stated he considered Sergeant-major Lilley utterly unfit for his post, and directed Major Farrell to see that he was removed from it. These are the main points adverted to in the letter, which it was agreed should not be regarded as legal evidence, but should be appended with other documents to the proceedings of the Court, and be taken "at its seeming worth." A great deal of discussion followed as to the justice or propriety of admitting or rejecting the letter as legal evidence. Colonel Crawley was then permitted to read a number of other documents, principally those enclosed in the letter of Sir Hugh Rose, or referred to by him, all apparently tending to show that Lilley was disobedient to his commanding officer, and connived at the disobedience of others; that Lilley indulged in drink, and that Mrs. Lilley and her husband enjoyed comfortable accommodations. After the reading of these Captain Francis George Savage Curtis, of the 6th Dragoons, was called and examined. The most important, or at least novel, portion of his evidence, that when he was sitting near Colonel Crawley, at the Mhow Court-martial, and Lilley deposed that his wife was annoyed by the proximity of the sentry, Colonel Crawley seemed taken utterly by surprise, exclaiming "Good God! can this be true?" and that when Colonel Crawley left his regiment, under arrest, on his way to England, though it was raining hard, he saw the men running out to meet him, and on coming up they gave him three hearty cheers. Even the women of the regiment turned out—"the greater portion of them in tears"—and they also expressed their good wishes to the Colonel. On overtaking a detachment of the regiment at a place called Bulwara, on the road to Bombay, the whole detachment to a man turned out and cheered their Colonel.

Captain W. H. J. Clark, of the 72nd Highlanders, who was a member of the Court-martial at Mhow, also testified to the apparent astonishment and sudden start of Colonel Crawley when he heard the evidence of Lilley about what he (Lilley) called "the last act of cruelty" in placing the sentry so near Mrs. Lilley's bed.

Colonel J. McNeal, of the 72nd Highlanders, confirmed the testimony of the preceding witness. He added that he heard Colonel Crawley order the adjutant to gallop off at once to Lilley's quarters to see if the sentry was so posted, and if so, to remove him instantly.

The most remarkable evidence adduced this day was that of the Parsee merchant, Ardresseer Franjee, who supplied Lilley with liquor. This is too important to admit of any abbreviation.

The witness said,—I am a general merchant carrying on business at Mhow. The paper now handed to me is a true copy of the bill for liquors supplied by me to the late Sergeant-Major Lilley in the months of March, April, May, and June, 1862.

This document was as follows:—

"March 16, 1 bottle of ale; March 18, half-a-dozen pints of porter; March 23, 2 bottles of brandy; March 26, 2 ditto; March 31, 2 ditto; April 6, 2 ditto; April 8, 1 dozen of ale; April 10, 2 bottles of brandy; April 15, 2 ditto; April 18, ditto; April 22, 2 ditto; April 26, 2 ditto; April 28, 1 ditto; May 3, 1 ditto; May 4, half-a-dozen of ale; May 4, 2 bottles of brandy; May 4, 1 bottle of port wine; May 7, 1 bottle of brandy; May 8, 2 ditto; May 9, half-a-dozen of ale; May 9, 2 bottles of brandy; May 12, 2 ditto; May 14, 2 ditto; May 16, 2 ditto; May 18, 1 bottle of port wine; May 19, 2 bottles of brandy; May 21, 2 ditto; May 25, 2 ditto; May 25, 1 bottle of gin; May 29, 1 bottle of brandy; June 5, 1 ditto. Total, 103r. 11a, June 8, 1862."

Did Sergeant-major Lilley frequently come to your shop before he was in arrest?—He did.

Was he in the habit of drinking anything at your shop? If so, state what it was.—Sometimes two or three liquor glasses of brandy and soda-water.

Did you supply him with the brandy and soda-water without payment?—Yes, I did.

Why did you do that?—He was my best customer.

How long were you in the habit of supplying him with liquors without payment?—Since the arrival of the regiment in India.

Were you in Poonah when the regiment first arrived in India, and did you supply Sergeant-major Lilley at Poonah as well as Ahmednuggur and Mhow?—At Kirkee, Ahmednuggur, and Mhow.

Cross examined by Colonel Horsford: Is this the bill of which you have just seen the copy?

Colonel Crawley: You should allow the two bills to be compared.

Both bills were accordingly handed to the witness, who compared them minutely, and then said, "One is 1861 and one is 1862." Having looked at the paper further, he added, "There is 1862 on this bill also—1862 is on the back."

Has the bill just put into your hands your signature upon it?—It has.

Is the second bill handed to you a copy of the first?—It is a copy from my book.

Colonel Crawley: May I explain, sir? They both purport to be copies from the Parsee's book; neither of them is an original.

The President: Are they both bills for the same articles supplied during the same time?

Witness: Yes, but one is a bill for a whole year; the other a bill for the four months.

Colonel Horsford: Which is the bill for the whole year?—The one that you gave me.

To whom did you give that bill which has your signature?—To Colonel Crawley.

When did you give it?—On the 1st of July, 1863.

Colonel Crawley: Which bill is the witness speaking of?—The bill for the whole year.

Colonel Horsford: How came you to give it to Colonel Crawley?—Colonel Crawley asked me to give it.

What did he say?—He said he wanted it for the twelve months previous to the sergeant-major's death.

Colonel Crawley: May I call the attention of the Court to the fact that I called for the bill by the express orders of Sir H. Rose.

Colonel Horsford:—Did Lieutenant Davies come to you about it?—He came to me about the other bill—for the four months.

What did you do when Lieutenant Davies came to you?—I took my book to Colonel Crawley's bungalow, and made out the bill there, and gave it to Colonel Crawley. I copied it out from my book.

What did he say to you?—He wanted a copy of the sergeant-major's bills.

Did Sergeant-Major Lilley continue to deal with you while he was under arrest?—He did.

How did he manage to deal with you while he was under arrest?—He sent his Ghorahwallah (horse-keeper) with his book to my shop.

Is his horsekeeper here?—No, he is not.

Did any one else ever come with the book?—I not remember.

Did you always supply the brandy with your own hands?—No, a few times I supplied myself; all other times my servant supplied.

Is your servant here?—No, he is not.

Who kept the pass-book?—The Sergeant-major Lilley himself.

Did you see the pass-book when you were with Colonel Crawley?—No. The question must be repeated—I not understand. That time I had no pass-book in my possession; it was with Mrs. Lilley.

Was that the only time you talked with Colonel Crawley about the accounts?—I was every day at Colonel Crawley's bungalow. Many times I go, many times I talked about the accounts.

After Lilley's death, did you go on supplying brandy?—A few articles.

Who came to your shop for them?—I don't know; I do not remember.

Was any chit sent to you about them?—No.

Then, how came you to send them?—According to his pass-book.

Did she go on sending the pass-book after Sergeant-major Lilley's death?—Yes.

What has become of the pass-book?—I don't know.

Colonel Crawley (to the witness).—Have you got your own book?—Yes.

Colonel Horsford: Did you buy any of Sergeant-major Lilley's things after his death?—Yes, I did.

Of whom did you buy them?—Of Mrs. Lilley, through Sergeant-major Cotton.

Were you well paid?—The bill was paid out of the things, and the remainder of the money I paid to Mrs. Lilley.

Did you pay the money into Mrs. Lilley's own hand?—I not remember.

Do you remember whether you receipted the bill?—The Sergeant-major's bill?

The bill that you sent in?—I not remember.

Had you any conversation with Dr. Barnett about this matter?—Yes.

Will you state it?

Colonel Crawley: I am advised to object to that question. No conversation which takes place between a witness and a third party affecting the prisoner, but not in the presence of a prisoner, can be evidence. This is the most elementary of all the rules of evidence.

Colonel Horsford: I regret to find that the prisoner has been advised to make this statement about the laws of evidence. I shall be obliged to show that this is an entire mistake. But I leave this particular question to the Court.

It being then four o'clock, the Court was unable to pronounce any decision, but adjourned.

NINETEENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

On this day the evidence for the defence was virtually closed.

The Court decided that the last question put to the Parsee merchant and objected to by Colonel Crawley might be put direct through the Court. Addressee Framjee was recalled, and Colonel Horsford asked him if he had any conversation with Sergeant-major Cotton about the bill for wine and spirits. The prisoner objected to the question. He was then asked if when he made the arrangement with Cotton to purchase Lilley's furniture, was Mrs. Lilley present. He replied in the affirmative. He did not remember whether Mrs. Cotton was present. The bill was sent to Mrs. Lilley. Colonel Horsford here remarked that the spirits were supplied chiefly, as the witness said, by his clerk. That clerk was not in England. Mrs. Lilley's pass-book in which the goods were always entered had not been produced, and no reason given for its non-production, and the goods were supplied to her servant, the syce, or horsekeeper, and he was not producible—so that there was really no legal proof that any of the brandy included in the account was ever ordered by Lilley, or was ever actually received by him at all.

Colonel Crawley now told the President that he did not wish on his part to adduce any further evidence, and asked for an adjournment of the Court to prepare his defence. Colonel Horsford here requested permission to produce fresh matter respecting the Parsee's bill; he wished Sergeant-major Cotton and his wife and Dr. Barnett to be examined on the new matter, but the Court negatived his proposal. They thought the matter irrelevant. The Court then adjourned to the 17th inst., to give Colonel Crawley time to prepare his defence.

DEATH OF LORD ELGIN.

Lord Elgin dead! The news comes with frightful speed in the wake of losses fresh in memory. Three Governors-General in succession—first Lord Dalhousie, then Lord Canning, last, Lord Elgin, fall sacrifices to our Indian empire. In the same connection we think of Lord Clyde, of Mr. Wilson, of Havelock, and many more. Still in this connection we are painfully reminded of another illustrious victim to the toils of office, Sir George Lewis, who belonged to the same college, Christ Church, as the last three Governors-general of India; and Sir George Lewis reminds us of his predecessor in the War-office, Lord Herbert. We have not the positive news of Lord Elgin's death; but a telegram received yesterday at the India-office announces what may be regarded as fatal, that on the 14th of this month his life was despaired of. What was the nature of his complaint is not certainly known. Although the suddenness of the disaster would lead to the supposition that Lord Elgin was struck down by one of those rapid diseases which are incidental to the Indian climate, there is ground to believe that this was not the case, but that we must attribute his loss more directly to his public cares. He is known to have been suffering from heart complaint; he had gone to the hills at that period of the year when Indians generally seek for relaxation; he had just been over a pass 13,000 feet high; and he had complained of the effect of the mountain air on his breathing. It was soon after this exploit that his ailment manifested itself; and the inference is that it is in these circumstances we are to look for an explanation of the unexpected calamity which we now record.

Lord Elgin traced his descent to the Bruce whose name he bore, and he was son of that Earl who brought the Elgin marbles to England. The son of Scottish parents, he was born in London on the 20th of July, 1811. He was educated at Eton, and from Eton he went to Christ Church, where, as lately we have too often had to repeat, he was one of the distinguished band of scholars and statesmen, including Sir George Lewis, Lord Dalhousie, Lord Canning, and Mr. Gladstone, who were reared in that celebrated seat of learning. He was of the first-class in classics in 1832, and subsequently he became a Fellow of Merton College, being then known in his father's lifetime as Lord Bruce. We hear little more of him till 1841. In that year he married; he entered Parliament as member for Southampton, and as a supporter of Sir Robert Peel; and he succeeded to the Earldom, which being a Scottish peerage did not interfere with his seat in the Lower House. The general election of 1841, which sent Lord Bruce to Parliament, raised Sir Robert Peel to power, with Lord Stanley as Secretary for the Colonies. Sir Robert Peel and Lord Stanley were both scholars and statesmen, trained in Christ Church, were both prepossessed in favour of the new-comer, and in 1842 offered him the Governor-Generalship of Jamaica. In noting this fact, we are reminded of a scene which many years afterwards took place in the House of Lords. It was the first night of the Session of 1859, and the first appearance of Lord Elgin in the Upper House after his return from his successful mission to China. In the debate which then occurred, Lord Derby and Lord Grey contended with generous rivalry for the honour of having first introduced Lord Elgin to official life. "My Lords," said Lord Derby,—

"I cannot pass over the subject of the treaties that have been concluded with China and Japan without expressing what has also been so well expressed by my noble friend behind me, approval of the course which has been pursued by her Majesty's plenipotentiary. It is a peculiar satisfaction to me to have seen Lord Elgin, who was appointed by my predecessors in office, discharge his functions with so much zeal, skill, and ability, because it so happens that I was the first person who had the satisfaction to introduce Lord Elgin into public life.

Earl Grey: I beg your pardon, my lord—I made the appointment.

Earl of Derby: I beg my noble friend's pardon. I recollect giving him his instructions before he went out.

Earl Grey said that it was not so. On his coming into office he thought the state of Canada was such as to require a person of civil experience to administer its affairs, and accordingly Sir George Cathcart was recalled and Lord Elgin appointed Governor.

Earl of Derby: Whether I am in error or not does not in the slightest degree alter my feeling of satisfaction at the manner in which he has discharged his duties or my personal friendship for him." It must have been not a little gratifying to Lord Elgin to be the object of this pleasant rivalry. Lord Grey was quite right in claiming the honour of having sent him to Canada; but Lord Derby had sent him previously to Jamaica, and therefore was the first to introduce him to public life. In Jamaica Lord Elgin had no easy task, but he acquitted himself so well that when in 1846 the Whigs had to seek out the ablest man they could find to be Governor-General of Canada, they pitched upon Lord Elgin, notwithstanding his Tory connections. The truth is that the Tory party was now for a season broken up, and that the Whigs might without fear turn to some of the Conservatives for assistance. Lord Elgin fulfilled his duties with consummate tact. He carried out in Canada the conciliatory policy of his father-in-law, Lord Durham, and by preserving a neutrality between parties, by developing the resources of the country, agricultural and commercial, and by seeking in every possible way to study the wishes of the colonists, he, in a reign that extended over eight years, did more than any man to quell discontent and to knit the Canadian provinces closely to the mother country. He was so successful that in 1849 he was honoured with a British peerage.

The next office which he was called upon to fill was that of ambassador to China. It was on his way thither that he heard of the Indian mutinies; at once on very slender information he divined the importance of the crisis, and took upon himself to divert to Calcutta the troops which had been ordered to China in support of his mission there. This is one of those acts of rapid decision, of official courage, and of unselfish thought, which historians will ever delight to remember. He passed on to China, and though, by this act of unselfishness, his progress was delayed, yet in the end, as we all know, he succeeded in his aims; he saw Canton taken, and he negotiated the important treaty of Tien-tsin with the Celestials, which forms the basis of our present relations with them. It was a great triumph, and though there had been much bitter contention as to the policy of Lord Palmerston in prosecuting the Chinese war, yet its successful issue seemed to gratify all parties alike; and that scene which we have described as taking place in the House of Lords in February, 1859, will show that the opponents of Lord Palmerston not less than his supporters were anxious to do honour to the British Plenipotentiary. Not to repose, however, did Lord Elgin return to this country. In the summer of 1859 Lord Palmerston entered upon office once more, and Lord Elgin became a member of his Cabinet, with the duties of Postmaster-General. What followed it is almost needless to recount. The brother of Lord Elgin, Mr. Bruce, had been appointed our Envoy in China, and in accordance with the treaty he ought to have been received in Peking. Access to the capital, however, was refused to him, save on conditions which were considered derogatory to the British representative, and when we insisted on the rights secured to us by treaty, there ensued the disaster of the Paibo. Forthwith, in 1860, Lord Elgin was despatched once more to sustain the English authority, and he thoroughly fulfilled his mission by entering Peking in state, and compelling the submission of the Celestial chiefs. Scarcely had he gained this triumph than he was appointed to succeed Lord Canning as Governor-General of India. When he accepted the post his friends remembered how the two previous Governors, his College friends, had suffered from the severity of their labours in an oppressive climate. It was felt at the same time that so much misfortune must have its interval of brightness, and it was hoped that Lord Elgin might escape. If, as we fear, he has fallen, he has fallen in harness; but he has had the satisfaction of seeing India grow in prosperity under his rule, and hold out expectations which for years past we have not dared to entertain. All through his life he was successful in his undertakings, and he was successful at the last. He owed that success not so much to great genius as to good sense, to social tact, and to a love of hard steady work.—Times.

THE NEW VICEROY OF INDIA.

The inhabitants of Southgate, desirous of expressing their satisfaction at the recent appointment of Sir John Lawrence as Viceroy of India, and their high estimation of his character as an individual, presented him with the following address on the eve of his departure for the East;—

"To the Right Hon. Sir John Lawrence.

"Sir John,—We, the inhabitants and residents of Southgate, in the county of Middlesex, feeling as we do more immediate interest in your position from the fact of your having dwelt among us during the last few years, are desirous of putting you in possession of our sentiments upon the occasion of your high and important appointment as Governor-general of India. We feel assured that our gracious Queen (amongst the many good, illustrious, and great men of this country) could not have selected one more deserving or more able than yourself to conduct the affairs of that great and mighty empire. It is highly gratifying to us, knowing how devoted yourself and your honoured and lamented brother have been through a long course of years to the fulfilment of the great and difficult duties cast upon you, your energy and self-reliance at a time of extreme peril, your signal efforts made at Delhi, your wisdom, always manifested to promote the advancement of England and to maintain her honour, have won the admiration of your country, and henceforth the friends of humanity will look forward to the progress of our Oriental fellow-subjects in civilisation, in art and science, in morality and religion, with the brightest hopes, and the firmest assurance of realisation under a rule which, from experience of the past, is looked forward to as one of mildness, wisdom, and of high Christian character. And we firmly believe that the uniform kindness and condescension of your public and private life will insure you the affection and respect of all who are so fortunate as to come within the sphere of your influence. We believe, also, that your high appointment is a source of universal rejoicing to the British nation, and not only congratulate you upon your promotion, and on your deserts for that high office as one of those great men who saved both the honour of Englishmen and the land of India, but we also congratulate each other that wisdom and justice are now sufficiently established amongst our rulers as to cause them to recognise such noble merit. In conclusion, we beg to assure you that, whatever honour and power may be in store for you, you will carry with you to that distant land the affection and profound respect of the inhabitants of Southgate, and, as we believe, of all Englishmen; and for God's blessing upon you we will ever pray.

"To the Right Hon. Sir John Lawrence, &c., &c., Southgate House, Southgate."

The following is the reply of Sir John Lawrence to the foregoing address:—

"Southgate House, Southgate, Dec. 9, 1863.

"Sir John Lawrence thanks the inhabitants and residents of Southgate for their kind address. He can assure them that he feels deeply the kindness and goodwill which has induced them thus to come forward and express their sympathy. He will ever remember the time he has spent in Southgate with pleasure; and he trusts that he may be permitted by the Almighty to return to the place again, and that at no distant date."

MISCELLANEOUS.

SIR JOHN LAWRENCE.—The recently appointed Viceroy and Governor-General of India, and suite, left London on Wednesday evening for Marseilles, where his Excellency will embark for Alexandria, en route to assume his duties at Calcutta.

EAST INDIA COMPANY.—A general meeting of the proprietors of this company was held at the offices on Wednesday last. Mr. Crawford, the secretary, read the financial statements, showing the state of the security fund on the 1st of Dec., 1863. It appeared that the amount invested in the fund was £5,766,322. 7s. 10d., consisting of £777,178. 14s. 3d. in the Three per Cent. Consols, and £4,989,153. 13s. 7d. in Three per Cent. Reduced. The sum invested by the company was £14,422. 17s. 9d. in Three per Cent. Consols and Exchequer Bills. The statement having been received, Mr. Jones moved the following resolution, pursuant to notice—"That counsel's opinion be taken as to the true interpretation of the Act 3 and 4 Will. IV., cap. 35, as to the competency of the Government to apply the security fund to any other purpose than the redemption of the dividend, or to pay £200 in lieu of £100 stock out of any other fund than the accumulated security fund; or whether the security fund, if applied as above, does or does not belong to the company." Mr. Martilla seconded the resolution. The chairman, having explained the position in which the Government and the company stood with relation to the security fund, said that no other power than Parliament could deal with this fund. Some discussion then ensued, and ultimately Mr. Jones withdrew his motion. The routine business having been transacted, the court adjourned, after a vote of thanks to the chairman.

THE ORDER OF THE BATH.—(War-office, Dec. 11.)—The Queen has been graciously pleased to give orders for the appointment of George Frederic Edmonstone, Esq., late Lieutenant Governor of the North-Western Provinces of Bengal, to be an Ordinary Member of the Civil Division of the Second Class, or Knights Commanders of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath; and of Lieut. Colonel Charles Robert West Hervey, of the Bombay Staff Corps, some time General Superintendent for the Suppression of Thuggee and Dacoity, to be an Ordinary Member of the Civil Division of the Third Class, or Companions of the said Most Honourable Order.

APPOINTMENT.—(Downing-street, Dec. 10.)—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Thomas William Kinder, Esq., to be Master of the Mint for the colony of Hong Kong.

CAPTAIN SMALES, we understand, has been reinstated in the service of the army. An intimation has been conveyed to him from the War Department that, in consideration of all the circumstances of the case, his name would be replaced on the half-pay list from the date when he was dismissed. Although it had been understood that her Majesty's gracious pardon had virtually, by the force of the Royal prerogative, superseded the very irregular and questionable proceedings at Mhow, yet when Captain Smales applied for reappointment to active service he found a technical difficulty in his way. The present step completely removes all remaining disqualification; placing him, so far as relates to pay, eligibility for service, and right to pension, exactly on an equal footing with other officers of the same standing in point of date.—Daily Telegraph.

EXPORT OF SPECIE.—The steamer Ceylon, for the East, which left on Saturday, took out £527,490 in specie, including £15,300 in gold, and £2,200 in silver for Alexandria, together with £80,600 in gold and £429,300 in silver for Bombay.

THE LAND MORTGAGE BANK OF INDIA (Crédit Foncier Indien) (Limited) have removed from the temporary offices in Lombard-street to their new premises, 17, Change-alley, Cornhill, where the business of the company will in future be carried on.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Morlan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.

MR. EPHRAIM MOSELY'S IMPROVE-

MENT in the CONSTRUCTION of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES, on an INDIA-RUBBER BASE, are secured by Letters Patent, dated December, 1853, whereby the continual outlay of new teeth is avoided, alterations from the absorption of the gums, or any other cause, being easily remedied, and the first outlay no greater than for ordinary kinds. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted as under:—It consists of one continuous piece of Prepared India-rubber. The Artificial Teeth present an uniformly even surface to the action of the tongue, preventing lodgment of food and all secretions, so much complained of in the present system. No gold or any other metal being required, all springs, wires, and fastenings are wholly unnecessary; sharp edges are avoided, a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity hitherto wholly unattainable, and a fit perfected with the most unerring accuracy, are secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums. The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the prepared india-rubber; and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may be retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being at the same time provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

Quintessence of Jamaica Ginger and Camomile.

GINGER has long been deservedly known as an excellent domestic medicine, and, combined with camomile, it is the most efficient stomachic tonic known, for while the ginger relieves the stomach from distension and flatulency, arising from impaired digestion, the camomile strengthens the coats of the stomach, and by that means gives it a healthy and invigorating tone. So highly concentrated is this preparation, it is unimpaired by age or climate, and well adapted for exportation. In Gout, Spasms, Dysentery, Cholera, or those complaints incidental to tropical climates, it is invaluable, as in numerous cases a dose or two has checked and frequently cured most alarming attacks. No family should be without it. Sold in half-pints, quarter-pints, and one-eighth pints.

Agreeable Seidlitz Powder, in one bottle, protected by a case, with measure and spoon included. The advantage of this preparation is the perfect combination of the solid ingredients of the Seidlitz Spring in one compound powder.

It is very cooling and refreshing, well adapted for exportation, or travellers by land or sea.

Aromatic Tincture of Quinoline.—For the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria.

No person exposed to the influence or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for it taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria.—Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by THOS. WILKINSON (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Regent-street, London, W.

EXTRAORDINARY CURE of a COUGH.

—The following letter has been received:—"Nightingale-hall, Edmonton. Dear Sir,—I have recently suffered much from a most violent cough, proceeding from a tickling in my chest, which no remedy, out of many I resorted to, could allay. My head was constantly aching and my whole frame entirely shaken. Having seen the good effects of your Balsam of Aniseed in several numbers of my family, I purchased a small bottle, and when going to bed at night took a teaspoonful in two tablespoonful of water, just warm. The effect was immediate; it arrested the tickling in my chest, I slept well and arose perfectly restored in the morning, with the exception of debility arising from fatigue by incessant coughing for some days previous. My cough entirely left me, and has never returned. Having since heard of a lady in the neighbourhood who for a long time had laboured under a most distressing cough, and who had resorted to every remedy within her knowledge, I sent the remainder of the bottle to her; and that long standing, obstinate, and (as she thought) incurable cough was perfectly cured.—I am, my dear Sir, yours very truly, Wm. BOARDS. To Mr. Thos. Powell."

IMPORTANT to PEOPLE RETURNED

from INDIA.—The only really effectual relief for torpidity of the liver, bile, and all those weak feelings arising from the change from a hot climate, is SANGER'S TASTELESS ANTHILIOUS POWDERS, a trial of which will satisfy the most sceptical. They are invaluable for chronic bile, and do not weaken the system by violent purging, or saturate it with mercury, which most remedies for the bile do.

DINNEFORD'S PURE FLUID MAGNE-

SIA has been, during twenty-five years, emphatically sanctioned by the Medical Profession, and universally accepted by the Public, as the Best Remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, Indigestion, and as a Mild Aperient for delicate constitutions, more especially for Ladies and Children. When combined with the Acidulated Lemon Syrup, it forms an agreeable Effervescent Draught, in which its Aperient qualities are much increased. During Hot Seasons, and above all, in Hot Climates, the regular use of this simple and elegant remedy has been found highly beneficial.

It is prepared (in a state of perfect purity and of uniform strength) by DINNEFORD and Co., 172, New Bond-street, London; and sold by all respectable Chemists throughout the World.

BLAIR'S GOUT and RHEUMATIC PILLS.

—This preparation is one of the benefits which the science of modern chemistry has conferred upon mankind; for during the first twenty years of the present century to speak of a cure for the Gout was considered a romance; but now the efficacy and safety of this medicine is so fully demonstrated, by uncollected testimonials from persons in every rank of life, that public opinion proclaims this as one of the most important discoveries of the present age. These Pills require no restraint of diet or confinement during their use, and are certain to prevent the disease attacking any vital part.

Sold at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per Box, by all Medicine Vendors.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—DANGEROUS ILLness.—The most marked success has so often attended trials of these Pills that no invalid should despair of obtaining at least some alleviation, if not the thorough cure of his malady, from their purifying and strengthening virtues. Here is the language of one who speaks conscientiously from vast experience of past suffering. "Before I took your Pills I knew no moments of ease for years; my stomach, head, and nerves kept me in continual misery; my appetite was gone my digestion most infirm, both in mind and body I felt completely shattered. Now, I rejoice to say, all this is changed. I can eat, digest, sleep, and walk as well as most men more robust than myself."

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE announcement of the death of Lord Elgin, the late Governor-general of India, has been received throughout India with an expression of profound regret; for though his brief Indian career was uneventful, and unattended by any brilliant indications of administrative genius, every one knew from his antecedents in other parts of the world that he would in all probability have shown the same zeal, firmness, moderation, and sound judgment, had there been any call upon the exertion of his best faculties as he had displayed on previous occasions in other quarters of the globe. His uniform courtesy and kindness of manner had also tended to make him generally acceptable, and if he had had a longer reign he might have been one of the most popular of our Indian rulers. He beheld his end approaching with Christian heroism and resignation, sent his last respectful expression of affection and duty to his sovereign, took his last leave of his wife, and gave directions for his burial at Durrumsala, in the Kangree valley, and even instructed an officer to draw a plan of a simple monument to be erected over his remains on the spot near which he died. His death is spoken of by the local papers as a great loss to the State, but England has so many great men fitted for great posts, that we can hardly think the death of even Lord Elgin will be very severely felt in a purely political point of view, especially as the gentleman appointed to succeed him is so peculiarly fitted to take his post at this critical juncture, when we have a disturbance on the North-Western frontier to quell, which no one is better able to deal with than Sir John Lawrence.

All hill fighting with savage tribes is usually far more troublesome than glorious, and our troops on the frontier have suffered out of all proportion to their real strength or importance to the enemy, who, being thoroughly at home in every corner and turning of their native mountains, and passes, and precipices, know how to take advantage of disciplined troops, against whom they would have no chance whatever on the level plains and in fair warfare. There seems to be uncertain reports of Colonel Chamberlain having died of his wounds, and it is generally understood that Sir Hugh Rose is disposed to put a stop to all further trifling with the mountain savages, by advancing at once himself with a very large force, turning the grand military force in Lahore, that was to form a sort of Field of the Cloth of Gold, to a purpose more solidly useful than was at first contemplated.

Sir William Denison, Governor of Madras, will act as Governor-General until the arrival in India of Sir John Lawrence. A steamer had been despatched from Calcutta to Madras to convey him to the former city.

On the 11th of November the first line of the Indian Branch Railway, from Nulhatee to Jeeagunge, one hundred and forty-five miles from Calcutta, was opened with much formality by a party of sixty European gentlemen, with the Hon. Cecil Beadon, the Governor of Bengal, at their head. The carriages are like American cars, with a door at each end and none on the sides. Each carriage is fifty feet long, and takes two hundred passengers. The East Indian line had cost £19,000 a mile, while this railway cost only £1,900 a mile—an almost incredible difference.

Sir Bartle Frere, the Governor of Bombay, is still at that Presidency. Sir Hugh Rose is on his way to Lahore.

Intelligence has been received of the death of the Sikh Raja of Nabah, and who had been chosen by his Excellency the Viceroy to fill a seat in the Council.

It is reported that five bishops of the Church of England are expected to be in Bombay on the occasion of the visitation of the Metropolitan, on the 8th December, viz., the Bishops of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Colombo, and Victoria.

The President in Council, Bengal, has communicated the intention of the Government to issue, on January 1, 1864, a new official journal, to be called the Gazette of India. The Calcutta Gazette will remain the official organ of the Government of Bengal, while the new Gazette will deal with all matters pertaining to the Government of India generally.

Messrs. Whiffin and Foster, who have recently been sent out by the State Secretary to introduce the English system of accounts in this country, have already entered upon their new duties, and have, for the present, opened their office at their private residence at Chowringhee, in Calcutta. The salary of each of the two above-named officers has been fixed at Rs. 70,000 per annum, and that of their two assistants, who have accompanied them from England, at Rs. 1,000 each per mensem.

The trial of the case of the Queen v. Zuhoor-ul-Hussein, charged with the betrayal and murder of the late Captain Orr and party during the rebellion, which has been going on before Colonel Barrow, in the Court of the Commissioner of Lucknow, has been concluded, and the prisoner sentenced to transportation for life.

It is said that the much talked of reduction of fares by the Messageries Imperiales steamers to officers in the English army and navy is a mistake after all, and arose from a misunderstanding by the agents of an obscurely worded order. The reduction only applies to officers of forces serving in the field in conjunction with French troops or naval squadrons co-operating with French ships, consequently the Spanish forces in Cochín-China are the only allies who benefit at present by the reduction.

SHIPMENTS OF SPECIE TO THE EAST.

Mr. James Low's Indian Circular states as follows the total amount of specie shipped to the East from Great Britain during the last thirteen years. It will be seen that the shipments of gold in 1863 have been the largest on record, but that those of silver have been greatly exceeded in some previous years. During the thirteen years fully one hundred millions sterling of silver shipped from Great Britain have been absorbed in the East:—1851, gold £102,280, silver £1,716,100; 1852, gold £921,730, silver £2,630,238; 1853, gold, £880,202, silver £4,710,065; 1854, gold £1,174,200, silver £3,132,003; 1855, gold £448,272, silver £6,409,889; 1856, gold £404,740, silver £12,118,985; 1857, gold £209,275, silver £16,795,232; 1858, gold £108,305, silver £4,791,923; 1859, gold £788,269, silver £14,828,521; 1860, gold £1,069,746, silver £8,038,276; 1861, gold £783,543, silver £6,838,292; 1862, gold £1,715,968, silver £10,138,506; 1863, gold £3,104,112, silver £7,895,914—total gold £12,930,754, total silver £100,034,544.

The exports of specie and bullion to the East from the Mediterranean ports (chiefly from Marseilles) during the last eleven years have comprised the undermentioned additional sums:—1853, gold £93,528, silver, £849,362; 1854, gold £48,456, silver £1,451,014; 1855, gold £243,230, silver £1,524,240; 1856, gold £74,039, silver £1,989,916; 1857, gold £239,980, silver, £3,350,689; 1858, gold £165,290, silver £911,043; 1859, gold £142,144, silver £1,521,070; 1860, gold £765,138, silver, £2,764,054; 1861, gold, £644,934, silver £2,021,060; 1862, gold £1,676,689, silver £4,461,273; 1863, gold £4,594,919, silver £5,998,358; total, gold £3,708,302, silver £26,841,970.

The amount of Government bills drawn on India from England during the year now closing has been, on Calcutta, £3,412,703. 12s. 11d.; Bombay, 4,013,906. 13s. 7d.; Madras, £378,414. 4s. 8d.; total, £9,805,114. 11s. 2d.

DEATH OF LORD ELGIN.

The worst fears which we (Times of India) expressed in our last Overland Summary have been fully realized. The Viceroy and Governor-general of India died at two o'clock A.M. on November 20, at Dhurumsala, a secluded hamlet in the valley of Cashmere. Up to the 19th his lordship was quite conscious, fully aware of his state, and perfectly composed. He made every earthly preparation for his departure. He made his will; gave instructions that he should be buried at Dhurumsala; directed Colonel Strachey to design a tomb for his remains; approved of the design when submitted to him; dictated the words of the telegrams that he ordered to be despatched to England, conveying the expression of his duty to his Queen, and the request that her Majesty would appoint his successor; gave instructions respecting the return of his family to England; took leave of his family, and waited till his end came. His death is a great loss to the British empire; to British India, at such a time as the present, it is a loss which seems irreparable. Events of the last importance are now hourly occurring which demand immediate action. A man of Lord Elgin's character, experience, abilities, and position could ill be spared. Imperial affairs are, consequently, at a standstill. The Secretaries are all at Lahore, powerless to act. Sir William Denison, as Senior Indian Governor, has been summoned from Madras as Provisional Governor-General. It must be three weeks at least before he can possibly arrive at Lahore, for he has a land journey of thirteen hundred miles after he reaches Calcutta. It is stated that he has been requested to pursue exactly the same line of policy as Lord Elgin would have pursued had death not arrested him. He cannot, however, fill Lord Elgin's place. Lord Elgin died in harness. He had just visited isolated British provinces, which no former Governor-General ever visited, and perhaps no other ever will visit. His body lies buried in the valley of Cashmere. His widowed Countess is now retracing her melancholy steps to Calcutta, attended by Dr. Macrae, and will proceed immediately to England.

SIR HUGH ROSE AND THE WAR IN THE NORTH-WEST.

His Excellency Sir Hugh Rose, the Commander-in-Chief, was at latest dates at Meeran Meer, waiting to know the issue of Lord Elgin's illness. He will now proceed, with a large portion of the force that was to form the camp of exercise, to the seat of war on the North-West Frontier; and it is expected he will assume the command of the expedition. The prudence of such a step would be very questionable, unless the report, which requires confirmation, be true, that General Chamberlain has been killed. Events have shown that the so-called Anjatis were only the demonstrable portion of a powerful combination of numerous hill tribes against us. The enemy has been found far more powerful than was expected. About six weeks have expired since our force entered the Umbeylah Pass, and we have obtained no decided victory. We have had numerous severe encounters with the enemy, and have had our officers and men daily picked off in large numbers, without being able to obtain any corresponding advantage. It is clear to all that our position there is a critical one, and that most decisive measures must now be adopted to save our force from annihilation. In the engagement of Oct. 30 our casualties amounted to 212, including three European officers killed and five wounded. In the engagement of the 6th inst. our losses were as follows:—Officers killed—Major Harding, 2nd Sikh Infantry; Lieut. Murray, 71st Foot; Lieut. Douglas, 71st Foot (doing duty). Officers wounded—Lieut. Battye, Guides; Lieut. Oliphant, Ghoorkhas. Of the men four Europeans, with one native officer and thirty sepoy, were killed; and four Europeans, with two native officers and thirty-three sepoy, wounded. Total, thirty-eight killed and forty-one wounded. On the 11th instant the enemy attacked a force under Colonel Wilde, of the Guides, but were repulsed. On the 13th they attacked again at three o'clock A.M.; the fight lasted till two A.M., and our loss was one officer, Captain Davidson, 1st P.I., and twenty-two men killed, and one officer, Lieut. Pitcher, and forty men wounded. In another engagement, on the 19th inst., we lost four officers killed—Captain Smith, H.M.'s 71st; Lieut. Jones, H.M.'s 71st; H. H. Chapman, H.M.'s 101st; and W. F. Mosley, H.M.'s 14th N.I.; total casualties, 119.—Times of India, Nov. 29.

FIGHTING IN THE NORTH-WEST.

LAHORE, Nov. 22.

Another engagement between our troops and the Sittanees on the 19th. Four officers killed: Captain Smith, H.M.'s 71st; Lieut. Jones, H.M.'s 71st; H. H. Chapman, H.M.'s 101st; W. F. Mosley, H. M.'s 14th N. I. Total casualties, 119.

LAHORE, Nov. 24.

Another severe encounter between our troops and the Sittanees. We have lost three officers and eighty men, and five officers wounded.

LAHORE, Nov. 10.

Since writing yesterday intelligence has been received of another severe encounter between our troops and the rebel tribes on the frontier, in which we have sustained a further loss of one officer, Captain Davidson, and some fifty men killed, and an officer, Lieutenant Pitcher, and upwards of eighty men wounded.

The conflict came off on the 12th, by the enemy making repeated attacks on our outlying pickets, and continued for about seventeen hours; during the whole of which time the rebels fought with the greatest ferocity and determination, while our native troops, on the contrary, displayed anything but pluck. Indeed, their behaviour was such that but for the timely aid of H.M.'s 101st our force must, to a certainty, have suffered an ignominious defeat, and have been compelled to retreat with the loss of our guns and ammunition.

Letters from the field state the encounter between the 101st and the enemy to have been a most deadly one, and it was with the greatest difficulty the tribes were defeated—if, indeed, it can be termed a defeat, in which our side lost considerably more than the enemy. The firing could be distinctly heard from Pannoonlee, seven miles distant, where we have established a reserve; and the whole of the succeeding day and Sunday were taken up in bringing the wounded into the hospital at that place for treatment.

It is, I think, apparent, from the foregoing account, which is strictly correct, that the native portion of our troops with the force are of little, if any, service; that they will not face the enemy without being well seconded by Europeans; and yet the authorities persist in saying we have already too many Europeans with the force; that they are greatly in the way, and they don't need any more. If anything in the world is calculated to rid people of such infatuation it must be one or two defeats such as that which took place on the 12th and 13th inst.

ANNOBAM, Nov. 17.

On the 11th the enemy attacked the 1st P. I. and "Guides," under Colonel Wilde, of the latter corps, but were repulsed with great loss, only two men being killed on our side. On the 13th they attacked again at 3 A.M.; the fight lasted till 2 P.M. They had a great number killed, but we lost twenty-two killed, besides Captain Davidson, 2nd in command 1st P.I., and forty wounded, including Lieutenant Pitcher, adjutant of the same corps. It is said that the Bunneyers have replied to Colonel Taylor's (the Commissioner of Peshawar) proposals, in few words, to the effect that we "must leave their country, or they'll make us."

DR. DUFF.

At a meeting held at Bishop's Palace, Calcutta, on the 21st of September, in order to consider the best mode of doing honour to the Rev. Dr. Duff, it was resolved:—

—That the Memorial to Dr. Duff be a Hall to be erected near the new buildings for the University and Presidency College, to be devoted to meetings and lectures on Christian subjects, and to philanthropic and benevolent objects of a cognate character; the purposes to which it is to be applied to be always determined by the authority of five trustees, nominated in the first instance by Dr. Duff, and afterwards self-elected, according to rules laid down by him; and that in these trustees the property shall be vested."

Chairman: Lord Bishop of Calcutta.

Vice-Chairman: The Hon. W. S. Seton Karr.

Members: The Hon. Sir. C. E. Trevelyan, Hon. Sumbhonnath Pundit, and thirty other gentlemen.

Secretaries: Rev. Dr. Mullens, H. W. J. Wood, Esq., and Baboo Khetter Mohun Chatterjee.

Treasurer: J. H. Fergusson, Esq.

We have been requested to co-operate in the object of the above resolution. We do so both as a duty and as a privilege. Even by those who are not personally acquainted with him, Dr. Duff must be esteemed highly for his work's sake. A personal acquaintance with the man, an acquaintance with the spirit and with the zeal with which he has performed his work, greatly enhances the privilege of co-operating to do him honour. His work, extending over a third of a century, although wrought chiefly in Calcutta, has given its fruits to all India. India acknowledges her obligations to this humble, earnest man; and no region of the country will be willing to be exempted from taking part in the national duty of doing him honour. If that is the true idea of power which makes it productive and efficient in its sphere, and for its ends, India never possessed a man who had more working power than Alexander Duff. And as in such a case there is no demonstration of having without the using, as the right tenure of all beneficent power is its use—we can most truly say of this man that his force has ever been harnessed to the weight it was made to draw. Dr. Duff has never been a man of extraordinary physical power. He has not excelled other men in bone and brawn: his strength has repeatedly broken down under his arduous labours; but he has as often recruited the former and returned heartily to the latter. He never possessed any power derived from birth, and blood, and place: never wielded an influence from having stood high on a heap of ancestral bones, or from having entered the social scale on the loftiest level. He never possessed power derived from wealth; his going out and coming in never carried with it the presence of a peer of this new order of nobility, whose redoubtable force is everywhere acknowledged amongst men. He has possessed a power of a loftier type. When man comes in contact with man, and strength is measured against strength, intellectual power, more than all other advantages yet signalled, is real power. He has possessed this power in an extraordinary degree. He has possessed, moreover, a truer and better kind of power. What man in India has ever exercised a greater moral power than Alexander Duff. This over-awing power, which touches nothing that is material, yields no visible weaponry, and yet is stronger than any or all the might of nature, is the power of truth, the power of love—that love glowing in the human heart, that truth believed and echoed from the human lips. This is the power that has asserted its supremacy in him. He has taken strong hold of his age and of his adopted country, because he worked by this power for their good. Let Bombay show its appreciation of such a man. Let us contribute our part towards the Monumental Hall which is to commemorate his name in the city of his life-long labours.—Times of India.

OFFICIAL OPENING OF THE FIRST LINE OF THE INDIAN BRANCH RAILWAY COMPANY.

On the 11th November the Nulhatee and Jeagunge line of railway, the first constructed by Mr. J. E. Wilson, of the Indian Branch Railway Company, was formally opened for traffic by his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, who came down from Bhagnipore for the purpose. A large party left Calcutta by special train at 8.10 A.M., and reached Nulhatee at 1.30, after a run, excluding stoppages, at the average rate of forty-five miles an hour. Nulhatee is a station of the East Indian Railway, 145½ miles from Calcutta. Hence to Azimgunge, on the Bhagurutte, one of the three great branches of the Ganges which forms the Hooghly, the branch line runs for twenty-seven miles along the ordinary road. Jeagunge is on the opposite side of the river, a few miles from Moorsshedabad. The half-way station is Bokhara, which was reached from Nulhatee at the rate of twenty-six miles an hour, though the railway is constructed for a speed of twelve miles. The special train consisted of one of the new light engines, designed by Mr. Wilson and constructed in Paris, a large third-class carriage fitted for 200 passengers, but finely fitted up as a saloon, and an open carriage resembling the American cars. At two o'clock a party of sixty gentlemen sat down to tiffin in the Bhokara station, which is constructed of corrugated iron, nicely painted. Mr. Wilson was supported on his right by the Lieutenant-governor and by Mr. Montresor, the Commissioner of Burdwan; on his left by Mr. Schaleh, C.S., the Mayor of Calcutta. Captain Williams represented the Public Works Department of the Government of India, Messrs. Roberts and Bachelor the East Indian Railway, and Mr. F. Prestage the Eastern Bengal Railway. Several engineers were present, all interested in Mr. Wilson's improvements. In proposing the health of Mr. Wilson, and success to the Indian Branch Railway Company, the Lieut.-governor pronounced the railway a success, and contrasted its cost of £1,000 a mile, excluding the road, with the £19,000 a mile expended on the heavy line of the East India Railway. His Honour looked forward to the time when the great trunk system of railways would be fed by numerous branch lines like the present. The toast was received with cheers, and Mr. Wilson briefly replied. After tiffin, Mr. Fisk Williams, the photographer, took two or three pictures of the engine, the train, and the party present. The train returned to Nulhatee at 5 P.M. Leaving that station at 5.45, the Lieut.-governor and party reached Calcutta at 10.40 by special train, having stopped half an hour at Burdwan for dinner. The day, which was wet and gusty in Calcutta, was glorious on the plains of Beerbhoom. All those who were present at the opening expressed their gratification at the success of what may have been previously considered a doubtful experiment. The line will be opened to the public, at the same rates as prevail on the East Indian line, in a few days, as soon as it has been officially inspected by the Public Works Department. Passengers will be booked through, we believe, just as if it were part of the East Indian line. The railway is being continued for eight miles to Bogwaingola, on the Ganges, and thence there is every probability that a light line will run direct north to Darjeeling through Dinagepore.—Friend of India, Nov. 19.

THE COTTON CROP AND RAVAGES OF LOCUSTS IN NORTHERN INDIA.

We regret that we are compelled to give so unfavourable an account of the cotton crop and the ravages of the locusts in Northern India. Though 23½ per cent. more of area was sown this year than last, the unfortunate alternations of deluge and drought have so stunted or rotted the plant, that the official estimate makes the out-turn the same, or 8,028,000 lbs. But, in spite of the sad tale of loss, it is gratifying to learn that the high prices have so directly influenced the peasantry. Steadily did the price rise during the year. In January it was 4½d. the lb. in the western, and 7½d. per lb. in the eastern districts. But when the sowing season came on the former price rose to 6d. and the latter to 9d. the lb. In the non-producing districts of Gorakhpore and Gonda to the north the price rose to 10½d. and 12d. for the cotton which used to go there from the Doab was attracted to Bengal for exportation. The Board of Revenue recommend the establishment at Allahabad of a depot for the sale of good cotton seed. The Manchester Cotton Supply Association should know that this complaint is made:—"There was, during the past year, no means available to the board of procuring any kind of seed for those who felt inclined to make the trial." Dharwar seed and Dr. Forbes' cotton gins should be introduced; and because the offer of prizes had failed to do good in Madras, it by no means follows that the same disappointing result would mark the experiment in the north-west. Cotton screws have been set up in Allyghur, and they have been for some time working at Agra, Cawnpore, Allahabad, and Mirzapore. The trade in the new crop has begun already. In some of the remote corners the natives are perplexed to account for the extraordinary demand and prices; and believe that we are carrying off the cotton to Calcutta to convert it by some process of alchemy into the precious metals and add it to our coinage! The detailed result in divisions is seen in the following figures:—

The damage done by the immense swarms of locusts to the cotton is confined to only a few localities, but they have swept off whole fields of indigo in Eastern Bengal. The locusts in their flight, which began at Sindh, have reached Cherapoonjee, the hill sanitarium of far eastern Assam, and threaten Burmah and China. The cold season benumbs the swarms, but a few months may see young broods arise to do far more damage than their predecessors.—Friend of India.

OUR NUMBERS.

In the first week of April, 1861, an attempt was made to take a census of all British-born subjects in India. Government did not care to issue instructions on the subject, and the census was the laughing-stock of the public. The Registrar-General has not yet condescended to inform us of the results, and they are not of much interest, especially as next year will probably see a legal census taken of the population of the presidency cities. But the Sanitary Commission has published the figures and has attached importance to them. Their report says:—"The English population in India, according to the returns of the several Governments, amounted to 125,945; consisting of an army of 84,083 strong, its wives and children, and people in civil life, including the civilians in the public service. Allowing for any defects in the returns, it is evident that, exclusive of the army, the population would not fill one English county town; and including the army, it would be less than the population of the London parish of Marylebone." Of the whole 22,556 are said to represent non-military men and 19,306 their wives. Who that has seen Calcutta and Bombay, or looked at their annual directories, will believe that in all India there are only 22,556 civilians and their 19,306 wives? The civil, medical and ecclesiastical services among them make 2,500 men. This would leave only 20,000 non-official and uncovenanted official Englishmen in India. In the census of 1852 the uncovenanted European males amounted to 2,242 in Bengal and Bombay alone. Allow for Madras and an increase, and this would leave only 17,000 as the strength of all non-official British born men in India!

In Bengal alone the Colonisation Committee stated the number of non-official males before the mutiny at 19,500. And how great the increase since then?—in railway and public works establishments, in tea, jute and sugar factories, and in mercantile houses. The Calcutta directory of 1861 gives the names of about 11,500 persons, chiefly British-born adult males, and all Christians; and the Bombay directory gives 5,000 such names. Of tea, coffee and indigo planters alone in India there are more than 1,000, whilst last year there were 5,000 Europeans and their descendants in British Burmah. We believe that a legal, and therefore obligatory, census will show that the number of British-born subjects in India, excluding the army, is not under 50,000 adults, and thrice that number including families. The absurd census of 1861 showed that of the 19,306 "British-born women and girls" in India 9,773 were twenty years of age and upwards, including 7,570 wives, 1,148 widows, and 1,001 unmarried women: 788 wives under the age of twenty make the number of wives of English origin, under the age of forty-five, to be 7,626 scattered all over British India. If these figures were in the remotest degree reliable they would be interesting. There are certainly not 1,148 widows and 1,001 unmarried marriageable women British-born subjects in India, and these numbers probably represent European women. When the census was taken no distinction was made, even Hindoo and Mussulman servants were entered, and as a rule non-official British-born subjects gave in no return to the policemen who went about displaying those which they had received. It is important on every ground, political, social and commercial, that Christians in India should know their numbers, rate of increase, wealth and mortality; and it is quite as easy to ascertain this every year in India as in the youngest colony.—Friend of India, Oct. 22.

THE BHORE GHAUT INCLINE.

We are indebted to the Engineer's Journal for some interesting details of that great work, the Bhore Ghaut Incline. Bombay is cut off from the interior by a range of mountains extending from Goa to Broach, and rising to an altitude of 5,000 feet. But it is not so much the loftiness of the Syhadrees that has hitherto proved an almost impassable barrier to trade as their extreme abruptness, which seemed to defy all attempts at roadmaking. All difficulties, however, have been overcome by the boldness and perseverance of Messrs. Berkley and West, the railway engineers. And yet so sharp and sudden is the rise from the plains that, "in the course of a journey of less than an hour in duration and 15½ miles in length, the traveller will ascend to a height of 1,832 feet, and will have passed over the greatest incline in the world." The highest gradient is 1 in 37, the lowest 1 in 330, and the average about 1 in 48. Of tunnels there are 26, the shortest being 29 yards, and the longest 137. The nature of the labour required for these operations may be judged from the fact that the tunnels were nearly all excavated by mining the hard trap rock. The cuttings amount to 2,067,738 cubic yards, one alone having contained 113,000; the greatest depth is eighty feet. The embankments, again, amount to 2,453,308 cubic yards, the heaviest being set down at 364,300. The viaducts and vaulting arches are 1,330 yards in length, and the retaining walls 3,640, the latter being for the most part from 30 to 40 feet in height, and built of substantial rubble masonry. As a sample of the difficulties that were encountered—but only to be overcome—we are told that "after an unusually heavy fall of rain about 40,000 cubic yards of the hill side supporting one of the embankments slid off the face of the rock upon which it rested, and became stationary about 60 feet below the level of its former position. On another occasion more than 100,000 cubic yards were displaced by the benching being thrust out by the weight of embankment. During the last two working seasons the average number of workmen employed was upwards of 30,000, of whom 10,822 were drillers, and 2,659 masons. The rates of wages varied from 1½ annas to 1½ rupees per diem for all classes below the grade of foreman. But though the actual price of labour may not have been very high, the service was decidedly popular, owing to the liberal arrangements for the comfort of the people. "A provision, either in time or money, was allowed for building huts; a liberal supply of water was furnished at the contractor's expense; bazaar rates were equalised over the whole contract; regular payment of wages was made, under the personal superintendence of the chief managers, into the hands of each individual employed; strict inquiry was made into all complaints of the workmen; and, finally, there were no fines, except dismissal, but a system of prompt rewards for extra exertion." Eleven years have been consumed in the construction of this remarkable work, which has cost in money no less than £1,100,000. Of Mr. Berkley, who designed and partly executed the Bhore Ghaut Incline, the directors gratefully remark:—"Though he is gone, his works remain, and of him they silently speak, and proclaim his great genius more eloquently and more impressively than any language."—Hurkaru.

MISCELLANEOUS.

RAJPOOTANA.—Considerable uneasiness prevails in Rajpootana. It is ascribed to the disturbed condition of the neighbouring principality of Bhawalpore. This State has been the scene for some time past of plunder, rapine and murder, from the throne to the cottage. Many of its more peaceable inhabitants, anxious to obtain something like security of life and property, are emigrating in large numbers to Mooltan; and as many of the emigrants are tradesmen, and silk weavers, they are an acquisition to Mooltan, adding to its wealth and manufactures.—Times of India, Nov. 29.

GHAZEEPORE, Nov. 8.—A most melancholy occurrence took place here on the 27th ult. At about 11 p.m. the opium godown took fire. It is rumoured that about one and a-half lacs worth of opium is burnt, besides the building. It was a good thing that the agent, with the assistance of the police, exerted himself in time to put out the fire, which otherwise would have destroyed the factory godowns to a great extent. A man was lately caught in the Goruckpore district supposed to be Siddha Singh, a notorious rebel leader, who last year caused great disturbances in the Balleah sub-division. The identity of the man is doubtful; respectable witnesses have been called for, and almost all of them deny his identity. The case is still pending before the magistrate, and the result of the inquiry shall be soon communicated to you. Mr. B. Sayte has taken charge of the judge's office of this district from the 6th inst., and Mr. J. R. Best, who was officiating, has been appointed magistrate and collector of Azimgurh.—Delhi Gazette.

THE ASSAM TEA COMPANY, we are happy to state, have terminated this season's operations with one and a half million pounds of tea, showing a very large increase on last year's out-turn. They have also disposed of an immense quantity of tea-seed. The Central Cachar Company have also been highly successful, and have closed with one hundred thousand pounds of tea gathered in prime condition. In fact, all the accounts received from the various Tea Companies are eminently favourable, and foreshadow the good time that is coming for those who have invested their money in such rational undertakings. Notwithstanding the apprehensions at one time entertained, in consequence of the excessive drought, neither their present crops nor their future prospects have suffered any material injury.

SUTTEE PENALTIES.—Our Monghyr correspondent writes to say that the Session Judge of Bhaugulpore has sentenced the individuals implicated in the suttee case of Behar in the manner following:—Three persons (the relatives of the woman who became suttee) who burnt the corpse, to transportation for life. One person who is said to have reproached the suttee on her getting out of the pile and trying to escape, to transportation for ten years. One man who was a bystander, but who, being a zemindar, did not rescue the woman, to two years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100. Six other bystanders, also zemindars, do., fine of Rs. 1,000 each. The last eight persons are petty landholders of adjoining villages. These zemindars urged that in the first place they were not present at the time when the suttee took place, that the case was got up by an indigo planter, and that as the crime did not occur in their illaka they were not responsible; but the Judge did not believe their first plea, and with regard to the second he ruled that all zemindars are so liable. The sentences passed are considered by every one here to be too severe. The sentence formerly passed by the late Nizamut Adawlut in similar cases did not exceed six months' imprisonment without labour, as would appear from the Nizamut reports. The majority of the people of this part of the country are an ignorant set; in fact, education has made little or no progress among them, and they know very little of laws and regulations. It was only necessary to make such a punishment as would have, without being too severe, convinced them that the civilised laws of our rulers would not tolerate such an evil practice, whatever religious merit the natives might attach to it.—Hindoo Patriot, Nov. 9.

CALCUTTA SHARE BROKERS.—With sincere gratification we have heard that there is a movement on foot among the Calcutta share brokers to define their position and weed out all unworthy members from their circle. It was at first proposed to establish a sort of stock exchange, but this project, we believe, will not be carried out, as a better arrangement happens to have been suggested. The Chamber of Commerce, it seems, is willing to extend its mantle to this now influential and important branch of the commercial community. As it is no longer possible or desirable to ignore the Calcutta brokers altogether, as members of the mercantile world, it has been wisely decided to recognise their high intelligence and respectability, and offer the right hand of fellowship. We do not pretend to have any knowledge of the arrangement that is contemplated, but we take it for granted that both bill and share brokers will, with few exceptions, join the Chamber and be eligible for election to the committee, conforming themselves to the written and unwritten code of commercial honour and usage. We congratulate those gentlemen on thus establishing themselves on a proper footing, and on adopting the most effectual means of commanding the respect and confidence of their constituents by showing that they respect themselves.—Hurkaru.

COUNTERFEITING COINS IN THE HOUSE OF CORRECTION.—At the Police court on last Saturday a rather singular case of counterfeiting coins was reported to the northern division magistrate, in his capacity as Acting Commissioner of Police, as having occurred in the House of Correction. It appeared that one of the convicts had been engaged, during the hours he was off work, in making two anna pieces, and had in his possession a complete apparatus for that purpose. How he came to be possessed of it is not known at present, and it would be unreasonable to assume that the peons attached to the place must have procured it for him. Upon Mr. Littlemore, the superintendent of the division, receiving information that one of the convicts was detected making coins, he called on Mr. Kennedy, the acting superintendent of the House of Correction, with a view of eliciting full particulars on the subject. Mr. Kennedy, however, declined to enlighten his brother officer in any way. In reporting the case to the acting commissioner, Mr. Littlemore appeared to be quite ignorant about the matter, and on being asked to account for the same, brought to the notice of his Worship the reception he received from Mr. Kennedy, who, on being asked to explain the strange mode of proceeding adopted by him, replied that he did not think he was bound to give Mr. Littlemore any information; he intended to report the matter himself to the head of the police.—Hurkaru.

CARRIAGE is becoming scarce on the frontier, and a mule train of some four hundred baggage animals has been organised at Lahore and Umritsur, under the direct instructions of the Military Secretary to Government, and will proceed to the scene of action at once. Terms were so liberal that there was no difficulty in making up the number at once.

THE CALCUTTA SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.—The first report of the Calcutta Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals—founded on the 19th of March, 1862—proves to demonstration how necessary it was that such a society should be established in this city. In the course of the twelve months terminating on the 10th May, no fewer than 506 convictions were obtained for cruelty to animals. Of this number upwards of 400 cases related to the torture of bullocks by means of the barbarous yoke now in general use. With a view to put an end to the sufferings of these wretched animals from this cause, the society has offered a prize of Rs. 100 for the best collar or harness for draught bullocks, shown at the forthcoming Agricultural Exhibition. Four-wheeled conveyances are also strongly recommended instead of the badly-balanced two-wheeled conveyances which now press so heavily upon the backs of the galled and jaded cattle. It might also be as well if steps were taken to prevent the drivers from sitting on the loaded carts of the Municipal Commissioners, and of other employers of similar vehicles. For nearly two months after the first formation of this excellent society two European agents were constantly engaged in distributing amongst the drivers and owners of bullocks and carriage horses papers in the Bengalee language, explaining the tenour and meaning of the law, and likewise furnishing a few simple instructions for the treatment of wounds. In that space of time the agents registered the names and numbers of the drivers of upwards of 700 wounded bullocks and horses, and yet, as we have already stated, 500 convictions were obtained in the course of a single year. Unfortunately, as the law now stands, the owners of these ill-used animals are without the jurisdiction of the city magistrates, as they live for the most part in the suburbs. It is probable, however, that an amendment will be introduced to deprive those who are really the most to blame of their present impunity, and it is only by making them personally answerable for the negligence and cruelty of their servants that they will ever be brought to co-operate heartily with this society. Notwithstanding this obstruction and the novelty of its operations, the society has already done much good, and will act still more efficiently during the current year if provided with sufficient funds. In this, as in all other movements, money is indispensable, though no very large amount may be required—not more, indeed, than might easily be collected if every one who could spare it contributed a gold mohur.

COLONEL PRIMROSE.—In spite of the reports circulated by some of the Calcutta papers, to the effect that Colonel Primrose, the Adjutant-General of the Madras Army, will be ordered immediately to join his regiment (H.M.'s 43rd) proceeding to New Zealand on field service, we believe we are correct when we state that it has been decided otherwise, and that Colonel Primrose will remain at his post as Adjutant-General, and will not be obliged to join his regiment. Such we do not say is the wish of the Colonel himself; but it is the wish of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, and perhaps the Colonel is bound to obey.—Madras Athenaeum, Nov. 14.

RUNNING A-MUCK.—The following is from the Singapore Free Press:—"A frightful case of 'amok' took place at Salatiga, on the Island of Java, in September last. The Regent of Salatiga, Raden Tumengong Prawiro Kusumo, on the 21st and 22nd had been celebrating the marriages of two of his daughters, and everything had passed off smoothly, when on the morning of the 23rd, about half-past six o'clock, the brother-in-law of the Regent, named Raden Prawiro Direjo, who was Coffee Mantri of Tengaren, suddenly began to stab every person he met in the palace. The Regent being disturbed by the uproar, came from his sleeping place to see what was the matter, when he was at once stabbed in the heart by the amok and fell down dead. The brother of the Regent then ran the amok through the back with a spear, and he was soon despatched. Besides the Regent, nine of his relations and followers were killed, and six were more or less severely wounded. The amok was much given to the use of opium, and had at one time lost a valuable employment under Government on account of his indolence and carelessness. Through the intercession of the Regent he had received another appointment, but he was not satisfied with this, and appears to have conceived an ill-will towards his relation for not supporting his claims more strongly."

A NATIVE, A RESIDENT OF TONK, a Mahomedan Moulvie, of great repute for learning, was employed by the Nawab to read and refute a work of Mr. Pfander's. Instead of refuting it the man became convinced, came to Agra, and was baptised. He returned to Tonk to fetch his family, but while there was imprisoned by the Nawab and tortured. He refused to recant, but managed to send information to his friends at Agra of how he was treated. They applied to the Governor-General's agent, but he refused to interfere. Nothing has been heard for some time of the man, and there are grave reasons for fearing that his life has been sacrificed to his religion. He had virtually become a British subject, be it recollected, for he had left his native place, and only went back to it to fetch away his family.—Delhi Gazette, Nov. 17.

THE DEFICIENT SUPPLY OF WOOD is fast becoming a matter of serious national importance. In various parts of the country railways are at a standstill for want of sleepers for the permanent way, and the daily and increasing scarcity of fuel throughout the Deccan and Goozerat forms the subject of a resolution recently published by the Bombay Government. To provide against this want the Conservator of Forests is directed to take up tracts of good soil in favourable situations, in which the seed of babool and other trees useful for firewood should be sown. The supply thus to be created will be very gradual, but the measure will eventually prove highly beneficial to the country.—Friend of India.

REDUCTION OF FARES TO OFFICERS BY THE FRENCH STEAMERS.—We learn that the much talked of reduction of fares by the Messageries Imperiales steamers to officers in the English army and navy is a mistake after all, and arose from a misunderstanding by the agents of an obscurely worded order. The reduction only applies to officers of forces serving in the field in conjunction with French troops or naval squadrons co-operating with French ships, consequently the Spanish forces in Cochin China are the only allies who benefit at present by the reduction. We can only congratulate those Indian officers who have fortunately benefited by the mistake and express our sympathy with others who expected to do so.

DEATH OF DR. J. BROWNE.—We announce with regret the death of Dr. J. Browne, first assistant-surgeon, Presidency General Hospital, which occurred, rather unexpectedly, yesterday morning, at his quarters, contiguous to the hospital. The deceased officer, who dies much and extensively regretted, and who was possessed of the highest professional attainments, was interred last evening in the military burying-ground with the usual honours.—Englishman, Nov. 14.

THE MESSAGERIES IMPERIALES.—Whatever shortcomings of the Messageries Imperiales Company's ships in these seas may be, three can scarcely be any fault to find with the speed with which they generally accomplish their several voyages. Amongst recent instances we notice that the Erymanthe, which left Garden Reach on the morning of the 3rd instant, arrived at Madras on the night of the 5th, thus making the run in sixty-four hours from port to port, giving an average speed of a little over twelve knots an hour.—Englishman, Nov. 7.

DEATH OF A MISER AT SERAMPORE.—The Phoenix notices the death of a miser at Serampore, a place that is acquiring a bad reputation for the development of eccentricity of character. The deceased was a Dr. Wolley, formerly in the Company's service, who was invalided about 1815 or 1816, and has since lived at Serampore apparently in a state of abject poverty. After his death, however, Government securities and bank receipts to the value of Rs. 70,000 were found hidden away under a quantity of old clothes and rubbish.

A NEW OFFICIAL GAZETTE.—We are to have a new official Gazette from the 1st January next, the old Calcutta Gazette will become the organ of the Bengal Government only, a limited field wherein Mr. Beadon may disport himself, and another Gazette will be published called the Gazette of India, containing all official matters relating to the Indian empire at large.

H.M.'s 48TH REGIMENT is expected, after all, to remain at Lucknow for another year. These sudden changes are, to say the least, exceedingly inconsiderate, as both men and officers naturally dispose of whatever is not conveniently portable as soon as they are warned to hold themselves ready to march elsewhere. They will now be compelled to re-purchase many of their own things at a considerable pecuniary sacrifice.

COMPILER OF POST-OFFICE ACCOUNTS.—The question of abolishing the office of Compiler of Post-office Accounts, as proposed by Sir Charles Trevelyan, has been finally disposed of in the Governor-General's Council. One of the members of the said council strongly objected to the measure, and is said to have observed that if the English system of accounts and work be introduced in all other public offices, why should it not be done in the Postal Department? In the General Post-office in England there is a separate office of accounts in connection with the department, and the same system prevails in France. Under these circumstances the Compiler's office should be permitted to continue as before.

BREAKFAST IN CALCUTTA AND LUNCH IN BOKHARA.—We learn from our Serampore contemporary that it is now possible to breakfast in Calcutta and lunch in Bokhara, which at first sight seems a considerably greater feat than dining in London and breakfasting in Paris. On a more careful perusal of the paragraph, however, it will be seen that the allusion applies to a small station on some new line, which is said to have got opened at last.

CINCHONA PLANTS.—During the month of September last 667 cinchona plants were set out in the Government plantations on the Neilgherries, raising the total to 66,622. The increase by propagation was 15,874, making the total number 2,33,476. The average growth of the eleven plants set out by the Governor and other gentlemen on the 30th August, 1862, was only 1 9-11th inch, or 3 2-11th inches less than in the preceding month, owing to the continuing rains. Sir Wm. Denison's plant has now attained the height of 8 1/2 inches, but the tallest plant is 9 feet 6 inches in height, and measures 9 1/2 inches round the stem at six inches from the ground. The two plants cut down in March have thrown out shoots above twelve inches long.

CONTEMPLATED CHANGES IN THE PUNJAB.—The following changes, according to the Delhi Gazette, are about to take place in the Punjab:—"Mr. Philip Egerton leaves Kangra for England, and it is rumoured that Major Young and Mr. R. Egerton, who vacates his officiating appointment as Commissioner at Lahore, are candidates for this favourite deputy commissionership. Mr. D. FitzPatrick leaves Kangra for Delhi, Mr. W. B. Irvin is on his way from Kooloo to England, Mr. Harris proceeds as chaplain from Umritsur to Sealkote, vice Symmons, who goes to Nynce Tal, Mr. D'Aguilar, of Landour, taking his place at Umritsur. The return of Major James and Mr. Brandreth, Commissioners, will cause considerable change on the officiating ranks."

SURGEON-MAJOR GALLWEY, heretofore in medical charge of H. M.'s 90th L.I. at Meerut, has been appointed Surgeon of the Depot Hospital of H.M.'s troops at Kidderpore, and has left Meerut to join. It is to be hoped that at last this institution has got a permanent medical officer, instead of continuing to be, as it has been for the last few years, a kind of temporary abiding-place for all new-comers and hangers-on.

CAMP OF EXERCISE.—An interesting feature in the movements of the Camp of Exercise at Lahore, will be the employment of a large pontoon train, which, the Englishman informs us, had been ordered up from Roorkee, and by which pontoon bridges during the evolutions will be thrown across the Ravee.

UMBALLA, Nov. 21.—If the present exodus of troops from this station continues, I fear the pleasure we have been anticipating from the races next month will, in a great measure, be a failure. The 7th Dragoon Guards have received orders to march for the frontier, and they will leave here as soon as carriages can be procured for the really necessary equipage they are to take with them, all superfluities being entirely dispensed with; such are the orders they have received. A detachment of Sappers, en route to the force at the scene of war marched this morning towards their destination. The 21st Hussars will march into this station on Monday the 23rd, and proceed at once for the camp of exercise at Meean Meer, unless recent orders alter their movements. It is, I believe, the intention to leave the depot of the 21st Hussars here, whilst the regiment remains at Lahore; so that with them and the depot of the 7th Dragoons those who have to look after them will have no easy task to perform.

THE AMALGAMATION GRIEVANCE COMMITTEE.—We hear that Colonel North, the President of the Amalgamation Grievance Committee, has written out to his regiment saying that all the lawyers are agreed as to the illegality of Sir C. Wood's Amalgamation, and that the result they will endeavour to bring about is, that all who have joined the staff corps or general service should be allowed the option of becoming locals again, and steps will be given for those who prefer remaining so as to stop all supersession.—Delhi Gazette, Nov. 12.

WANT OF MEDICAL OFFICERS IN THE INDIAN ARMY.—If the Horse Guards and the Military Medical Department in England are badly off for medical officers and candidates for service in the army, the authorities in this country, or at least in this presidency, are, if possible, much worse off, there being positively and literally not a single medical officer available in case of emergency, and many appointments taking care of themselves as best they can. Over eighty medical officers are now urgently required, and not one is forthcoming; and it is in this state of affairs that the Royal service asked, a short time ago, for a loan, or a present, of some fifty assistant-surgeons from the Indian list. They might as well have asked for fifty astronomers. The situation is really becoming serious, especially to the servants of the Government residing at out-stations with their wives and families, who are left, as regards medical attendance, in a condition disgraceful to the administration, but for which those governing the medical department are in no way culpable or responsible, as they cannot give what they have not got.—Englishman.

THE 15TH N.I. left Lucknow a few days ago, reached Benares on the 1st Nov., and were to resume their march on the 3rd, en route to their destination at Dorunda, where they are to relieve the 35th N.I.

A VERY MARKED ATMOSPHERIC PHENOMENON was observed in the Umritsur district on the morning of the 7th November, when a large mass of clouds measuring some miles from north to south passed over from east to west in one solid mass, leaving the sky behind all but clear. The inference was that squally weather had been experienced to the north, and such turned out to be the case, as hail and snow to a considerable depth are reported to have fallen in the mountains north of Rawul Pindie on the morning of the same day.

THE MARINE DEPARTMENT of the Government Service is at last virtually abolished, the present and last Controller, Captain J. Rennie, going home on a consolidated pension of £1,000 a year, well earned by a long and valuable series of services, afloat and ashore, in peace and in war. Any work of the department which may remain, or continue, to be done will be henceforth performed by the Master Attendant, with, we believe, an increased salary and establishment.

THE 17TH REGIMENT N.I., or the old Loyal Forbearers, under command of Lieut.-colonel J. C. Jones, have left Bareilly en route to Bhaugpore, and were mustered at Cawnpore on Nov. 2. The men were to resume their march on or about Nov. 4.

NEW ASSISTANT ADJUTANT-GENERAL.—We understand that Major F. J. Nelson, of the staff corps, and Brigade Major at Benares, is removed to the Adjutant-general's department, and comes down to the Presidency to take up the appointment of Assistant Adjutant-general of the division in Fort William, in succession to Lieut.-colonel S. Richards, appointed by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief to the command of the 31st N.I., at Barrackpore, as announced by us some days ago. Native Infantry commands will, apparently, now become popular under the new rates of pay and allowances; and, if so, Sir Charles Wood has done wisely and well.—Englishman.

MORADABAD, Nov. 9.—The left wing of the 54th Foot marched this morning en route to their destination, Benares. Some sick and a few time-expired men remain behind of the above wing: the station has a most deserted look, and the European lines are dismal. On dit, two companies 104th Foot from Bareilly, are, it is expected, to come here; if they do, it is just possible they may remain for a couple of months, as the 40th wing have not marched yet from Cawnpore; there does not seem to be much hurry about it either, as they are to be inspected on the 9th instant.

DR. W. B. BEATSON, who has officiated as Surgeon to the Governor-General from the date of his Excellency's leaving the presidency until Dr. A. Macrae's nomination to the appointment of Surgeon to the Viceroy, does not accept the post of Civil Surgeon at Simla, but returns to his own appointment as Civil Surgeon of the 24 Pergunnahs, to which he was nominated just previous to Lord Elgin's leaving Calcutta for the North-west Provinces.—Englishman.

LOCUSTS.—On Tuesday evening, Nov. 17th, after sun-down, a large cloud of locusts passed over the town near Ballygunge, taking their course in a south-westerly direction. Apparently the swarm was two or three feet deep, and the noise they made in transit resembled the whirr of a flock of teal. They were fully half an-hour passing over head. Another much larger flight was seen at Raipore, down the river, last week, about a mile long, also going in a south-westerly direction.—Hurkaru.

AKYAB TEA.—We have been favoured with a sample of tea from Akyab, grown on the plantation of Messrs. Macmillan and Co., and can testify to the excellence of its flavour. The area of land in that province suitable for the cultivation of the tea plant is said to be very considerable. It is surprising, therefore, that only one enterprising firm should have availed themselves of the opportunity thus afforded for making a good investment of their capital.—Hurkaru.

ADOPTION.—The Hindoo Patriot is pleased to learn that Lord Elgin, in redemption of Lord Canning's pledge, has sanctioned the adoption of a son and heir by the Rajah of Benares. The ceremony of the presentation of the Government khelat took place on the 30th October, in presence of a numerous assemblage of both Europeans and natives. The Rajah has adopted his nephew.

CAPTAIN SMITH, of the 3rd N.I., has been honourably acquitted of the charges alleged against him, and which were carefully investigated by the Court of Enquiry, appointed at his own request.

DEATH OF A SIKH RAJAH.—Intelligence has been received of the death of the Sikh Rajah of Nabab, a pseudo-independent prince who, guided by wiser counsels than those which prevailed in the durbar of his father, proved a faithful and useful feudatory in the great rebellion.—Delhi Gazette, Nov. 17.

CAPTAIN MAXWELL, Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-general, Meerut Division, has been ordered to Calcutta to take charge of the Quartermaster-general's office there, with a view, it is supposed, of enabling Major Lumsden, the Deputy Quartermaster-general of the Army, to join the army on the frontier, Lieut.-col. Allgood, of that department, having been wounded in action.

THE 26TH P. I. were to be at Fyzabad on the 11th and 12th, Butee on the 10th and 17th, and their destination, Goruckpore, on the 21st of November.

THE 33RD REGIMENT N.I., under the command of Major Langmore, being no longer required to remain at the presidency, has resumed its progress towards the North-west Provinces. The proceedings of the committee assembled in Fort William to inquire into, and report upon, the state of the regiment, have not yet been submitted to the military authorities.

DEATH OF COL. WARBURTON.—We regret to hear of the demise of an old and distinguished artillery officer, Colonel R. Warburton, who died at Jhelum some days since. Of all the accounts furnished us in days of yore of the Cabul captivity, Colonel Warburton's, who was one of the prisoners, used to be the most reliable we received. He for many years commanded the artillery at Umritsur.—Delhi Gazette.

SIMLA, Nov. 9.—The Adjutant-general and the head-quarter's staff of the army left this place for Kalka at the latter end of the past week. The camp of the Commander-in-Chief forms at Kalka, and marches thence on the 11th instant. The general commanding the Sirhind Division leaves Umballah, joins the camp at the foot of the hills, marches with it to Jullunder, and thence to Lahore.

H.M.'s 90TH FOOT and a battery 11th Brigade Artillery have been ordered from Meerut to the frontier. A detachment of the Rifle Brigade was ordered to Meerut from Delhi, but other arrangements have since been made.—Delhi Gazette, Nov. 21.

HALF THE 4TH BENGAL CAVALRY have received orders to march from Julundhur to Lahore at an hour's notice, and started forthwith. They were at Umritsur on the 7th of November.

MESSRS. C. P. HOBHOUSE AND F. R. COCKERELL have been nominated to the Council of the Lieutenant-governor of Bengal for making laws and regulations.—Phoenix, Nov. 12.

THE BANK OF BENGAL raised its rates two per cent. all round on the 10th November.

MADRAS.

CRIMINAL BREACH OF TRUST BY AN APOTHECARY.

Henry William King, late the manager of the medical stores, was indicted before Sir Colley Scotland, on the 6th Nov., at the High Court, Criminal Sessions, for criminal breach of trust. The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Mr. J. B. Norton, Acting Advocate-General and Mr. Mayne as prosecuting counsel, appeared for the Crown, and Mr. James Branson defended the prisoner.

Mr. Norton having briefly addressed the jury for the prosecution, the first witness called was Dr. Meyer, who deposed as follows:—I am Deputy Inspector-General of Hospitals. In October last I was superintendent of the stores. I know the prisoner. He was the manager and had charge of all the medicines and instruments in the stores. The instruments were kept in the strong room. There were two keys to this room; one key I retained and the other the prisoner. Neither key would be of any use in gaining admission without the use of the other. Surgeon-major Barclay is now my successor. The strong room was open during the greater part of the day when Dr. Barclay was present.

Cross-examined.—I remember the deficiency in the nitrate of silver being made up by Mr. King. It was purchased outside. Medicines are procured outside, I presume at a high rate. Subordinates can procure medicines at the stores on indent by paying for the same. The prisoner could obtain anything by applying or indent. I know that there was ill-feeling against the prisoner. Several complaints were made to me, but they did not result in my discovering anything to his detriment. I say that the pocket cases of instruments now produced are Government property, because they have the Government mark, and when first shown me by the police appeared never to have been opened before. Subordinates can purchase articles of this description at the stores. Apothecaries were not searched when they left the stores every day. Mr. King might have signed the pass for instruments and medicines in my absence.

By Mr. Mayne.—He could not do so of his own authority.

Surgeon-Major Barclay deposed.—I am a Surgeon-Major in the Madras Army. On the 6th of October I was superintendent of the medical stores. I usually went there at eleven o'clock, and came away at half-past four. In consequence of information I received, I returned, and found Mr. King standing at the front door. I told him I had heard that he was about to carry away three pocket cases of instruments. I pointed to a palanquin coach standing close to the door; he said it was his. I went up to the conveyance and looking in found three cases of instruments. I took possession of the cases and asked for an explanation. He said they were surplus stores and he did not like to show surplus stores to me, and intended to present them to his friends. I said I would report the circumstance to the head of the department. He said "I will be a ruined man if you do so," and begged to be allowed to put back the cases and say nothing about the matter. I said that that was perfectly impossible. The cases produced are the same. They are Government property.

Cross-examined.—I made no note of the conversation I had with Mr. King. There was no search necessary to find the cases. I found none missing by the books; regarding the instruments, I found several deficiencies. Some might have been returned and reissued without being accounted for in the books. Mr. King, I believe, said a great deal more than what I have stated. He begged of me to forgive him for the sake of his family. He has been, I believe, 30 years in the service of the Government, and intended retiring on a pension.

By Mr. Norton.—I have not the smallest doubts as to the correctness of what I have stated respecting Mr. King.

A lascar employed in the medical stores was called to prove that Mr. King gave him the cases from the strong room, which he placed, according to his directions, on Mr. King's writing table. In cross-examination by Mr. Branson, he said Mr. King, when he ordered him to take the articles into his room, did not tell him to hide them in his cloth. He did it openly. Two other witnesses were called, viz., a writer named Vithenathum Moodelly and Dr. Aitken, but it was not considered necessary to examine them.

The counsel for the defence made an earnest and impressive appeal to the jury on behalf of the prisoner, and his Lordship having summed up, the jury retired, and after a few minutes' consultation, returned a verdict of guilty against the prisoner.

Another jury having been impannelled, the charge against prisoners King and Henry Godbier were gone into; against King the charge was, that of breach of trust in having appropriated to his own use certain bottles of medicine, and against Godbier of aiding and abetting him, and withholding information. The evidence showed that the prisoner had the charge under the medical store-keeper of the medicines at the Military Stores, and these medicines were sent out from England, and that there was generally some surplus sent in with each consignment to make up for deficiencies, and that the bottles produced were surplus stores. That the prisoner had openly told Godbier that he would hand over to him some surplus stores he had, with which the medical storekeeper was acquainted, that he accordingly sent them to Godbier by a lascar in an open basket, and Godbier placed them or had them placed in the utensil room, where they were found.

The jury having retired for a short while, gave a verdict of guilty against both prisoners.

The prisoner King then called several medical gentlemen who gave him a most excellent character, and also handed up to his lordship several written testimonials of character. His lordship very feelingly addressed the prisoner, somewhat in the following terms:—He had been found guilty, and his lordship was deeply grieved to see a man who had occupied such a position and bore such an excellent character for so many years as the prisoner had (one of the written testimonials was from the Marquis of Tweeddale, formerly Governor of Madras, and spoke of the prisoner in the highest terms) placed in such a painful situation, it was such a case as every right thinking man should look at with great pain. He could see the truth of the case. The prisoner had been dealing with surplus stores, and there being no record of these cases he had thought he could securely appropriate, this being a convenient time as a new manager was coming in his place.

He should, in passing sentence, look at the years of the prisoner and his loss of character and position; a man placed in his situation must be suffering great agony of mind, and this was in itself a most severe punishment; still he felt it his duty to pass a severe sentence, and he hoped others similarly situated would take warning. The sentence of the Court would be, that the prisoner be rigorously imprisoned for the space of sixteen calendar months.

On the application of Mr. Branson, the prisoner Henry Godbier was discharged.

THE PRESIDENCY COLLEGE BREACH OF TRUST CASE.

Thomas Gleeson was charged with having committed a breach of trust by appropriating to his own use the sum of Rs. 145-7-7, with which he was entrusted as clerk at the Presidency College, Madras.

The facts as they appeared were briefly these:

On the 15th September it was the prisoner's duty to collect the fees at the college; when collected he ought to have furnished an account of them to the principal, and locked them up in the cash chest, which was in his own room. He did lock up a bag with a tally on it, stating the amount it contained. The following day was a holiday, and for several days prisoner absented himself from the college. The principal began to entertain suspicions that all was not right, so sent for the prisoner, who sent word that he was too ill to come. He then sent for the key of his room, and also the key of the cash chest, and on opening the latter found the bag. Looking at the tally, and being surprised at the smallness of the amount, he went to the prisoner himself and found him in bed, looking ill, demanded his keys, which prisoner at first refused to give, but on going away sent them after him. On examination a small amount besides what was contained in the cash chest was found in the prisoner's desk, but there was still a large deficiency. Prisoner came afterwards and made out a statement, by which he himself proved a deficiency of Rs. 128.15-1. There was an almirah in the room; this had been searched by the principal on the former occasion, and on this occasion, on entering the room, the doors were found partially open. On this circumstance the prisoner sought to build a defence, trying to make it appear that the almirah had been broken open and the missing money abstracted. The principal accounted for the fact of the doors being open, by the fact that on closing and locking the almirah he had not put up the bolts on the doors, and the draught and shaking caused by opening the room door had caused them to open. He tried the same experiment again with the same results.

The prisoner conducted his own defence; and though he had written it out with great care, and it was a very fair attempt, it proved a failure, and he was found guilty, and his lordship sentenced him to rigorous imprisonment for nineteen calendar months.

MISCELLANEOUS.

RAILWAY BETWEEN MADRAS AND BOMBAY.—The proposed line of railway connecting Madras and Bombay by Hyderabad, instead of by Bellary and Moodgul, has been surveyed, and we trust the result will be the sanction of the Imperial authorities to the Hyderabad route. The projected line is to start from a point five miles from Cuddapah, and will cross the Pennaur at Coteleur, and the Kistna opposite Chellmullapad. To this point, 111 miles, gentle curves and light gradients are easily obtainable. The country is covered with cotton, and the finest limestone abounds. To the north of the Kistna, on the way to Hyderabad, the country is hilly, and for the first eighty miles is covered with jungle. In the last twenty-five miles into Hyderabad there is no jungle, but much of the land now lying waste might be cultivated. There is an abundance of gneiss rock, affording excellent building stone for all parts of the line north of the Kistna. The gradients are easier than those of the Madras South-West Line, and they have been obtained without any cutting exceeding eleven feet in depth, or any bank exceeding twenty feet in height. Ten lacs may suffice for the only two large bridges which will be required over the Kistna and the Pennaur. The chief traffic of this line will be the local trade of Hyderabad, Secunderabad, and Cuddapah. In addition to this will be the very important through traffic between Bombay and Madras which will spring up if the English steamers deliver passengers and mails for Madras at Bombay. The total length of the line from Madras to Bombay via Hyderabad will probably be 840 miles, whereas the length of the line via Bellary and Moodgul would not exceed 780 miles; an addition of sixty miles of railway, costing probably £600,000, would therefore be required for the former line. But the local traffic will be so much greater, and the political objects are so important, that the Hyderabad line is in every way preferable. The Nizam is willing to allow the Resident to settle all magisterial cases in which the railway servants might be concerned. —Friend of India.

AN INDIAN "BRADSHAW."—A novel periodical has just been issued in Calcutta, being nothing less than a monthly guide to the means of conveyance by sea, rail, and road throughout India. We take this to be one of the chief "signs of the times." When but a few years ago, historically speaking, we were fighting for existence with Hyder Ali, the Mahratta Confederacy, or even later still with the Sikh impouring, who would have thought that the time was near when the country should be so settled and improved, and so much capital have found its way into profitable exercise, that, not only were a few good roads made, but that steam should carry the people both by land and sea, by river and backwater; and that there should be so many of these improvements that a closely printed book of 100 pages should be filled with the details. The book has not yet reached Madras, but the Calcutta journals speak in high praise of the character and quality of the contents. Its price is extremely low, only eight annas, and ought to ensure for it an extended circulation.—Madras Times.

DEATH OF DR. FLYNN.—The Madras papers record the death of Dr. G. W. Flynn, for many years proprietor of the late Presidency Dispensary. Dr. Flynn was the first East Indian who obtained the degree of Doctor of Medicine from the Madras University.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.—A Mussulman gentleman has, according to the Madras Times, declined a seat in the Legislative Council, on the ground that he was very imperfectly acquainted with the English language.

MADRAS RAILWAY.—Four hundred and forty-seven miles of the Madras Railway are open for traffic; there are forty-seven stations, and the number of persons employed is 7,515, viz., Europeans 176, East Indians 368, and natives 6,969. On the Great Southern of India Railway seventy-nine miles are open, there are thirteen stations, and the number of persons employed is 494, viz., Europeans 19, East Indians 15, and natives 460.

FEMALE WORKSHOPS IN THE ARMY.—The establishment of these institutions in some of the regiments of the European army, though recent, has been found to be very successful in their working. H.M.'s 69th, in Fort St. George, maintains one in connection with the regiment, and, we are told, with great advantage; but on a more extended scale has the experiment been tried by Brigadier-General Grant, commanding the Hyderabad subsidiary force. That officer has, at his own expense, established female workshops in the European corps under his command; and so successful has he found their operation, and advantageous into the bargain, not only pecuniarily to those employed, but also in furnishing occupation to a rather numerous class of females, and thus keeping them away from idleness and all its attendant evils; that, we hear, he has deemed it of sufficient importance to address the authorities on the subject; and, in applying for the requisite materials, &c., with a view to the continuance of the workshops, has at the same time suggested that the measure be introduced into all European corps. But Government have, we are told, declined to comply with Brigadier-General Grant's request, though on what ground we have not learnt. As it is undeniable, however, that institutions such as these are highly beneficial in numerous ways, we doubt not that the Commander-in-Chief, who is known to take a great interest in the welfare of the army under his command, will render every necessary encouragement for their maintenance.—Athenaeum.

BOMBAY.

THE FIRST SYNAGOGUE IN POONA.

The foundation-stone of the new synagogue of the Israelites in the Deccan was laid in Poona on the afternoon of the 15th inst., with great pomp and solemnity. The concourse of spectators was not very large, but there was a goodly sprinkling of the upper circles of Poona society present; and we daresay the minds of the majority of the people who had gathered together to witness the ceremony were carried away to another time, and to a far-off land, when and where the Royalty of Palestine put aside the sceptre to build a temple to the King of kings! Observing all the ceremonies which the Hebrew faith and custom inculcate on such occasions, Mr. David Sassoon—whose name has so frequently appeared in these columns, of late, in connection with lofty deeds—laid down the corner-stone of a building whose majestic spires will, we hope, survive time, and reflect back the rays of the morning, when the Son of Man will come, crowned with the heritage of immortality, to greet all nations, of men—who will then be compelled by the gentle influence of Almighty wisdom to enter into the promised land. Although in a country like this the Israelitish church can only be called the "Tent of David!" yet in reality it will be a fine and substantial building. A large number of the scattered people arrived from Bombay by train, to be present at the ceremony—having been invited to join in the solemnity by the builder and endower of the edifice, Mr. David Sassoon. Before the stone was deposited in its place by Mr. David Sassoon the 122nd and 132nd Psalms were read by the Rev. Mr. Gindill. When the stone had been put down in its position the presiding clergyman read the blessing which is usually pronounced upon her Majesty the Queen, the Prince and Princess of Wales, and all the other members of the Royal family of Great Britain—the same divine invocation having been made in favour of the Viceroy, Sir Bartle Frere, and all to whom the welfare of this vast realm is entrusted. A blessing was also pronounced in the name of the Most High upon the founder and endower of the church, and likewise upon his own family and friends. The ceremony concluded with Mr. Sassoon receiving the congratulations of his friends and the gentlemen who were present. The synagogue will be a very fine building when completed, and will lend an air of taste and beauty to the part of Poona in which it is situated. As respects size, we believe it is equal to the one in Bombay; but the design has been improved, so that it may be in keeping with the general character of the capital of the Deccan.—Deccan Herald, Nov. 18.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MR. J. G. WHITE, having returned from Colaba, and resumed charge of the office of first assistant to the collector and magistrate of Poona, from Mr. C. R. Ovens, the latter gentleman has reverted to second assistant to the collector and magistrate, and accordingly assumed charge of that office from Mr. Macfarlane.—Poona Observer, Nov. 24.

ACCORDING to the Jam-i-Jamshed, Mr. Maclean, editor and proprietor of the Bombay Saturday Review, has purchased the stock and good-will of the Bombay Gazette, from Mr. Cannon, barrister-at-law, for the sum of £12,000. How any man possessed of such a "genteel fortune," as our forefathers were wont to say, can bring himself to invest in Indian journalism is a problem far beyond our humble ability to solve.—Bengal Harkaru, Nov. 20.

DEATH OF LIEUT. FABER.—It is our painful duty to announce the untimely death of Lieut. F. D. Faber, Officiating Assistant Commissioner, Raepore. The unfortunate gentleman committed suicide at his own residence on the 12th instant. The weapon he employed against his life was a pistol, and the self-inflicted wound, though mortal, was not immediately fatal, for he lingered in great agony until the 14th, on which day he died.

Nothing has since transpired which could in any measure account for the melancholy deed, and, as is usual in such cases, it has been attributed to a fit of temporary insanity. The deceased is generally regretted.—Central India Times, Nov. 21.

MR. W. H. HAVELOCK, of the Bombay Civil Service, and political agent of the Southern Maratha country, has been appointed to officiate as Secretary to Government in the Political, Secret, Judicial, Educational, and Persian Departments, during the absence of the Hon. H. L. Anderson as a member of the Council of the Governor-General, and the Hon. A. D. Robertson has been appointed to officiate as Chief Secretary to Government.

MR. ANSTAY.—Mr. Chisholm Anstey returned to Bombay by the last mail, and has already been retained in several suits; so anxious were certain parties in a case now on the files of the High Court to secure the services of the learned gentleman, that a well-known solicitor boarded the Salsette and presented Mr. Anstey with a brief and retaining fee. The other side waited upon him soon after he landed, but were, of course, too late. Notwithstanding the learned gentleman's well-known acuteness, some rascally native "opened his eye" on Friday evening. Mr. Anstey had occasion to call at Treacher's, and while he was inside left a leather brief bag in a shigram outside; when he got into the vehicle again he discovered that some one had made off with the bag, the contents of which would be of very little service to them, being only briefs.—Times of India, Nov. 2.

DR. HAUG.—The Poona community is unworthy of having among them so original a scholar as Dr. Haug. To hear him lecture on "Confucius" in the United Service Institution, only four persons were present.

CEYLON COMPANY.—The half-yearly meeting of the Ceylon Company (Limited) was held at the London Tavern on the 15th inst. The report stated that the business of the company has been largely increased since the last general meeting, and the reports received from the managers in Ceylon and Mauritius are most satisfactory. The accounts show that the amount of profit resulting from the operations of the half-year may be estimated at £7,550, out of which the directors recommend that an interim dividend, at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum on the capital paid on the 30th September be declared, free of income-tax, payable on the 17th instant. The proposed dividend, which will absorb £4,593. 15s., is at the rate of 5s. per share, and if calculated with reference to the dates at which the calls were paid, it will be found to be at about the rate of 12½ per cent. per annum. The above profit result has been submitted to and is confirmed by Mr. Ball, the auditor of the company. The chairman, Mr. Lawford Acland, moved that an interim dividend of 5s. a share be declared payable, free of income-tax, on the 17th inst. The motion was seconded by Mr. Gordon and carried.

CHRISTY'S MINSTRELS IN INDIA.

It is strange how comparatively few servants of the public find their way from this country to the famous City of Palaces. Many of our theatrical and musical stars pass their brightness over other far colonies or settlements; and Charles Kean is now at Melbourne. But Calcutta, though formerly a place of extreme gaiety, and at one time remarkable for the number of its private and public amusements, has for some years past been as remarkable for its dulness. In the dearth of entertainments, perhaps, the following announcement in the advertisement columns of the Bengal Hurkaru was received as good tidings:—

THEY ARE COMING! THEY ARE COMING!!
THE ORIGINAL CHRISTY'S MINSTRELS left London on the 27th September last, and are expected here during this month.

These minstrels, it seems, had already reached Bombay, and the Bombay Gazette gives them the following ardent greeting:—

"It is with great pleasure that we announce the arrival in Bombay, by the Salsette, of the celebrated Christy's Minstrels, whose popular entertainments have crowded the St. James's Hall and other London Concert rooms, at both their afternoon and evening performances for several seasons. To all genuine lovers of simple touching melodies, their so-called negro songs, sung with true pathos and expression as solos, and followed by chorusses, given with the greatest nicety and precision, and an attention to light and shade beyond all praise, will be a musical treat such as has not been hitherto obtainable in Bombay. Nor is the comic element wanting to the Christy Minstrels. The powers of mimicry of some of the little band are great. Their imitations of the most renowned among the Italian opera singers are singularly accurate, and while they cannot fail to amuse every one, are irresistibly ludicrous to those well acquainted with the originals. The Christy Minstrels have gained the hearty approbation of Queen Victoria and the Empress Eugenie, before whom they have had the honour of appearing several times, and we trust now that they are about to make a public appearance in Bombay, our musical amateurs and the community generally, from the governor downwards, will not be behind-hand in giving them a hearty welcome and all the encouragement their spirited enterprise deserves, and that while they remain amongst us they may have a nightly bumper."

But, after all, are these the "original" the "veritable Christy's Minstrels?" A question not easily answered—for a musical company calling themselves the "celebrated and original Christy's Minstrels" announce in the home newspapers of the week that they will commence their London season on the 26th instant, and that they have lately been performing at Glasgow in the presence of his Royal Highness Prince Alfred and his Royal Highness Prince William of Hesse. We are afraid that our countrymen in India must not make too sure that they have got the right band of musicians.

RAILWAY STATIONS IN INDIA.

THE extraordinary comfort and cleanliness of all the arrangements of British railways for the accommodation of passengers must be very striking to our countrymen in India on their return to England, if the description given by newspaper correspondents in Calcutta are not grossly exaggerated. We give the following extract from a letter in the Bengal Hurkaru as a specimen of the complaints of the Indian community as to the character of the retiring-rooms at the stations of the E.I. Railway:—

"The disgustingly dirty state of the retiring rooms at nearly all stations of the E. I. Railway and the almost equally filthy and revolting condition in which the ladies' bath-rooms on both platforms of the Burdwan station are kept, call for the strictures of the press. Station masters should be compelled to see that, at least, the ladies' retiring rooms are cleanly and neatly arranged. Let me describe the furniture and arrangement of the ladies' waiting-room on the down platform on the 23rd ultimo. A dirty table—punkah without rope to pull it by—a chair in broken pieces in one corner—one, the cane of which was nearly entirely burst out—(I can find no other suitable expression)—and one, the cane whole, but arm and back broken! The state or nature of the furniture of the bath-room cannot be described in a public journal. Surely a thriving company like the E. I. Railway could afford a female servant at such stations as Howrah, Burdwan, Rampore Ghaut, &c., to keep the ladies' waiting-rooms in decent order. The station masters or their assistants should be compelled to ascertain that the rooms, conveniences, &c. &c., are clean before the arrival of each train, and to see that proper lights are supplied at night. The carriages are kept a little cleaner than they used to be, and the energetic traffic manager and the superintendent of the carriage department deserve all praise, but the station masters require stirring up."

PORTRAITS OF THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES FOR INDIA.

BRITISH loyalty has not shone forth quite so conspicuously or in quite so substantial a form in reference to the marriage of the Prince and Princess of Wales as was naturally to be expected from our countrymen in India, who have always been eminently distinguished for sound patriotic feeling and for unbounded liberality in money matters. We hear nothing now of what is to be done with the Punjab, Delhi, and Benares subscriptions, which are at all events not very remarkable in amount, and so small a sum has been collected in the City of Palaces that the subscribers hardly know what to do with it. There are about some fifteen or sixteen thousand rupees lying there for presentation to their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, in some elegant and welcome form, if so small a sum can meet the cost of a fitting present to the Royal pair from a land of Barbaric pearl and gold. Perhaps it would be better to offer no present at all than a very poor one. We fear that nothing more costly than a good portrait can be obtained for that money; and after all it is now thought that the best way of laying out the money would be in some respects rather a selfish one—that is, to spend it not on presents to the Prince and Princess, but on portraits of them for the Town-hall of Calcutta. At all events there is now a capital opportunity for the Calcutta subscribers to do something with the money in this way that might, at least, indicate to the people of India how proud Englishmen are of their youthful Prince and Princess, and the Natives themselves would be gratified to see the full-sized likenesses of two persons of whom they hear so much fervid commendation from their British fellow-subjects.

Mr. Theodore Jensen is a Danish artist of high repute. Having resigned his office of Court painter to his late Majesty Frederick of Denmark, he came to England, and was introduced to the Royal pair by Prince Christian, father of the Princess of Wales. The painter solicited the Prince and Princess to sit or rather stand for their full-length portraits. They consented, and a pair of very noble portraits, wonderfully faithful, highly spirited, and artistical is the happy result. The Prince and Princess are delighted with them, and have honoured the artist's studio with a state visit. Her Majesty the Queen ordered them to be sent for inspection to Windsor-castle, and they elicited from her Majesty the warmest approbation. We have seen these pictures ourselves, and are quite ready to add our humble tribute of applause to the gifted artist. He has given his subjects the best and most characteristic expression, and his drawing, colouring, and finish are all most commendable. In spite of the quantity of splendid costume and rich ornamentation, the pictures have nothing glaring in their general effect. On the contrary, the colouring, though fresh and clear, is chaste and solid. We should be very glad to hear that the artist has been commissioned to send them out to India, either for the Town-hall of Calcutta or the Government-house there.

CAPTAIN HUTTON ON THE SILK-WORM IN INDIA.

WE cannot too highly commend the system introduced into India within our own time of printing all official reports of general interest and utility, though we regret that hitherto no selection from the most permanently valuable of these reports has been made in a form more convenient for diffusion all over Europe, and for preservation in private libraries. Amongst the latest of the "Official Papers" printed by the Government of India is a report from Captain Hutton, an observant and experienced naturalist, "On the best method of restoring the silkworm to health." According to this gentleman a panic has prevailed for some years past both in France and Italy and other silk-growing countries with regard to the diseased condition of the species known under the name of Bombyx Mori. In 1859 Captain Hutton entered on a course of experiments to discover some means of checking this progress towards deterioration, and of restoring the insect to its pristine vigour. This is not to be effected, he says, by administering the medicines lately used in France, or even by searching in different countries for less degenerate stocks to cross the worn-out worms of Europe or India. According to Captain Hutton, the worms of every country under Heaven are all equally bad as regards the loss of constitution, and nothing but a radical change, and a reversion of the worm to its pristine condition and colours, will avail to avert the threatened calamity of the gradual loss of this useful insect.

In 1837 Captain Hutton discovered a wild species of the worm (the Bombyx Huttoni of Westwood), on the mulberry trees of the Western Himalaya, yielding a first-rate silk, and the Government commissioned him to do his best to domesticate and turn to account this wild species, but from the impracticable nature of the worm, which can only be reared on trees in the open air, he has not hitherto succeeded. He attributes the deterioration of the common silk-worm to artificial and imperfect feeding, too close confinement in tainted air, and a long course of interbreeding without a single renewal or re-infusion of the original and natural stock from which the race has descended. Captain Hutton entertains the idea that the original colour of the worm was dark, and that the pale, creamy, or yellowish hues are indications of sickness and debility induced by artificial training.

Captain Hutton had observed that occasionally amongst the paler coloured worms a dark grey or brindled worm was seen, and that these were invariably stronger than their more sickly-hued brethren. He thought that this looked like an effort of nature to revert to its original condition. He determined to assist nature in this struggle, and give her fair play, by selecting all the dark-coloured worms and keeping them separate from the rest. These dark ones in due time spun cocoons and produced moths, which coupling inter se deposited a good stock of eggs. The results were very satisfactory. Captain Hutton reports that—"In the spring of 1863 the eggs obtained in the previous year from the dark stock began to hatch on the 16th of March; and no sign of disease was apparent among them until the moths came forth from the cocoons, when many of these still showed defects in the malformation and dark spotting of the wings. Compared, however, with the previous year, there was decided improvement: the worms showed no disease, and none died; they attained to a larger size by a quarter of an inch; they produced in consequence larger cocoons, and the moths, although still showing the presence of disease, laid good sized eggs, great numbers of which adhered firmly to the paper on which they were deposited, and indeed I have now before me a sheet of paper thickly covered with them, a thing which, although I have paid attention to this subject for the last three-and-twenty years, I never either saw or heard of. The eggs of other species will adhere; but to find those of Bombyx Mori doing so is truly a novelty which betokens decided progress towards a healthier condition."

In acknowledging the receipt of the report from Captain Hutton, the Governor of the North-Western Provinces states that he has read it "with interest," but, "taking into consideration the magnitude of interests at stake, and the fact that experiments on the largest scale in the breeding and cross-breeding of worms have of late been scientifically carried out in Europe, His Honor (the Hon. Mr. Drummond) is disposed to think that either Captain Hutton's experiments have been anticipated, or that they do not at this stage call for any unusual act on the part of Government." We must say that this is a rather ungracious mode of treating one of our countrymen in India who has devoted much time and his best energies to the advance of science. Captain Hutton speaks from positive knowledge and actual experience. The Hon. Mr. Drummond is only disposed to think this way or that upon the subject, and therefore withholds all encouragement to further exertions to remedy an acknowledged evil. It by no means follows that because certain scientific men in Europe are investigating the subject in question, that no scientific man in India should be encouraged to go and do likewise. It is odd enough that one of the reasons adduced against the encouragement of a scientific man's exertions is "the magnitude of interests at stake." The vulgar would imagine that this should afford the strongest argument in his favour. The local information which Captain Hutton might communicate to Europe respecting the habits and constitution of the silk-worm in India would be a matter of great interest to all naturalists. This may be gathered from the fact that persons have been despatched from Europe to the Northern Provinces of India to investigate the condition of the silk-worm there. The Delhi Gazette states that a Dr. Orio has been deputed by the Italian Government to inquire into the condition of the silk-worm in Cashmere, and was so satisfied of the superior state of a certain species of the worms he had found there that he had purchased 26,000 ounces of the eggs, and is now on his way with them to Europe. If this be the case, we hope Captain Hutton will be able to avail himself of the same advantage, and turn it, perhaps, to still better account than Dr. Orio is likely to do with his inferior oriental experience.

LIEUT.-COLONEL CRAWLEY'S DEFENCE.

FOR the twentieth time the Court-martial at Aldershot assembled on Thursday last, under the presidency of General Sir G. A. Wetherall, K.C.B. On this occasion Colonel Crawley read his written defence. The report of it in one of the daily papers occupies no less than fifteen and a-half long and closely printed columns. It took exactly three hours in the delivery. Its extreme length precludes the possibility of our publishing it entire, for its insertion would throw out nearly all other matter. The daily press, when Parliament is not sitting, can sometimes meet such extraordinary demands upon their space; but weekly papers would be fairly swamped by them. We must content ourselves with a very brief summary of the main points of the prisoner's defence, which we cannot doubt will soon form a portion of a separate and pretty bulky pamphlet of considerable historical interest. As we have said before, let the issue of this long, and important, and costly trial be what it may, it will at least serve to show how jealous is this free nation of everything that bears the aspect of tyranny and oppression, so that the humblest individual in the land need not despair of justice, in spite of all the influence and power of men in high places. It will show, too, the irresistible potency of the Fourth Estate, which is, indeed, virtually the First Estate, when regarded as the representative of public opinion. Colonel Crawley's defence exhibits great natural eloquence and ability, but he has not done well to introduce into it an intemperate attack upon the press, to which he really owes the opportunity that has been afforded to him of proving that at least a very large portion of the prejudice against him was due to the most exaggerated rumours and, indeed, the most outrageous falsehoods. If the press helped to circulate still more extensively the calumnious reports already spread through every social circle in British India, and through all ranks of the army there, it has also provided an ample remedy for the evil. Colonel Crawley speaks of certain members of the press as "the self-constituted social hangmen, who execute their unlovely office without the formality of a trial or the sanction of a sentence—men who from a jealous and an envious temperament of mind seem to have a natural and incurable dislike to everything and everybody that is anywhere placed in authority." He thinks that the aim of these writers is the destruction of all military discipline, and that he himself is neither the first nor to be the last victim of a system of detraction which seeks, by the ruin of individual reputation, to accomplish a scheme for the transfer of the control of the British army from the authority of the Crown to a self-appointed board of anonymous writers. This is a wild delusion, and quite out of keeping with the sound sense and sagacity which mark the general character of his long speech. The whole press of England appreciates the value of military discipline and the character of our noble army too thoroughly to entertain any such preposterous ideas or intentions as those attributed to a portion of it by the gallant Colonel, who ought to remember, if he has smarted under erroneous misrepresentations, that the press of England can have no personal animosity towards a man who is individually a stranger to almost every member of it—that it does not pretend to infallibility—that if it were to suppress every complaint until it was positively proved to be well founded innumerable cases of oppression and injustice would be excluded from all chance of remedy; and that all that the press pretends to is the presentation of an open arena on which all parties may have fair play. We are certain that every man labouring under a load of odium and suspicion, and conscious of perfect innocence, must heartily rejoice in the unspeakable blessing of a free press. It is the guilty only that hate the light of free discussion, and we feel assured that Colonel Crawley himself will have reason to thank his stars that the free press of England wrung from the British Government the privilege for an accused man of a fair and open trial.

The Prisoner opened the proceedings for the defence by reading the copy of an address which he had himself delivered to the officers of his regiment on the 2nd of March, 1863, in which he earnestly endeavoured to restore a cordial, good understanding amongst them, disclaimed the slightest personal ill-will to any officer in the regiment, and entreated them all to consider that there were no longer two parties in the regiment, for and against himself, and not to harbour the idea that any hasty word of his on parade or on duty was prompted by personal feeling. He then showed by extracts from the books of the regiment that a smaller number of courts-martial had taken place in the regiment in his time than in the preceding period. He commenced his written defence by observing that, instead of this day being one of bitter humiliation and unmixed regret, it was the prospect of being able to stand up and defend himself so fully in the presence of men of honour that had afforded him for many dreary months the truest consolation. He pleads at last, he says, before a tribunal which knows by habit what are the duties of an officer, and by instinct what are the feelings of a gentleman. He complains, indeed, as he had done in other stages of the trial, that the charges did not take a wider range, so that he might have defended himself on many other points than those to which he is confined. The public, however, will be satisfied if the Colonel clears himself from the charges of extreme cruelty and oppression towards Sergeant-major Lilley and his wife. This was the chief point upon which the public indignation against himself had been excited. He disclaimed all personal vindictiveness and individual malice. He had strictly done his duty under the orders of his superiors. If he owed a grudge to Sergeant-major Lilley, did General

Farrell, he asked, did Sir W. Mansfield, did Sir Hugh Rose share so wicked and despicable a sentiment? If his, the Colonel's, conduct was harsh, tyrannical and oppressive towards the sergeants, did those epithets apply to the high authority under whom he acted? If so, why were they not standing at the bar of the same tribunal? He had nothing to say against those commanders. "Fortunate are the officers who have the honour to serve under such chiefs, and fatal would be the day when the British army has to look to any other source for judgment on its acts than the censure or approval of its military superiors." His regiment, he observes, was in a dangerous state. It demanded severe measures. The question which lay at the root of the whole matter is that of mutiny or no mutiny. The propriety and justice of the close arrest was admitted, and it was his duty to see that that close arrest was carried out properly and completely. Close arrest is necessarily a hardship, but if the prisoner's health suffered, the medical officers were in possession of almost supreme power to mitigate the injury. Married men were not entitled to be treated less severely than single men; but he had never meant that any part of the punishment on Sergeant-major Lilley should extend to the inconvenience of his wife, as far as that could be avoided. If any complaint from her had reached him it would have been most promptly attended to, but no orderly officer, no sentry, no medical man had brought him a single complaint of the slightest inconvenience having been suffered by Mrs. Lilley, whom the Colonel and his wife had often visited in her illness, and who was one of the best of women. If the Colonel had really treated this woman in the way that rumour represented, would he not have been the object of utter detestation to every genial hearted man in the regiment? "There is not—I know there is not"—said the prisoner—"a commanding officer now within the four walls of this courthouse who does not envy the colonel of the 6th Dragoons the troops he has the honour to command. Forgive me, sir! You have heard in evidence the feelings which those troops exhibited at Mhow towards their disgraced and dishonoured chief. Forgive me if now that that dishonour is wiped out, and that disgrace is about to be reversed, I permit myself to express what I feel to the soldiers whom I love and by whom I am beloved. Sir, do you suppose those fine fellows did not think the suggestion of indignity to Mrs. Lilley an imputation on their honour no less than mine? Is there any man here present, after what he has heard in this room, who would not trust the charge of a sick and suffering woman to the manly good sense and the high bred feelings of the youngest private of the 6th Dragoons, rather than he would leave it to the tender mercies or the delicacy of Mr. Fitzsimon? What sergeant, what corporal, what private of the Inniskillings, was capable of placing on the orders he received the odious and indecent interpretation which these officers have endeavoured to fix upon them? Where is the sentry who was within two feet of Mrs. Lilley's bed? Why have the prosecution not produced him? They could not find him, because he never existed." Sergeant-major Lilley, the Colonel thought, had been made a tool by others more cunning than himself. An attempt had been made to injure the prisoner by accumulating testimony in favour of Lilley; but had the man been the most perfect of created beings, and yet on the occasion in question acted insubordinately, it was the commanding officer's duty to punish him for it. The better man, the worse example, and therefore the more necessary the punishment. If the medical men thought the close arrest too severe with reference to the health of the patient, why did they not interfere in his lifetime, and not wait to make capital of his dead body—of a post mortem examination—reserving all their sympathy for the victim of oppression till too late an hour? If Lilley's assertion at the Mhow Court-martial that the sentry was placed within two feet of the wife's sick bed had been true, whose fault would it have been? Not the prisoner's—he had given no orders to that effect. With respect to Lieut. Fitzsimon's evidence, the Court had not only heard but seen what its nature was. Ought any man's reputation to suffer from such testimony? The prisoner closed his defence in the following words:—

"My enemies' name is legion, but against such defence their malignity was impotent for harm. They have sought my shame, and they have accomplished their own. They have attempted my ruin. I will not deny them the satisfaction of knowing that they will have partly succeeded. The cost of this tremendous struggle will have exhausted that slender fortune which is the only provision of those who are dearer to me than myself. Sir, let them enjoy their triumph. It is the only one they will obtain. They may have ruined my fortune, my reputation is beyond their reach. They have silted from me what is but trash; it will be for you to give me back that without which I am poor indeed. My part is done; yours yet remains. I know what your sentence must be, because it will be in accordance with the evidence and according to the truth. I cannot hope that you will in every detail consider my conduct faultless. I cannot expect that in the long course of these trying events you may not discover in my behaviour, under unexampled difficulties, some errors of judgment and some defects of temper. I can only say, let those who are without such sins cast at me the first stone. But of these grave and serious charges I know you must absolve me, for I know I am innocent of them. You will give me back my character; you will give me back my sword—a sword which has been for thirty years—ay, and which shall be again—at the service of a nation at whose hands, in the language of the charge, I have suffered 'great and grievous hardships.' You will redeem what remains to me of life from dishonour, and you will rescue my memory from disgrace. Sir, I await the sentence of the Court."

The prisoner, at the conclusion of the defence, was greeted with loud cheering. In the course of his defence Colonel Crawley made eloquent use of the fact that Mrs. Lilley, in her letter to her sister and brother, announcing the loss of her husband, makes no allusion whatever to any harsh treatment towards him as the cause of his death. Here is the letter:—

"My dear Sister and Brother,—This is, indeed, a painful moment—a task I never expected to have to tell you. My beloved husband is no more. He died of apoplexy on the morning of the 25th of May. It was so sudden; he was tolerably well the day before. Dear sister, in mercy go to our father and mother; I cannot write to them. The blow will be too much for them. I am staying with Sergeant-major Cotton and Mrs. Cotton. I was to have gone into hospital, but doctor says I shall not last long, so I don't think I shall be removed before anything happens. I cannot write any more. I cannot sit up. My best love. Your loving and affectionate sister,
"Mhow, June 7." "CLARISSA LILLEY."

About thirty witnesses of military rank and high position were now called, and spoke in the warmest possible terms of Colonel Crawley's professional knowledge and ability as a soldier, and of his excellent personal qualities.

Sir A. Horsford was prepared to commence his reply on the next day, Friday, the 18th of December.

On Friday, the 21st day, the Court again met to hear the reply of the official prosecutor. The prosecutor at once admitted that the case against the prisoner had been attended with gross mis-statements and exaggerations. It was strange, said the prosecutor, that Sir William Mansfield, who had said, "It did not appear, as shown by the documents sent to him, that there were any sufficient grounds for bringing the three sergeant-majors to trial for conspiracy," should have sanctioned the arrest, and told them not to relieve them until the close of the court-martial. Sir A. Horsford maintained that the arrest was unnecessarily severe against Sergeant Lilley, especially as he had not, like one of the other prisoners, been guilty of threats of violence. Mr. Smales, he contended, had a perfect right to communicate with Sergeant-major Lilley as one of his witnesses. The real object of the close arrest seems to have been to embarrass Smales, and to nullify as much as possible the testimony of the sergeant against Colonel Crawley. This interference with the evidence—this prohibition of all communication, verbal or written, between Smales and his witnesses was absolutely illegal. Sir William Mansfield had ordered simple arrest, not close arrest, and strangely enough, as his Excellency did not think there were grounds for a charge of conspiracy, the sergeant was under arrest on no specific charge at all. Sir Hugh Rose had not arrived at a full knowledge of the truth of the whole case. This was his misfortune—this was how he was misled. If it had not been for this justice would have been done in India. Supposing that Lilley had indulged in drink, does it tell in favour of the prisoner that a soldier of a general character for sobriety was driven by harsh treatment, and misery, and despair, into excesses not natural to him? The prisoner must have known that the charge of conspiracy could never be proved against Sergeant-major Lilley. Why, then, treat him with such prolonged severity if he had no personal malice against him? After the conclusion of this address Colonel Horsford was also applauded by the assembly as Colonel Crawley had been, so that both sides seem to have had their partisans present. Colonel Crawley called the attention of the President to what he called the erroneous statement of the Prosecutor, that Sir W. Mansfield stated there was no evidence to justify the arrest of the prisoners. The President said that the prisoner's remark should be borne in mind, and that the Court would now proceed to consider its decision. The Court was cleared, and sat with closed doors. The decision will be sent to Headquarters before it is generally promulgated.

THE CRAWLEY CASE.

The following additional documents respecting this case have been sent to the daily papers since the case for the defence was closed:—

CASE OF THE LATE SERGEANT-MAJOR LILLEY, 6TH INNISKILLING DRAGOONS.
Simla, June 3, 1863.

Last Tuesday, by direction of his Excellency, Captain Elton delivered to me the accompanying papers—viz., compilation A to K, by his Excellency Sir William Mansfield in the case of the late Paymaster Smales, 6th Inniskilling Dragoons.

I have paid particular attention to these papers as far as they relate to the late Sergeant-major Lilley, and I am of opinion that there was clear and abundant evidence in which Sergeant-major Lilley might have been convicted by a court-martial, not only of having himself disobeyed the orders of his commanding officer publicly given at the court-martial, but of having connived and concerted with other non-commissioned officers of the regiment, to which he, as the senior sergeant, was bound to set an example of obedience, to disobey these distinct and positive orders, which prohibited making public the proceedings of the court-martial.

The admission of the sergeant-major shows his guilt.

The evidence of the other sergeants referred to in compilation C would, I should say, not only have insured conviction of this disobedience, and still worse, combined disobedience of orders by the sergeant-majors, but also of his having—in furtherance of his open hostility against Colonel Crawley—uttered violent and beastly language regarding him in presence of other sergeants, thus increasing the ill-feeling already existing in the regiment against the commanding officer.

Although the admission of each of these sergeants would not, in the construction of the Judge Advocate-General of the Bombay army, have been legitimate evidence against themselves, because the admissions were not received under the usual caution, there can be no doubt, I should say, that these admissions were excellent evidence against them, and, therefore, against Sergeant-major Lilley, and I could not say that, in my opinion, the admission of Sergeant-major Lilley was not evidence against himself; for I think it fairly comes under the head of voluntary confession.

GEO. H. HATCH, Judge Advocate-General.
To his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

CASE OF SERGEANT-MAJOR LILLEY, TROOP SERGEANT-MAJORS WAKEFIELD AND DUVAL, 6TH INNISKILLING DRAGOONS.

(Referred by endorsement No. 4,612e, July 7. Received July 8.)

Judge-Advocate-General's Office,
Headquarters, Simla, July 10.

1. In reply to the question put, "Whether under the peculiar circumstances of the case" the arrest of Regimental Sergeant-major Lilley, and Troop Sergeant-majors Wakefield and Duval "was regular or not," I have the honour to state my opinion that their arrest was perfectly regular, as far as Lieutenant-Colonel Crawley is concerned.

2. In his letter of the 7th of June, 1863, to the Assistant-adjutant-general of the Mhow division, Colonel Crawley said:—"I distinctly informed all three of them that I placed them in arrest on a charge of conspiracy against me and my authority as their commanding officer."

In the same letter Colonel Crawley also says "they were aware of the crime with which they were charged by me."

3. Colonel Crawley, on the 26th of April, 1862, reported to the Major-general commanding the Mhow division as follows:—

"I have placed Regimental Sergeant-major Lilley and Troop-sergeant-majors Wakefield and Duval under arrest, on a charge of conspiracy against me, their commanding officer."

Colonel Crawley in the same letter requested sanction for their "close arrest" for reasons stated by him, which request was granted.

4. It thus appears that Colonel Crawley made a specific charge against these non-commissioned officers, so soon as their misconduct was brought to his notice, and himself informed them of the precise charge against them at the time of their arrest.

5. The evidence of the misconduct of these non-commissioned officers, as disclosed in other official communications, was sufficient, in my opinion, as I have elsewhere stated, to justify him in placing them in arrest, and I have also stated my opinion that a charge against Sergeant-major Lilley for disobedience of orders and encouraging other non-commissioned officers to disobey orders could have been proved, with almost a certainty.

6. As to the continuance and mode of the arrest, and the ultimate release without trial, whether there was or was not any irregularity in these respects appears to me a point in which Colonel Crawley is not concerned. When he had received the orders of the general officer commanding the division for the close arrest of these non-commissioned officers, and when this case was referred to the Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay army, any legal responsibility, if there was any, was shifted from Colonel Crawley to his superiors. Having placed the case in the hands of superior authority, Colonel Crawley had not even the power to release these non-commissioned officers from arrest, nor to abandon the charges which he had preferred.

7. Colonel Crawley never did abandon these charges, but the non-commissioned officers remained in arrest under the orders of the Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay army, who, as it appears to me, under a misconception of the legal value of the evidence, ordered their release without trial, and punished them only with a reprimand.

8. In the correspondence submitted, the question is raised whether these non-commissioned officers ought not to have been charged in the guard report with a specific crime. I am unable to say what the general custom of the service is in this respect. It is stated by Colonel Crawley that it is not the custom in the 6th Inniskilling Dragoons to account for non-commissioned officers in arrest in the regimental guard report. This appears to me to be very reasonable, because non-commissioned officers are, by the rules of the service, placed in arrest, and not confined in any guard.

9. In conclusion, I would state my opinion that neither custom, regulation, nor any article of war has been in any way infringed by Colonel Crawley as regards the arrest of these non-commissioned officers.

Geo. H. HATCH, Colonel, Judge Advocate-Gen.
To the Adjutant-General.

Head-quarters, Simla, April 16, 1863.

Sir,—I have the honour to enclose, for submission to his Royal Highness the Field-marshal Commanding-in-Chief, two memoranda, marked A (January 7, 1863), and B (February 15, 1863), from Lieutenant-general Sir W. Mansfield, K.C.B., Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay army.

With reference to the first of these documents, memorandum A, I have only to say, with the greatest deference, that Sir William Mansfield, in addition to the proof which he has already furnished that the non-commissioned officers of the Inniskilling Dragoons alluded to in the memorandum were engaged in a cabal against their commanding officer, now again, in the enclosed memorandum, states as follows:—"Nevertheless, the matter which had been elicited showed sufficiently that these non-commissioned officers were engaged in a cabal against their commanding officer, to make use of the opportunity afforded by Mr. Smales's court-martial to injure him."

I beg to observe that these non-commissioned officers were guilty, as proved by the best of all evidence, their own admissions, of caballing against their commanding officer; but that they could not be tried on this charge (and I do not know a more serious one than the caballing of non-commissioned officers against their commanding officer), because their own admissions, which proved their guilt, had been made by them without due cautions having been given that those admissions might be adduced against them.

Independently of the evidence in proof of the cabal of the non-commissioned officers contained in the compilation already forwarded to the Horse Guards, I beg with profound respect to refer to the sworn evidence of the deceased Sergeant-major Lilley and of Troop-sergeant-major Wakefield given at the trial, which proves that these non-commissioned officers and others, in wilful defiance of the orders of the Court, were in possession of, reading and communicating to one another, the defence of Paymaster Smales—a most insubordinate and improper one—before it had been published, Paymaster Smales having been brought to trial for a most serious military crime against his commanding officer, for which he was afterwards cashiered.

To make their conduct more culpable, they received a copy of this defence from the prisoner, the late Paymaster Smales.

I have, &c.,
H. ROSE, General Commander-in-Chief in India.
The Adjutant-General of the Forces,
Horse Guards, London.

THE COURT-MARTIAL UPON COLONEL CRAWLEY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—In Sir Hugh Rose's letter published in the report of Wednesday's proceedings of the court-martial at Aldershot I find the following passage:—

"I cannot conclude this letter without earnestly soliciting the attention of his Royal Highness to the remarkable circumstance stated by Mr. Fortescue in the House of Commons:—That he had drawn these facts (his accusations against the military authorities in India) from documents placed in the hands of the military authorities, and he might also state that he knew every word he uttered might be fully proved from the evidence of witnesses now in that House."

This sentence, with the exception of the word "also," substituted for "almost," is correctly quoted from the Times' report of the debate. By some slight mistake, however, in the report itself I am made to use the expression, "witnesses now in that House," instead of "now in this country," which was what I really did say.

I noticed at the time the inaccuracy in the report, but considered it too unimportant to be worth correcting. This, from the construction put upon it by Sir Hugh Rose, I now regret, and I shall feel obliged by your affording me the opportunity of rectifying the omission.

It would be obviously improper for me at the present moment to enter upon the general question of the accuracy of my statement, but I shall be fully prepared at a fitting time to maintain it, should I see occasion hereafter to do so.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

D. F. FORTESCUE.

Summerville, Waterford, Dec. 11.

SANDHURST COMMISSION DAY.

On Saturday, the 12th inst., his Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, accompanied by his Royal Highness the Prince of Prussia, and attended by a brilliant staff, made his usual half-yearly inspection of the Royal Military College at Sandhurst.

His Royal Highness left London early, and, after breakfasting at the house of the Governor, Sir H. Jones, arrived upon the parade ground at 10 A.M., where the cadets, now numbering three complete companies, were marched past in slow and quick time, and then put through some of the usual evolutions, to the great satisfaction of a large assemblage of visitors. The day was one of remarkable fineness and warmth for an English December, and the college grounds, long noted for their picturesque beauty, have seldom shown to greater advantage.

After about an hour's drill, conducted by the senior under-officers, the cadets were formed into a hollow square, and the report of the Council of Military Education on the term just closed was read, with the remarks of the public examiners in the various branches, and the names of the successful competitors for free commissions. The report was on the whole extremely satisfactory.

THE COUNTESS OF ELGIN.—We understand the Countess of Elgin and children, who were with her ladyship on the demise of her lamented husband, remained until after the interment on the 22nd of November. Instead of the countess going to Calcutta, it was arranged that she should proceed by way of Bombay to England, and her ladyship and family will consequently arrive in this country early in January.

THE ASSAM TEA COMPANY.—The directors of the Assam Tea Company have announced a bonus of £1 per share out of the amount received from the sale of the company's plantation at Cachar. A full explanation will be given at the next general meeting why the board have thought it desirable to retain a part of the purchase-money, in order to form a working capital for the annually increasing business of the company.

His Royal Highness then addressed the cadets in a few well-chosen words, referring especially to the high report of their general conduct received from the Governor, Sir Harry Jones, and to the necessity of their maintaining their present attention to discipline and order, these being, at least, as great essentials to their success in their future career as their progress in study. He further expressed his regret that the number of free commissions (one to four competitors) in his power to bestow was so limited, while so many appeared deserving.

The parade being dismissed, the Royal visitors inspected the riding school and gymnasium, and watched the exercises in each. The latter is a recent addition to the college; and the Duke of Cambridge, in a part of his address, took occasion to strongly commend its regular use by the whole of the cadets.

The illustrious party then proceeded to the Staff College, about a mile distant. Here they were entertained at luncheon by the Commandant, Colonel Napier, and the officers. Here also the report had to be read; and it appeared that none of the officers about to leave had failed to complete the course prescribed, except in one case, accounted for by illness. Lieutenant Hozier, of the 2nd Life Guards, had passed a remarkably brilliant examination, and stood at the head of the list.

The Royal party left Sandhurst at 2.30 P.M. to return to London.

Cadets Cooke and Reynolds being entitled to commissions as being Indian cadets by qualification, it follows that the real number of competitive commissions given in this list is only 32. Several other gentlemen qualified for commissions as Queen's or Indian cadets by obtaining the stipulated number of marks. There is also a large list of those (all above 1,500 marks) who are qualified by purchase, but many of them return to compete once more.

EXAMINATIONS FOR DIRECT COMMISSIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—Permit me to trespass on your valuable space with regard to the examination for direct commissions in the army.

It is stated in the official memorandum that examinations would be held at least every three months, and that due notice of them would be given. The last examination took place in the beginning of August, and since that time no intimation has been given with regard to the next. This is quite an unprecedented occurrence, as up to the present time the date of examination has always been fixed a short time after the preceding one. I need not enlarge on the great inconvenience and discomfort caused to many of those whose names are on the list for examination.

It is a most unwarranted delay on the part of the authorities at the Horse Guards. However, I feel sure that the subject only requires to be brought under your notice to obtain a speedy redress.—Yours faithfully,

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE CRAWLEY COURT-MARTIAL.—We believe that the result of the court-martial at Aldershot is likely to be made known almost immediately. Generally speaking, in cases where the proceedings are protracted and the evidence voluminous, a period of some weeks between the decision and its promulgation is necessary to enable the Judge Advocate-General to review the whole, with the object of determining the legal validity of the trial. But in the present instance the constant and careful attention given to the case by Mr. Headlam will serve to prevent any such delay. The finding was formally completed yesterday; it will be at once submitted for her Majesty's approval, and very probably it will be publicly announced in the course of a day or two.—Globe.

MARRIAGE OF CANON STANLEY.—The marriage of the Rev. Professor Stanley, D.D., late Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford, the Dean of Westminster (nominate), with the Lady Augusta Frederica Elizabeth Bruce, daughter of the late Thomas, seventh Earl of Elgin, and sister to the late Governor-General of India, took place yesterday (Tuesday) afternoon in Westminster Abbey, by special license. In consequence of the very recent decease of Lord Elgin, the wedding was strictly private, no invitations having, as we understand, been issued, beyond the immediate families of the bride and bridegroom. A large number of the friends and relatives had, however, assembled to witness the ceremony, and completely filled the choir. The service was most impressively read by the Dean of Christ Church, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Haden, the Proctor of the Abbey. After the conclusion of the ceremony, the "Hallelujah Chorus" was performed on the organ by Mr. Turlie. The Lady Augusta was formerly Lady in Waiting to her late Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, and has been since and up to the present time "Resident Bed-chamber Woman" to her Majesty the Queen.

DIRECT COMMISSIONS.—A Horse-guards' memorandum of the 10th inst. announces that the next examination for direct commissions will take place at Chelsea Hospital on Monday, February 1, 1864.

THE COUNCIL OF INDIA.—India-office, Dec. 14.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Sir George Russell Clerk, K.C.B., K.S.I., to be a member of the Council of India.

EXPORT OF ARMS, &c., FROM SINGAPORE.—A memorial was recently forwarded to Sir Charles Wood from the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, calling his attention to the restrictions imposed by the Indian authorities on the export of arms and military stores from Singapore. The Chamber have received an answer, saying that her Majesty's Government have informed the Governor of the Straits Settlements that as long as precautions are taken to prevent the arms from finding their way into the hands of the Chinese rebels, they are willing to leave the regulation of the local trade in the hands of Colonel Cavanagh.

BILLS ON INDIA.—The biddings for 40,00,000 rupees (£400,000), in bills on India took place on the 16th inst. at the Bank of England. The following are the official particulars:—The proportions allotted were—to Calcutta, 21,00,000 rupees; to Bombay, 17,00,000 rupees; and to Madras, 2,00,000. The minimum price declared was, as before, 1s. 11½d. per rupee on Calcutta and Madras, and 1s. 11½d. on Bombay. The applications within the limits amounted to 124 lacs. Tenders on Calcutta at 1s. 11½d. will receive about 9 per cent.; on Bombay at 2s. 0½d. will receive in full, and nothing will be allotted below that rate; and on Madras at 1s. 11½d. will receive about 60 per cent.

STAFF APPOINTMENTS.—On Saturday last twelve more officers from the Staff College had completed with success their studies for the staff. We would ask, after their being attached to the two branches of the service to which each officer respectively does not actually belong, what prospect there is of their being employed? At present there are still several officers who left the college in December, 1861, who have not yet been employed; and of these some passed out better than their more lucky fellow-students, who have been able to get on the staff. Of the officers who left in December, 1862, not one, as yet, has found employment. What chance is there, then, for those of 1863? We are afraid but a very poor one. We give every credit to the authorities for having latterly filled up vacant staff appointments by appointing officers from the Staff College, and also for resisting undue pressure when any such attempt has been made on the part of the friends of unqualified candidates who have strong claims founded on service. We would still ask, why are not staff appointments filled up at once, when vacant, by the first qualified candidate on the list? Why should a hesitating uncertain course be encouraged, whereby nothing but disappointment and heart-burnings result? Colonel Havelock's and Captain Godman's appointments are only temporarily filled. What is the reason for this delay? Let the rewarding of merit be the first object; and when this is done, and not before, successful Staff College students will receive their due.—Army and Navy Gazette.

DESPATCH OF THE CHINA, CALCUTTA, AND AUSTRALIAN MAILS.—SOUTHAMPTON, Dec. 20.—The Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamship Poonah, Captain Sparkes, sailed hence this morning with the mails for Gibraltar, the Mediterranean, Egypt, Aden, Ceylon, India (except Bombay), China, Mauritius, Australia, and New Zealand, together with sixty-first and thirty-five second class passengers. The Poonah took out on freight 436 boxes specie, value £137,026. 2s. 6d. for the following ports, viz.: Ceylon—Gold coin, £170; watches, £80. Madras—Bar silver, £900, gold coin, £1,359; silver coin, 7s. 6d.; pearls; gold thread, &c., £2,208. Calcutta—Bar silver, £27,000; gold coin, £845; medals, watches, &c., £6,672. Penang—Dollars, £10,160. Singapore—Watches and jewellery, £398. Hong Kong—Dollars, £11,195; watches and jewellery, £574. 15s. Shanghai—Dollars, £42,860; watches, jewellery, &c., £410. King George's Sound—Watches and jewellery, £102. Melbourne—Jewellery, &c., £100. Hobson's Bay—Jewellery, £2,120. Sydney—Jewellery, &c., £1,153. Mauritius—Gold coin, £17,000; and for Alexandria—Sovereigns, £11,800; watches, &c., £180. The Poonah also took out a full cargo of general merchandise.

INDIAN TROPHIES AT WINDSOR.—The late Earl Canning, on the occasion of his last visit to Lucknow, caused two elephants and a kiosk (or summer-house), all of exquisite white marble, to be removed from the Kaiserbagh, for presentation to the Queen. These valuable specimens of sculpture have recently arrived from India, and have been forwarded to Windsor Castle. Her Majesty has directed the elephants to be placed in the Castle garden at Windsor, to which the public is allowed access. The kiosk will, we are informed, be erected in the grounds at Frogmore.

WE have received a copy of the "Royal Insurance Company's Almanack for 1864," neatly bound in cloth, and apparently well stored with useful information. The almanack is interleaved for memoranda. A chronology of fires that have occurred in different years is given. An illustrated frontispiece, presenting medallions of her Majesty Queen Victoria, H.R.H. the late Prince Consort, and their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, faces the title-page.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

INDIA OFFICE, 1st December, 1863.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA
in COUNCIL HEREBY GIVES NOTICE,

That he has received, from the President of the Council of India in Council, a Notification relative to the SALE of the GOVERNMENT TEA PLANTATIONS and FACTORIES in KUMAON and the DEHRAH DHUON, of which a Copy is subjoined.

HERMAN MERIVALE,
Under Secretary of State for India.

The following Tea Plantations and Factories in Kumaon and the Dehra Dhoon are offered for Sale at the upset prices specified. Tenders will be received by William Jameson, Esquire, Superintendent Botanical Gardens, North-Western Provinces, Saharnpore, until 1st October, 1864, and the highest offer above the upset price will be accepted.

1st. Hawulbaugh, in Kumaon, forty-six miles from the plains, and six miles from Almora. The Plantation (including the two small Nurseries, viz., Kuppenna and Lutchmaissur, in the immediate neighbourhood of Almora,) consists of about 100 acres of land planted with tea.

There are on the Estate, three large slated houses, numerous slated offices, a large slated factory, two large slated godowns, a slated barrack for Chinese tea manufacturers, and the stock and block of the factory are complete for tea operations and in working order.

2nd. Ayar Toli, in Kuttipoor, Kumaon, distant about eighty miles from the plains, and about forty miles from Almora.

There are on the Estate, a slated house, a slated factory, and a large slated godown, slated barrack for Chinese tea manufacturers, &c., and the stock and block of the factory are complete for tea operations and in working order.

This Plantation consists of about 1,300 acres of land, of which about 350 acres are planted with tea, 200 acres of cleared land fitted for tea planting, and the remainder covered with pine, &c., forests, the timber of which is well adapted for making tea chests, &c.

The yield of the two estates last season was 14,700 lbs. of tea, and 1,400 maunds of seeds.

The yield this season may be estimated at 17,000 lbs. of tea, and 1,500 maunds of seeds.

These two Estates will be sold in one lot, in fee simple, free of all demands on account of Land Revenue, at an upset price of Rs. 2,00,000 (two lacs of rupees).

A small portion of the Plantation of Ayar Toli, named Bincolie, belonging to the Temple of Nag-nath, will bear an annual rental of Rs. 24 (twenty-four rupees).

This land is leased in perpetuity from the Temple of Nag-nath on this rental.

3rd. Bhurtpoor, in Kumaon, ten miles from the plains, twelve miles from the Sanitarium of Nynce Tal, and thirty miles from Almora.

It is about 1,300 acres in extent, of which about 100 acres are under cultivation with tea. The remainder consists of pine and oak jungle, and barren rocks.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Morlan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.

MR. EPHRAIM MOSELY'S IMPROVEMENT IN THE CONSTRUCTION OF ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES, on an INDIA-RUBBER BASE, are secured by Letters Patent, dated December, 1852, whereby the continual outlay of new teeth is avoided, alterations from the absorption of the gums, or any other cause, being easily remedied, and the first outlay no greater than for ordinary kinds. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted as under:—It consists of one continuous piece of Prepared India-rubber. The Artificial Teeth present an uniformly even surface to the action of the tongue, preventing lodgment of food and all secretions, so much complained of in the present system. No gold or any other metal being required, all springs, wires, and fastenings are wholly unnecessary; sharp edges are avoided, a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity hitherto wholly unattainable, and a fit perfected with the most unerring accuracy, are secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums. The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the prepared india-rubber; and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may be retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being at the same time provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

rank of life, that public opinion proclaims this as one of the most important discoveries of the present age. These Pills require no restraint of diet or confinement during their use, and are certain to prevent the disease attacking any vital part.

EXTRAORDINARY CURE of a COUGH.

—The following letter has been received:—"Nightingale-hall, Edmonton. Dear Sir,—I have recently suffered much from a most violent cough, proceeding from a tickling in my chest, which no remedy, out of many I resorted to, could allay. My head was constantly aching, and my whole frame entirely shaken. Having seen the good effects of your Balm of Aniseed in several members of my family, I purchased a small bottle, and when going to bed at night took a teaspoonful in two tablespoonful of water, just warm. The effect was immediate; it arrested the tickling in my chest, I slept well, and arose perfectly restored in the morning, with the exception of debility, arising from fatigue by incessant coughing for some days previous. My cough entirely left me, and has never returned. Having since heard of a lady in the neighbourhood who for a long time had laboured under a most distressing cough, and who had resorted to every remedy within her knowledge, I sent the remainder of the bottle to her; and that long-standing, obstinate, and (as she thought) incurable cough was perfectly cured.—I am, my dear sir, yours very truly, WM. BOARDS. Esq. Mr. Fios. Powell."
